LONDON, Feb. 26.—The dispatches received yesterday, reporting the reverse to the Ashantee expedition, caused great excitement. The grave fears which were entertained for the safety of Sir Garnet Wolesley's army have, however, been dispelled by the receipt at the war office to-day of the following dispatch, which was immediately furnished to the press and published at noon in extras:

"Coomassie, Feb. 5.—We reached here yesterday, after five day's hard fighting. The troops behaved admirably. Our casualties are under three hundred. The King has left the town, but is close by. He promised to visit me to-day and sign a treaty of peace. We hope to start on our return to the coast to-morrow. The wounded are recovering, and the health of the remainder of the army is good. WOLESLEY."

LONDON, Feb. 28.—Advices from the Gold Coast represent that up to the twenty-ninth of January it was doubtful whether the Ashantees want peace or war.

News having been received that a large force of the enemy was collecting in the rear of the British advance, a reconnoissance was made, and this led to the series of battles previously reported, which ended in the capture of Coomassie.

The trial of the Tichborne claimant on charges of perjury committed during the trial for possession of the estate, which has been in progress upward of one hundred and eighty days, was brought to a close this morning, and resulted in the conviction of the accused. The jury, after being out a brief while, brought in a verdict of guilty of the charges, and the claimant was sentenced to fourteen years of penal servitude. There is great excitement over the verdict, and extras announcing it have been issued by the papers.

Death of Emile Cook.

Another name is to be added to the mournful record of the dead, from among the delegates to the Evangelical Alliance and the passengers by the Ville du Havre. Rev. Emile Cook, of Paris, was left on board the Loch Earn with Rev. N. Weiss, who was so fearfully injured that he required constant care, and Mr. Cook devoted himself with intense solicitude and watchfulness to his suffering brother. The Loch Earn was found to be in a sinking condition, and they were again rescued by a passing steamer. After great exposure and suffering by sea and land the two brethren at last reached Paris. Mr. Weiss recovered, but Mr. Cook was so exhausted by his faithful service that his friends advised his retirement to the south of France for rest and recuperation. Thither he went and continued to fail, until he died on January 29.

Mr. Cook was a Wesleyan minister, the son of a distinguished preacher of the same connection. He was greatly beloved in private life for his amiable character, and in the church was singularly devoted and useful. As he leaves a large family, without any means of support, we trust that the same provision will be made for them as for the families of Pronier and Carrasco.

The Rev. Mr. Lorriaux related an interesting incident connected with Mr. Cook, in a recent lecture at Boulogne. There were thirty children on board the Ville du Havre. The first Sunday after leaving New York Pastor Cook gathered them together in a Sunday school, and very impressively urged the children immediately to seek their personal salvation. They agreed to meet again on the next Sunday, but before it arrived the catastrophe had occurred, and all the children but one went down with the ship. It is stated by all the survivors that the children exhibited the most touching resignation, one little girl reminding her terrified mother that the sea was the Lord's and he would direct its waves. How much good may have been done to those precious souls by that Sabbath day's labors of the faithful servant of God who has now gone to his rest and reward?—New York Observer.

THE revival in St. Louis, under the labors of Rev. E. P. Hammond, still continues. A correspondent says: "Presbyterians of the Northern and Southern Churches, and of the Old School synod, and Northern and Southern Methodists, and all shades of evangelical Christians, except Episcopalians, have stood up, shoulder to shoulder, for the furtherance of the gospel." Hundreds have recently risen for prayers in Dr. Talmago's church, Brooklyn, New York, and the accessions on profession of faith have been numerous.

LITTLE Switzerland is said to be the only country in Europe where more money is spent on education than on the army. The educational budget is two millions of francs, while the military expenses remain below that sum; yet when needed the little republic can raise an army of two hundred thousand men.

Cuba Libre.

An American citizen, well known here and an old resident of Cuba, engaged in taking off the sugar crops of that island for the last nine years, has just arrived in this city, and reports matters as in a very gloomy condition for the Spanish arms.

The hospitals on the side of the bay opposite Havana are full of the wounded who fell in the battle of ten days ago, and in the Manzanillo engagement. The latter, a sea-coast town, at the southeast extremity of the island, is believed to have been captured by the insurrectos, and to be still held by them. It is supposed to have been so strongly fortified after its capture as to render its recovery by the Spanish forces almost impossible, unless the latter are much more largely increased than the Carlist war now progressing in the home country renders probable.

Our informant, who may be considered one of the most responsible witnesses who has ever visited the island, doubts very strongly whether the planters, who are mostly Spanish by birth or sympathy, will be able to take off another crop of sugar after that now growing, which, he considers, owing to the unfavorable weather, will be only a half crop. The receipts of sugar and molasses are shipped away and disposed of as fast as possible, and the money received therefor deposited in foreign banks or securities.

A general disposition is manifested to send all valuables out of the island. Gold sells at 205. Americans, who have hitherto been largely employed in taking off the crops, have been discharged, or remain unemployed, through unwillingness to receive paper money for their pay, instead of gold; and the machinery of the plantations is mostly run by carpenters and men who have been employed about the mills, and who have in this way picked up some little information as to its workings.

The impression prevails that, after the present crop is disposed of, the freedom which has been given by the Spanish law to all slaves, and which has been enforced in Porto Rico, will be carried out by general agreement between the planters and the government. Should this law be executed, this fact alone will be sufficient to prevent any large production of sugar for the following year.

The demonstration recently mentioned in telegrams against Captain General Jovellar, in his palace, was so formidable that he was forced to concentrate all his forces from the surrounding country about his residence. The mob of volunteers, who had turned out in consequence of an order calling ten per cent. of the volunteers to the field, was so large that passage through the Plaza de Armas, in front of the palace, was interrupted for several hours.

Our informant is firm in the conviction that there is no use for an American to return to the island until its difficulties are settled one way or the other. He also believes that Spain will never be able to put down the rebellion.

Cespedes is rumored at Havana to have been in chief command of Cuban forces since he ceased to be president; and the insurrectos, in all late battles, have been uniformly successful. In the battle, for instance, where the Cuban columns of several thousand men were moving upon Villa Clara, the Spaniards admitted that they were driven back with a loss of one hundred and fifty men; and the popular impression about Havana was that the loss was fully three times that number. The general disagreement between the captain general and the volunteers, it was supposed, would be settled in some way about the first of March—possibly by drawing for entire battalions to go into the field, instead of ten per cent. of the men. On the day of sailing it was said that the quota needed would have to be increased to twenty per cent.—New Orleans Times, February 26.

A RESIDENT BISHOP.—The Northern Methodist Church in this State, says the Pacific Methodist, is feeling the impetus naturally arising from the presence and labors of a resident Bishop. Bishop Peck has thrown himself into the work as a chief pastor, and the result is a forward movement. In this city lately the Howard Street Methodist church raised $14,000 at one collection for the purpose of paying a debt, and improving and adorning its building. Last Sunday, after the sermon by the Bishop, the Central Methodist church raised nearly $16,000 in liquidation of a debt of $20,000.

We cite these facts as bearing on the importance of having a Bishop for the Southern Methodist Church in our midst. We have hardly any doubt that the General Conference will fix the residence of one of our Bishops on this coast, and we look forward to the event with anxious solicitude.

TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME!—We are poor. We have expended all the money we are able to pay in building a house of worship for the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Ozark, Dale county, Alabama, and a debt still hangs over the church, for which the builder threatens to take the house.

We therefore call upon every Methodist who reads this notice to send by letter, to Rev. A. Dowling, pastor Methodist Episcopal Church South, Ozark, Dale county, Alabama, ten cents.

Mission Prize Essay.

Our readers are aware that the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at its meeting in May, 1873, on motion of the secretary of the board, offered a prize of $100 for the best essay, setting forth the principles, facts and obligations of the church in regard to missions. The president, secretary and treasurer were appointed a committee to supervise the publication and circulation of the essay that might gain the prize. Bishop McTyeire, Bishop Keener and the president of the board were appointed the committee of adjudication. At a subsequent meeting of the board, at the request of the two Bishops and the president—their duties interfering with attention to this matter—they were excused from serving on the committee, and Dr. R. A. Young, Dr. R. K. Hargrove and the Rev. J. M. Sharpe (a local preacher in Nashville,) were put in their places. The essays were to be forwarded to the president by January 1, 1874, to be by him handed over to the committee. He received ten manuscripts, with sealed envelopes, indicating their respective authors. Without reading a line of them, or knowing whence they came, the editor put them into the hands of the committee on New Year's day. The committee read them all with great care, and before consultation, separate and apart, decided in favor of a manuscript which, on opening the sealed envelope accompanying it, proved to have been written by our respected co-laborer, Dr. Haygood. We have not yet read a word of it, but we anticipate much pleasure in its perusal, and also in the perusal of others that were commended by the committee. We shall, without delay, put to press the essay which gained the prize. The committee of adjudication read their report to the Board of Missions, February 20, 1874. The report was unanimously adopted, and a vote of thanks was given them by the board for their careful attention to the delicate duty imposed upon them.

The committee recommend the publication of five others of the essays placed in their hands, as they discuss various points connected with the missionary enterprise in a masterly manner. They were written respectively by the Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D., of the Holston Conference, formerly one of our missionaries to China; the Rev. Homer S. Thrall, of the Texas Conference; the Rev. S. P. Anderson, D. D., a missionary of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in port of Spain, Trinidad, South America; the Rev. Beverley W. Bond, of the Baltimore Conference; and the Rev. D. C. Kelley, D. D., of the Tennessee Conference, formerly a missionary to China.

The following is the report of the committee:

"The Board of Missions, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at its annual meeting in May, 1873, offered a prize of $100 for the best essay on missions. On New Year's day, 1874, the committee received ten manuscripts. We have read them carefully, and have agreed to award the prize to the author of the essay containing eighty-three pages, and marked X. Y. Z. On opening the sealed envelopes we find that he is our distinguished friend and brother, the Rev. Atticus G. Haygood, D. D. There are four or five other manuscripts of great merit, which we hope the board will publish, thus making a handsome volume on the subject of missions. Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT A. YOUNG,
R. K. HARGROVE,
J. M. SHARPE,
Committee.

Our Trade.

The following list of Conferences will give some idea of what the preachers are doing toward accepting our $100 proposition. This proposition was accepted without a dissenting voice by all the Annual Conferences before which it was brought. The preachers who have carried out the resolution practically have given a fresh impetus to our business. We sincerely hope that, before the meeting of the General Conference, there will not be a preacher whose name will not be added to the list. We wish to make our report to the General Conference complete.

In the following report we place the Conference at the head of the list from which the largest number of the preachers have sent orders:

Conference.	No.	Conference.	No.
Louisville	79	East Texas	7
Tennessee	76	Western	7
Holston	75	Pacific	6
North Alabama	58	Northwest Texas	6
Memphis	43	Virginia	6
North Carolina	31	Mississippi	5
Kentucky	27	South Georgia	4
North Mississippi	25	West St. Louis	4
Alabama	21	Los Angeles	3
South Carolina	22	Columbia	3
West Virginia	21	Florida	3
Little Rock	15	Illinois	3
Arkansas	13	St. Louis	3
Trinity	12	West Texas	2
White River	12	Indian Mission	1
Missouri	11	Louisiana	1
North Georgia	10	Texas	1

The above exhibit does not fairly present all that the preachers are doing.

The two Conferences in Georgia, and the Florida Conference, are sending their orders to J. W. Burke & Co., because of the greater convenience, while the Illinois and the Conferences in Missouri are patronizing the house in St. Louis; and the Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences are ordering from our house in New Orleans for the same reason. The names of preachers ordering from these houses are not on our list, but will be as soon as they are forwarded to us.

It will, moreover, be seen that the Louisville Conference leads the way. Our proposition was first submitted to that Conference, and it was expected that it would stand in the front. How long it may occupy that proud position we cannot tell, as the Tennessee and Holston Conferences are close behind.

The Baltimore Conference does not yet appear in our list. The session of that Conference will be held in a few days, when they will accept our proposition, and take rank with the most active Conference in the connection.

All Along the Line.

Such a letter as the following is so much more interesting than anything I can write, that I most cheerfully submit it to our readers. The preachers and members of the church have already done much toward relieving our embarrassment, but we hope and feel that the good work is only fairly begun. Only let our proposition meet with general favor, and then the Publishing House, freed from all embarrassment, will fully meet the wants and the wishes of the church. But read the letter:

"REV. A. H. REDFORD, D. D.—Dear Bro.: Yours of February 3 is to hand; and since you agree to let me have any of your merchandise at any time I may order them I here send you $100 by express. To show my interest in your behalf, as agent for us all, I borrow this money to bear my part of the burden of our Publishing House in this its day of need. Very truly, JOSEPH W. POSTON."

Missing Records.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE: I want the books belonging to the Mission Boards of the late Mobile and Montgomery Conferences. They have never been placed in my hands, and it is important that they should be deposited in the archives of the Conference. Will the former treasurers of those bodies hunt them up? There are various other documents of interest and value scattered about through the Conference, in the hands of ministers and others, many of them dust-covered and forgotten. They should not be lost. Brethren, look up all these things—records of the Preachers' Aid Society, Conference journals, and everything else that may possibly be interesting or important, and forward them to me at Demopolis, by express, at my expense. Historical papers, sketches of early ministers, and anything auxiliary to the annals of Methodism in Alabama, will be received and filed for safe keeping.

R. B. CRAWFORD.

DEMOPOLIS, ALA., February 25, 1874.

THE MINUTES OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Preachers and people are anxious about the Conference Minutes. The Minutes of the Alabama Conference, of its last session, are most elegant. The style of arrangement is most satisfactory. For accuracy they are unsurpassed. The secretary deserves the thanks and high esteem of every member of this Conference, and his Minutes are worthy of imitation by all that may follow. No pains nor labor has been spared in getting up and publishing these Minutes. W.

THE noon prayer meetings in Chicago are well attended. On a late Saturday Bishop Choney conducted one, with more than a thousand persons present. A deep and growing interest in nearly all the churches manifested itself during the week of prayer, and meetings in many of them are still continued.

Oregon Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: The productiveness and fertility of the soil is wonderful. Wheat is astonishing in luxuriance, forms one of the chief staples, and yields from twenty to sixty bushels per acre. A failure, even partial, in the crop has not been known since the settlement of the country, about twenty-five years ago. Oats yield sixty to eighty bushels. Barley and buckwheat do finely; also flax. Irish potatoes, five hundred bushels to the acre in many instances. Garden vegetables do well—immense heads of cabbage in the gardens all the winter. Corn does not mature well only in favored localities; okra and red pepper likewise. As to fruits, this is a remarkable country—apples of every variety in the greatest perfection and abundance; pears likewise, with plums, cherries, strawberries, raspberries, gooseberries, etc., all in profusion. And how delicious and wholesome! Instead of ten cents each, as at your fruit stands, for a large and choice apple, fifty cents per bushel at your door, or in the orchard gratis by the wagon load. Wheat commands $1 per bushel delivered at the warehouse on the river or railroad. Oregon wheat has the finest reputation of any grown on the continent. With better commercial facilities, as ocean steamers directly to foreign ports, and not stopping to pay tribute to the proud city at the Golden Gate, more could be realized. This valley needs a port at some point on the Pacific, fifty miles distant, accessible by rail rather than via the Columbia river, which is sometimes blockaded by ice, and does not admit ships of heaviest tonnage to come to Portland, the entrepot and business center. This is evidently a matter of time, enterprise and a little brains.

I am told that one industrious farmer can raise fifteen hundred bushels of grain, besides abundance of hay, potatoes, etc., and keep considerable stock, realizing in some instances $1,000 a year, clear of all expenses. Wheat may be sowed eight months in the year. It is supposed one-third will cover the expense of raising the crop. Field hands command $1 per day and board. Lands sell at from $10 to $30 per acre, according to improvements, proximity to towns, navigation or railroads. Land can be bought by paying a portion down, balance in annual installments, at twelve per cent. interest. Many industrious men are acquiring fine homes in this way. Such is the productiveness of the soil and certainty of the crop that they can readily meet payments. The country is well improved and promises a great future.

As to climate, it has proved since the first of December very variable and evanescent—mostly changes from wet to dry, or vice versa. Two snows have fallen, and each was on the ground a week, and yet it was not severely cold. The thermometer rarely is below freezing. Traveling on horseback was not very uncomfortable, as I tried it about a week every day. The winters are called the wet seasons. There are many bright, spring-like days, and often in one day there are a dozen showers, with intervals of sunshine. You see, then, it is a land of rainbows, constantly reminding us of God's covenant—a "bow in the cloud!" What a picture of poesy and song, and what moral beauty it affords to the pious contemplatist! Mountains, whose summits are covered with perpetual snow, and rainbows whose number and beauty far exceed anything the imagination can picture, present a scene rare and enchanting, and yet are among the commonplace things with us. The child's legend of the "bag of gold to be found at the end of the rainbow" is almost realized, as this is a country of gold and silver currency.

I am now in Independence, spending a few days in protracting the quarterly meeting. Preaching every night to large and serious congregations. Two young men professed justification last night. The prospect is good for an extensive revival. Much opposition, infidelity and skepticism in multiform phases. Plain, earnest preaching of the gospel is telling. It is the "power of God unto salvation." Glory to God for displays of divine power! My own soul exclaims: "O taste and see that the Lord is good!"

Let me have a place in your Christian affections. To be enshrined there is better than a niche in a temple. Let me hear from you. How I would have enjoyed the session of the Louisiana Conference. Send me the Minutes. Affectionately,

T. B. WHITE.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW for January has just come to hand. We have had time to read only the opening article, "Man's Place in the Universe." It is in Dr. Bledsoe's best style—able, suggestive and calculated to stir up thought. We give the table of contents, as follows: 1. Man's Place in the Universe; 2. The Moors in Spain; 3. The Life of Sir David Brewster; 4. The Wonders of the Needle; 5. How and Why I Became a Methodist; 6. The African in the United States; 7. The Hive and the Honey-Bee; 8. The Character of St. Paul; 9. Notices of Books.

ST. NICHOLAS, Scribner's Illustrated magazine for girls and boys, for March, will prove a grand treat to the young people. It is profusely illustrated, and contains a great variety of entertaining and instructive articles.

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1874.

SEVENTY YEARS.

And is this age? There's wrinkles o'er her brow,
And snow has fallen on the nut-brown hair;
The rose is faded too—but where are now
The strain of struggle and the stamp of care?

All gone. Her struggle's past, her care is dead;
Her only labor is to rest and wait.
And need one envy girlhood's restless joy
Who sits and watches elose at heaven's gate?

Where is the love that cheered her youthful days?
Where all the faces that she used to see?
Aye, where the darlings of her later age,
The child that learned to pray beside her knee?

All gone before her. Yet she is content.
Her pleasures now bloom freshly every day.
She's happy when her neighbor's linnet sings,
She's happy when her neighbor's children play.

She grieves (for with no pain there is no peace,)
She grieves o'er sorrows that are not her own.
She used to watch two brothers pass to school—
She sighs to see the elder pass alone!

And thus she sits and waits at heaven's gates;
There's but one thought that ever shades her brow;
She had one son she lost before he died;
Long, long before—but he is hurled now.

Yet, having seen much sorrow and much joy,
She has seen nothing that need breed despair;
So, when she thinks of heaven's golden street,
She hopes to meet her missing darling there!

Letter from Mexico.

BY THE REV. J. T. DAVES.

CITY OF MEXICO, January 23, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: A week has passed since the date of my last. We begin to feel a little settled. We have a comfortable home, centrally located and near our chapel. House-getting and housekeeping in this country is by no means a down-grade affair. I mentioned in my last the peculiar mode of advertising and the difficulties of securing a house after you find it. Our experience with Mexican servants so far is brief, and not particularly pleasant. Communications are made principally by signs and motions. I find but few, if any, understand or practice the pure Spanish pronunciation. Hence one even that can speak a few Spanish words is almost in as great a strait as if he could not say a word. It is amusing to see Mrs. Daves passing to and fro, with her little Spanish book in hand, trying to give orders. We don't complain. We are prepared in mind for any and all straits and difficulties. We gave up home, friends and native soil, as a privilege, to do the work of God. We have faith to believe that he will direct us in all things—that he will turn the leaves of this strange and new book—that the work will be done, because it is his work.

I wish I had the data, that I might give you a bird's-eye view of the work already accomplished by Protestantism. It is something wonderful to the ordinary observer even; though to one looking at it from your standpoint it may seem small. It is a small work comparatively. In the midst of towering cathedrals, the rented halls, chapels and churches seem insignificant. Compared to their immense throngs of superstitious attendants, the Protestant congregations look small indeed. And yet the wonder is that so much has been done, the wonder is that anything has been done. The way is opening. First one and then another manacle is broken. There is evidently a hard, intensely secret struggle going on against this movement to intellectual and religious freedom. Our people must not expect wonders in a day. I am satisfied in this comparative sense the work will be a slow one. These people have a will of their own. They are naturally circumspect, suspicious, shrewd and cautious. They are also largely self-reliant where they break away from old restraints. Teeming masses, in town and country, have ignored the old church. There are thousands of moderate Catholics who have no religious home. There are thousands who have thrown off the corrupt priesthood, and who are in one sense Protestants, and yet who are not, in our sense, Protestants at all. There is, for instance, in this city a large congregation—there may be more—under the guidance of a native, calling themselves Protestants, and I very much doubt whether preacher or people have the first idea of true spiritual religion. And yet they are firm and self-reliant. The Catholic Church became so corrupt that even her own deluded and ignorant masses could no longer consort with her. The inauguration of the new Constitution, guaranteeing freedom of conscience and religious worship, confirmed and settled this breach. They are, if I may so express myself, afloat. They hunger for the true bread of life. They need organization—a leader, a head. They need help, sympathy, life. Your readers must not imagine that the Catholic Church is dead in this country; that priest and people are not at work. They are at work. They are vigilant and watchful. They are as painstaking and laborious as in our own country. Though all Jesuits have been expelled from the country, and the charm broken, though convents and churches have been confiscated, and though the ringing of bells and foolish processions are interdicted, yet Catholicism, with its old spirit muffled and hooded, is still alive and at work. Myriads, firm and unshaken, sincere, bow at her shrines yet. The prestige of the mellow past is with her. And yet, with all this, what I have said above is true. The door stands open for the pure word of God. The change of the past few years is almost without a precedent. The change in public sentiment, even within the past year, since Bishop Keener was here, is great. The work of winning an empire to Christ can and must be done. It can't be done in a day. We may gather many into church organization, and yet they be Christians only in name. We must go down deep for the foundation. While means and men must be furnished to organize churches and preach the gospel, we must look to education as a grand agent of preparation. Schools must be opened and education furnished free of cost. The middle and lower and generally poorer classes are our hope. It must not be forgotten that while unlearned, coarse and rough in appearance and reality that they are strong in their convictions and tenacious of their opinions, that they are naturally jealous and suspicious of foreigners. Our church ought now to have one hundred young men and women at school—if the means could be had, two hundred—in our own country. They would not only be qualified for preachers and teachers, but be deeply imbued with our spirit, customs and manners. Surely we have one hundred colleges and high schools, fifty male and fifty female, that can raise the means in their own communities for the education of an equal number of young men and women for preachers and teachers. I wish, Mr. Editor, you would call special attention to this proposition. I will find the scholars if my brethren will furnish the means. The transportation to New Orleans for each would be about $75 in gold. From thence to various points through the States would be but little additional. The board and clothing, divided between seventy-five or one hundred communities, would be almost nothing. The fact is any boy or girl, young man or woman, could easily pay all such expenses by service during the interim of school hours. One hundred thus educated, thoroughly converted, imbued with our spirit and design, understanding our doctrines and discipline, in love with our usages and customs, would be worth more to the cause of Christ in this country than an out-and-out donation in cash of $100,000. That seems like an extravagant statement. And yet I am short of the mark. The worth cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. Let this be done at once. Do not wait until the one hundred are secured. But if President Andrews, of Centenary, President Johnson, of Whitworth, President Borden, of Homer, President Andrews, of Greensboro, or any one else in charge or not of a college or school can raise at once the necessary money for transportation, have it forwarded. I am deeply in earnest about this matter. In the name of my Master let it be done. My association with highly cultivated and Christian Chinese gentlemen on the steamer from New Orleans to Havana gave me, if possible, a higher appreciation of the value of religious training than I could ever otherwise have obtained.

In addition to the direct influence resulting from this educational scheme, there is another to be added. The best of these people are heady. Their individuality is distinct. They have not capacity to guide, control and direct each other. They are deficient in the organizing faculty, and yet they shrink from the efforts of a superior intellect—from the efforts of the foreigner. The time will come, I hope soon, when we will need assistant superintendents, presiding elders, etc. These preachers educated in the South will be in full sympathy with us in polity, spirit and genius, and will exercise a wonderful influence in acting under our guidance, in controlling the masses. In furtherance of the same noble project of redeeming a kingdom to Christ I would counsel our young men in the ministry, who have in them the true missionary spirit, to begin at once the study of Spanish. We cannot use them now, but they will be wanted after a time. And if they should never be called to this field, a knowledge of the Spanish will do them no harm. Such must not move from impulse, but act from conviction of duty. Having decided this important and necessary point, secure a good Spanish teacher at least long enough to obtain an accurate knowledge of the sound of the letters. This done, and an Ollendorff's Grammar and Reader thoroughly mastered, will prepare for a fair beginning in this field and other Spanish-speaking territories. For we do not propose to stay in this republic alone, but move out and on and on to other fields and other countries.

I am here without a tract. These little messengers preach strongly sometimes. They are silent but swift instruments. They work, as leaven, when their distributers are sleeping. The Presbyterians and Northern Methodists purchase their supplies from the Madrid Publishing House. They are reprints of the London Tract Society. But having the Madrid reprint forms a recommendation to these people. I could supply myself from the same source. May have to do so. Hope not, however. Would much prefer our own publications. Are there not five or ten Southern Methodists who will donate to this field $5,000 in tracts in Spanish? Let me have that amount at once, though it require five thousand of my brethren to make up the amount. Will not the preachers throughout the church call for small donations to such a fund? I hope so. Forward all amounts to Rev. Dr. Redford or Rev. R. J. Harp, stating the specific object for which it was raised.

I would again repeat and deeply impress upon the church that while but little comparatively has been done, and while very large immediate results, in actual numbers converted to God, must not be looked for, yet I regard this by far the most inviting foreign field we have ever entered. The whole heart of the church, not neglecting other points, must enter into this field with us. Not only must she give us the necessary money, and thereby enrich and bless herself, to carry on the work, but she must give us her sympathy and her prayers. Let not a member of the church ever kneel in prayer without making special mention of Mexico. Let the mothers teach their children to pray for Mexico. Oh, ye Southern Methodists, men and women of God, if ye could behold, but for a moment, the teeming thousands of even this city alone, in spiritual darkness and superstition, going down to death, I would have no need to exhort you to prayer.

A press, judiciously managed, would be a power in this city. There would be a great moral force simply in its presence, though not a line of its publication should be read. But it would be read. A spirit of inquiry is abroad. The people are astir. A great change has come upon them. They want light. They cry for bread. Thousands would be reached through the columns of the Mexican Christian Advocate that otherwise would never hear a word of our gospel. Provision must be made for a large gratuitous distribution not only in this city, but all over the republic. Through this medium, eschewing even the shadow of politics, the pure, simple gospel of Christ, not in a spirit of controversy or dogmatism, but in a spirit of love, could be pressed upon the masses. Not only would it have a direct influence here, but, sent to all the churches at home, it would furnish weekly intelligence, and form a link of vital sympathy that nothing else could. Thus moving upon the missionary spirit of the church would produce a reciprocal blessing. In the spirit of the gospel, a church without missionary zeal—without missionary work—is dead while it lives. Let us, then, in the name of our divine Master, arouse to action, seize the opportunity, rise with the demands of the occasion, and bring glory to God's name in the literal capture of a living empire.

Our Northern Methodists, Presbyterians and other brethren are earnestly and zealously at work. They are doing well. I feel the need of a knowledge of the language. It is absolutely necessary to a successful administration of our interests here. I am studying, school-boy style, daily. Oh, how I long to stand up before these people and boldly yet lovingly proclaim the tidings of salvation.

We feel, of course, very much isolated. Our hearts hunger for the companionship of friends and brethren. We left many whose names and memories are precious. We think of them, and, in lower tone than a whisper, call their names, and remember their words and looks of Christian regard. God bless them all. Please remember in much love to our friends, and to the church at large—the church of our heart.

BY REV. LOVICK PIERCE, D. D.

SUNSHINE, February 16, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: I happened yesterday to see in your excellent NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE an article headed "Discipline," written over the fictitious signature of "Looker-On"—a very well-chosen signature, as the sequel proves him to be only a looker-on, and not a looker-in. Upon examination I found the article to be a criticism on an article of mine, which, he says, he saw in your paper (of the fifteenth of January, I suppose.) But what was my surprise when, on reading his critique, I found he was not trying to convict me of anti-disciplinary views, but only of his dissenting views. So, of course, any one differing in their Methodistic policy from him must be guilty of heresy against Methodist polity.

I do not ask a place in your paper for the purpose of engaging in a controversy with my opponent. No, verily, I shall never go into war with any writer who in his onset evinces to me that he is in taste and in spirit an extremist. Such is the evidence before me in my reviewer; as, for instance, in his quotation of what he not very improperly calls my motto. It is as perceptible as the nose in his face that he designs to make all his party believe that I used these cautionary words in the harshest sense in which I could have used them. No evidence can be any clearer, in a case of this sort, that a reviewer's opinion is entitled to no credit than to see that he feels that his success depends on drawing an extreme conclusion from some strong language used by the writer or speaker whose words the reviewer or critic is seeking to inflate with his exaggerated interpretation of them. He does not even charge the author with any malign disposition in the use of his strong words, but seeks to make upon the minds of his fellows the impression that all the ungraciousness that might have been intended by a bad spirit must be charged to these strong cautionary words.

I do not intend any disrespect to my antagonist, but I do intend to caution all sober-minded advocates of the Methodist Church against all those writers and talkers on the safeguards of our church who, under the ill-begotten view of their zeal for Mr. Wesley's fundamental requirement of awakened sinners wishing to join his religious societies, that they might be aided in their earnest desire to flee from the wrath to come, which they saw daily hanging over their heads, fail to recognize the fact that Mr. Wesley had no more idea of organizing a church upon this basis than he had of doing nothing at all; and therefore his easy method of letting seekers of religion into his societies, to aid them in getting religion, can no more be plead as the only condition required of any desiring to unite with the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, than his choosing the episcopal form of government for it could be plead in favor of its adoption of high churchism. I am heartily sick of all such simperings. A moment's reflection will satisfy any one open to conviction that this original institution in Wesleyan Methodism was exactly what all wise pastors do now. When a work of God in awakening and converting sinners is evidently with them they direct all their religious energies to this one point—namely, the conversion of souls—which, when rightly done, as I understand things, is the getting of souls prepared for a profitable church membership. And if my observation is wisely guided, I will just say here that if the pastor shows himself to be more captivated with his accession appetite than he is with the grand conversion idea, so as to be opening the door of his church every time there is a bright conversion or two, he will run his revival into a pitiful sensationalism in a very little while. Mr. Wesley's pervading idea and object was to make converts that would be divinely fitted for church membership.

But I am clearing away too much ground in the front. I will come to one of the main patches where I propose to plant essential thoughts. And first, as to antagonistic mottoes. Here I will catch Looker-On on his own hook by appealing to his own common sense, and the common sense of all who may have read his strictures on me in my published views about receiving members into the church. This is his dilemma. I care not how he may labor to unloose himself from this dilemma. Living according to his motto, he is in and cannot get out. This is the common-sense postulate. Whatever in church polity is surest to preserve the purity and godly character of the church is the best polity for the church. And common sense declares, even in spite of prejudice, that to be very strict in taking members into the church (as the evidence of profound, godly jealousy for the church,) and very prompt in putting them out when they become indifferent to the honor of the church, is much safer for the church, as an example of moral integrity, than his motto, which in its practical working is: take in anybody that professes a desire to be saved from sin, and although failing to make good their profession, and living in sin by choice, yet hard to get out—that is to say (for this is what Looker-On means,) let these disorderly persons know that although they have disappointed the church, violated their pledge to be obedient to its rules of fellowship, and gone over to its enemies, that still it is hard to get out. You must do a great deal worse than you are doing before there will be any danger of your expulsion. If Looker-On has the same sort of common sense that protects virtue against vice, he will see that this policy is exactly suited to the depraved tastes and habits of this class of people, and may minister to their ultimate ruin, but never can, as a principle of government, contribute to their reclamation from nurtured vice. But a prompt arrest of them might and very likely would have saved them, if so easy to get out is the safest policy.

As for the prayer of my reviewer that I may be discounted down to naught in all the churches, and by every General Conference, on all these views of mine concerning our future building up of a pure Methodist church membership, it comes in too late. My views on this method of building up and preserving a pure Methodism in the earth have been adopted by all the churches in this old Methodist country, in as far as avowed indorsement is adoption. And as for the General Conference, how surprised was I, after seeing "Discipline" at the head of his wonderfully disciplined Methodist mind, to find that he was utterly unaware of the fact that the General Conference had, as far back, I think, as 1840, laid it down as an ordinance that from thenceforward no one was to be admitted into the church, or offered by the pastor to the church for reception into its fellowship, until he had, in all the prescribed inquiries, become satisfied of their regenerated state in mind and heart, and especially of the genuineness of their faith; by which the General Conference meant saving faith—the faith that justifies the ungodly. This I know, for I was present, and offered the original resolution. Some attempts have been made ever since, by certain unreflecting men, to fall back upon what they called the old Wesleyan condition of church membership. Shame upon their memory as guardians of Methodism—which they all claim to be. It was modified in 1866, in New Orleans, and stands as a monumental pillar, in the temple of Methodism, of wisdom learned by costly experience. To this I bear the testimony of heartfelt joy; and the more gladly because I am about the last of living men that can testify to facts precedent to the enactment of the rule now governing the admission of members into our church. See Discipline of 1870, page 103. In my early times Methodist preachers generally went upon Wesley's society platform. All came in, as we term it, on six months' probation, and nearly all of them as seekers. If they did well and were not dropped, as it was then called—a prerogative exercised by the preacher in charge—perfect membership accrued by time. In this way, as ought to have been foreseen, it came to pass that multitudes floated into the church unrenewed in the spirit of their mind, until the church was distinguishable from the world only in individuals. To me and to many others it appeared that this easy-to-get-into-the-church would be the ruin of the church unless it could be prevented by a measure such as we then ordained, and which has been the law of admission ever since. It was intended then to prevent all floating into the church by calling all probationers before the pastor, and by examination and conference with them upon Christian experience, determine their fitness to be incorporated into the spiritual body of Christ; and if any were found still only as seekers, but desirous still to remain on probation, they were to be continued indefinitely. But, as even my reviewer must see, if he will, they could not be offered to the church for reception into its spiritual communion by the pastor, if he did his duty, until he was satisfied that both warp and woof of their Christian web of life would pass inspection at the office of heaven. I am thus bold and defiant on this ground, because I am sure every man whose mind is not obfuscated by some eclipsing body of darkness will agree with me that the General Conference could not have intended anything less than that the church must be built up of sound converts, or not built up at all.

My reviewer will see, if he will open his eyes on purpose to see, that I was only rebuking preachers and people for having a way of their own, and thus setting a bad example to every loose-twisted thread they work in. The first thing they learn is that there is no positive exaction of duty levied; that the pastoral guardians of the church take in loosely, and it is a just inference that every one of them will keep them in loosely. I will risk my judgment against Looker-On and all his patrons that hard to get in, properly administered, will create every time the just apprehension of easy to get out—a fear that conserves piety. I hope all Methodist journals will republish and oblige L. PIERCE.

IF WE read without inclination half the mind is employed in fixing the attention, so there is but one-half to be employed on what we read.—Johnson.

Obituaries.

DIED, at the residence of her father, in Caldwell parish, Louisiana, little EMMA ANGELINE, daughter of John B. and Brambly Yeager, aged four years and one day. After suffering ten days with congestion of the brain, calmly and serenely little Ange's spirit took its flight to the throne of God, the giver of life, and left its bereaved ones to mourn their loss and prepare to meet their loved one where parting is no more.

J. B. YEAGER.

LITTLE DANNIE H., youngest son of Wiley J. and Margaret J. Williams, was born December 11, 1870, and died of croup, at Coon Hill, Florida, November 12, 1873. Sprightly and intelligent, he was loved by all who knew him—the pet and Benjamin of the family. He was confined to his little bed only one day, passing quickly from the grasp and association of loved parents, and exchanging his little childish prayers for the ceaseless songs of the redeemed in heaven. "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

"I take these lambs," said he,
"And lay them in my breast;
Protection they shall find in me,
In me be ever blest,

"Death may the hands of life unloose,
But can't dissolve my love;"
Millions of infant souls compose

E. M. TURNER.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, at Childersburg, Alabama, January 24, 1874, Mrs. MARTHA E. BROWN, in the forty-second year of her age. Sister Brown was the cousin of J. F. Brown, and the daughter of John and Lucinda Howard. Her mother died in 1851. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in early life, and exemplified her faith in Christ by her daily walk and pious conversation. She was deprived of church privileges for many years, being afflicted with that fatal disease—consumption. The last two years of her eventful life her sufferings were intense. Her subsequent history has been a quiet, patient and resigned waiting on God. Her end was sunshine and peace. She was conscious to the last moment, and without a struggle or a groan, calmly and peacefully, fell asleep in Jesus, her glorious Redeemer. She has left a kind husband, three affectionate children, an aged father and many relatives and friends, who sorrow for and mourn her untimely departure and their irreparable loss. Yet they should be much consoled when they remember that their loss will be her unspeakable gain. Let all try to meet her in heaven. JOHN HOWARD.

DIED, at three o'clock A. M., on Wednesday, February 11, 1874, of consumption, WILLIAM JESSE TAYLOR, youngest child of David and Judith Carr Taylor, deceased, aged thirty-five years. He was born in Jackson, Alabama, where he lived until long after arriving at the years of maturity. His mother, dying when he was a little boy, left him a sacred trust to the wife of his eldest brother. There he lived a child of the family, a good, kind brother to his nieces, and an obedient, amiable son to his brother and sister-in-law.

At the first call to arms he arose in defense of his country, his home and his friends. He served faithfully through the four years of the war; was badly wounded and came home just before the close of the campaign. He united with the Methodist Church at Suggsville, Alabama, and lived an exemplary life. Soon after this he was married to Miss M. E. Cole, and removed to Gosport. Consumption had begun its work even then, but he did not feel it much until later. For the last two years he has been failing fast, and, though not perceptible to himself, yet it was to his relatives and to those who did not see him every day. Four weeks before his death his wife told him that he could not live, and asked him if he was willing to die. Up to this time he thought he would get well; was interested in his business and in home improvements. But, after his wife had talked to him of his approaching dissolution, he took no more interest in the things of this world, but prepared to meet in peace his God. He began to pray most earnestly and trustingly, and soon told her that he felt his sins were pardoned and that he was ready to go. He asked his wife to meet him, which she hopes to do, being a member of the same church and an humble Christian. He said: "Tell my son to lead the life his father led." The only regret he expressed was that it would be so long before his wife could go to him. He requested the doctor to give him something to keep him from choking to death. He said he did not fear the hereafter, but he wished to die quietly and rationally; in all of which he was gratified, for he was calm and conscious to the last breath. He died a happy, triumphant death—the death of the righteous man, the Christian. This will be a consolation to his wife and relatives after awhile; but, oh! what can "soothe the anguish sweeping o'er our heart-strings now." A. A. T.

JACKSON, ALA., February 13, 1874.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. SARAH COOK NUGENT, mother of W. N. and H. S. Capell, formerly of Mobile, was born in Northampton county, North Carolina, May 18, 1791, and died in Wilcox county, Alabama, November 23, 1873. The temporal and spiritual blessings of our heavenly Father were bestowed upon this sainted mother in Israel, for in childhood she gave her young heart to God, and committed all her ways to him who watches even the flight of the sparrow; and a glorious trust was this proven in her case, for in health she ever remembered that there was none like to the God of Jacob, and thereby devoted all her powers to the cause of her Master. And in that hour, when the last of her life-long history was recorded, she was found "tranquil amid alarms," without one effort to thwart the messenger of his right; but calmly folding her arms upon her breast, Simeon-like, exclaimed: "Now, Lord, let thy servant depart according to thy will." We find, upon beholding the Christian's last conflict, that "religion bears our spirits up," and by it we enter victorious into our mansion of rest, and in one of the hours most needed (in death) we have it in most abundance, if faithful till then. Such was the case with the subject of this sketch. She confessed, while living, that she was only a pilgrim seeking a better country, even a heavenly, and to the last and in the last she lived and died in the hope of the glory of God. She passed a long and useful life with her children. Never were they called upon to separate until the Lord of the vineyard had finished his work in her, and took her to her reward. But, thank God, she has received a blessed immortality, for she had this evidence: "that she pleased God." In the church she was one of the living demonstrations of the power of God in making ready his people. Her place in the sanctuary and around the altar will long be vacant, for none could fill it as she. Society has lost a valuable member. Sympathy and love ruled in her heart, and all felt the power of her affection to whom she could minister. Her family has lost a dear, loved one. The good parent's voice is forever hushed in the household, but her tongue is speaking a greater thing than concerns mortal, even praises to God with the redeemed. Indeed should Methodism put on mourning, and go forth with a grave and solemn song, for one bought by her labors has ceased to work in the church militant. Is there not one triumphant? Then look for her there. A.

DIED, in the city of Jackson, Mississippi, on the tenth day of December, 1873, Mrs. MARTHA LOUISA STANGER, wife of Mr. Lewis Stanger, and daughter of Mr. James M. and Martha D. Martin, aged twenty-four years, six months and eighteen days.

She was born in the city of Natchez in 1849, and born again in 1871, we trust, in the city of Jackson, Mississippi, and was admitted into the fellowship of the Methodist Episcopal Church South by Rev. C. G. Andrews, who was then her pastor, in May of the same year (1871.) She was then thought to be near her end, but it pleased the good One to spare her life for more than two years longer, all of which time she lived in the fellowship of the church of her choice, and died in the same faith in which she had lived. She was under the pastoral care of the writer for more than a year previous to her death, and very vividly does he remember with what eagerness she always welcomed him to her bedside, and with what joy she listened to the reading of God's word and prayer, and how earnestly she engaged in the services which were held in her room. She was a great sufferer for three or four years previously, and often in exquisite torture of body; but no one ever heard a murmur escape her lips, or a complaint at the dispensation of God's providence in her case. She seemed, as far as could be gathered by the writer, to be resting passive in his hands "who does all things well." She was not communicative in reference to her own feelings, but rather reserved and reticent. She could but realize that she was passing slowly away, and we believe was prepared for the change she felt coming, but for the sake of loved ones and friends rarely alluded to it. She said only once that she "knew she had to die, but did not wish it talked about." The writer frequently endeavored to obtain from her indirectly some expression of her state, but not until the last two or three days of her life did she ever pass beyond her accustomed reserve. Then, in answer to a direct question, she remarked that she was "resting in the hands of the Savior, and was doing all she could in her condition." Trusting in him who is the all-sufficient Savior was truly all she could do. We saw her no more alive. As we passed out of the room we knew it was, in all probability, the last time, as we were going to Conference; but her last, longing look is fresh in memory yet, as she asked: "Don't forget me, but remember me in your prayers." We saw her no more till the telegraph summoned us to the funeral, and then we laid the casket away to rest till the resurrection morning, when "the ladies of those who sleep in him shall be changed and made like unto his own glorious body." Then we hope to meet her in the brighter world. May we all "be found in him, not having our own righteousness, but clothed with the righteousness of Christ." Amen!

THE BIBLE WITH PINS IN IT.—It was an old Bible, a family Bible, a well-worn Bible—the Bible of an old lady, who had read it, and walked by it, and fed on it, and prayed over it, for a long life-time. As she grew older and older her sight began to fail, and she found it hard to find her favorite verses. But she could not live without them; so what did she do? She stuck a pin in them, one by one, and after her death they counted one hundred and sixty-eight. When people went to see her she would open her Bible, and, feeling over the page after her pin, would say: "Read there," or "Read here;" and she knew pretty well what verse was stuck by that pin and what by this pin. She could say of her precious Bible: "I love thy commandments above gold, yea, above fine gold. They are sweeter to me than honey and the honey-comb."

THEY have a room in the insane asylum of Maine with six beds in it, in which those patients are placed who have an inclination to commit suicide. It is said they never attempt to kill themselves except when alone, and by giving them company all the time this propensity is continually counteracted.

A DISORDERLY CROWD in Utica was recently dispersed by a man taking off his hat and announcing that he was making a missionary collection.

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1874.

TIRED MOTHERS.

A little elbow leans upon your knee,
Your tired knee that has so much to bear,
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers holding yours so tight;
You do not prize this blessing overmuch;
You almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day—
We are all so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sunshine till it slips away.
And now it seems surprising strange to me
That, while I wore the badge of motherhood,
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.

And if, some night, when you sit down to rest,
You miss this elbow from your tired knee—
This restless, curly head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;
If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;
If the white feet into their grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown;
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap or jacket on my chamber floor;
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear it patter in my home once more;

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky—
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully contented than I.
But, ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a sinless head;
My singing girdling from its nest has flown;
The little boy I used to kiss is dead!

Plagiarism.

BY THE REV. DR. E. WENTWORTH.

Plagiarism is an ugly word, and wholesale plagiarism is an ugly practice. That, for instance, was not a nice piece of business, the stealing of a whole oration out of Buckle's History of Civilization, by a student of Cornell College.

There is a species of plagiarism that might be so legitimated as to cease to be plagiarism, which, if temperately and judiciously used, could be made profitable, namely, the preaching of sermons that have been prepared by another hand. In the Established Church of Great Britain this practice is carried to a ridiculous and ruinous excess. Properly used it would bring into full play a wider range of powers than is now possible. I have long thought that the best way to bring out the full strength of the pulpit was for one-half the clergy to make the sermons and the other half to preach them. A fine thinker and writer is often a poor speaker. It is sad to think of the frightful waste of grand thought consequent upon bad voices, wretched manners and ill delivery. Fine speakers and glorious declaimers are often like Heliogabalus' nightingale, vox, et praeterea nihil, all voice and no brains, beautiful speech and no ideas, and, worse than all, no power of producing any!

Here is where actors have the advantage of the clergy, and the reason why stage fiction often produces more powerful effects than vital pulpit realities. The words and sentences are made to the speaker's hand; his whole attention is directed not to generating ideas, after a slow, laborious and painful process, but to giving ready-made thought its utmost power of material expression. The difference in impression is immense. Men are profoundly affected by what they know to be fiction, and remain cold and unmoved by what they know to be the most fearful of realities.

Manner is everything. It is related of Channing that when he was in the zenith of his popularity he exchanged with the young pastor of a rural church, of whose pulpit performances the Boston congregation complained fearfully—"the sermon was not fit to be heard." Channing examined the young brother's manuscript, and after some months, when the sermon was well forgotten, on some special occasion, took it into the pulpit and preached it word for word. The congregation were so delighted with the sermon that a committee waited on Dr. Channing and desired a copy for publication. "Gentlemen," said he, "that is the sermon preached, so many months ago, by Mr. So-and-so, from the country, which you scouted as unfit to be heard."

If this style of "plagiarism" were allowed, or moderately encouraged, good thinkers and writers would have the chance of getting themselves respectably preached now and then. Laymen might preach. Old Dr. Pierson, of Windsor, Connecticut, son of a clergyman, once entertained a Congregational clergyman on a Saturday night, who complained bitterly that he had no sermon for the morrow. "O," said the versatile doctor, "if that is all the difficulty I can help you out of that!" "And," said the doctor, "I wrote the sermon that Saturday night and had the satisfaction of hearing it preached on Sunday; my first and only appearance in any pulpit." Though I have no doubt the doctor might have appeared there to better advantage, and more for the edification of the congregation, than the dull deskers to whom they were compelled to listen.

Women might preach without shocking the prejudices of old fogies by appearing personally in the pulpit. I know a dull man who had a bright and sprightly intellectual wife, and it was currently said and believed that she wrote his sermons for him. I hope she did. Between them they made a good impression. In 1837, while at Lowville, New York, I attended a watch-night meeting held by the Rev. Elisha Wheeler, of the Black River Conference. "Who is to preach?" I asked. "O, a young English brother from over in the woods of Watson. I fear he can't preach much." His text was a common one, and not specially appropriate to the occasion. "Come unto me, all ye that labor," etc. He plunged into the heart of his subject without any formal introduction, but he soon evinced a mastery of the topic and a beauty of style that enchained attention, while his fervid utterance and impassioned manner carried everything before it, and he made a powerful impression.

It was soon whispered that he was in the habit of pronouncing other men's sermons. He had no habits of study, perhaps no power to study, but he could work and he could declaim. Complaints reached Conference, and Conference declined to receive him, though Hiram Mattison elicited a storm of "Amens!" when, in defense of the brother's practice, he said in his impressive way: "Mr. President, if Richard Watson lives in John Thompson, I say, let him live." I am free to confess that such declamations of gospel truth, even if I had known them to be such at the time of their delivery, would often have been far more edifying to me intellectually and spiritually than floods of the original stuff I have heard in my day from the sacred boards.

I don't suppose "plagiarism," concealed or conscious, will ever become popular, recognized, or even good-naturedly tolerated. The grand feeling is: "Let every man be himself." Preachers of the Columbiad order may preach their pews empty, but what few hearers remain will be of the most intellectual and brainy class—men who, like the judges of the supreme bench, ask for ideas and do not care how they are garbed. Preachers with declamatory power will cram their churches, but, it may be, with such a thoughtless, unstable, floating, brainless crowd, that, as we once heard it stated of the followers of a popular orator, "the trustees were ashamed to pass the contribution boxes to the trashy curiosity-hunters who thronged their aisles and quarreled for standing-room about the doors, and disappeared like chaff the moment their idol was removed."

The sermons of few popular orators will bear the light of the printed pages. If original, the matter is frequently of light caliber; if stolen, it is liable to detection.

Scott and Byron, in their correspondence, had some discussion on the subject of plagiarism; and one of them, Byron, if I recollect rightly, said it was dangerous to have a good memory, for memory, unconsciously, now and then brings up from its hidden depths ideas which we take to be original, and which, after all, are only recollections. Every writer that ever wrote, from Homer down, has been in turn accused of being a repetition of somebody else. It was charged against LaPlace that he reveled in the labors of his predecessors, and gave no credit. The penalty in such a case, when a reader finds that this belongs to Newton, this to Euler, this to D'Alembert, and this to LaGrange, is the doubt raised in the reader's mind whether the whole has not been stolen bodily, and whether any of it is original with LaPlace.

There is really very little originality in the world. We use the material that is made to hand, and any man is lucky if he has the ability to add a little to the general stock. Ability to use the material that lies about us in such manner as to make it our own, assimilate it into our own peculiar mental constitution, filtrate it through our own mental strainer, make a grist from our own mill, bearing our own brand—this is true originality, this is genius, and any appropriation, in the lump, of the thoughts and expressions of others that interferes with the free play of our own peculiar mental action is a clog to originality, and the destruction of what little genius may have fallen to our share.

In constructing sermons I have had a life-long abhorrence of "sketch-books." To the young sermon-builder it is good exercise to report sermons for himself, to write out the plans of such as he hears for his own instruction; but habitual resort to the ready-made plans of others is fatal to ingenuity, study and self-respect.

Years ago I used to preach a sermon on "Procrastination" from the clause: "Go thy way for this time," etc. In 1846, en route for the sent of the Illinois Conference, fourteen ministers of us put up at a log-cabin for a night. The neighbors gathered, and I was called on to preach. There I took the whole verse, Acts xxiv, 25: "And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance," etc., and constructed what I conceived to be a perfectly original plan of discourse on the entire verse; subject: Paul as a preacher; Genius, Manner, Matter and Results. The same fall I repeated the sermon at Nashville, Illinois. The preacher, Rev. T. Mayer, said: "You borrowed that plan from Benson." I said: "No, I never saw or heard any sermon on that subject."

He took down a volume of "sketches" and showed me substantially the plan I had drawn out in a log-cabin on the prairies. I said, "Well, I will never use it again," but reflection soon reversed this hasty resolve, for though my plan might be the same, it was such as twenty others might have made on the same verse, such, indeed, as one taking the full scope of the verse could hardly help making. It was my own, not borrowed; of this I was conscious. The web might be the same, like the underlying canvas of the Brussels loom, the figures above might vary infinitely. The skeleton might be similar; the full-fleshed figure should be no other man's progeny; it should bear unmistakable evidences of its paternity.—Methodist.

REV. DR. CARLTON, says the New York Christian Advocate, late senior book agent of the Methodist Book Concern in New York, has been elected city treasurer for the city of Elizabeth, New Jersey. The nomination was made by the mayor, and confirmed by the Common Council, notwithstanding a majority of the latter were opposed to him in political affinities. Dr. Carlton has been a resident of Elizabeth for the last ten or twelve years.

IN New York there is a mill which makes from paper such articles as milk-pans, cups, bread-pans, wash-bowls, etc., which are said to be superior to wood or metal. The paper being pulped, is pressed to shape, dried, enameled and subjected to a heat that would destroy some utensils of the kind. The material is light and easily handled, and does not rust, shrink, leak or easily break.

The Siamese Twins.

The annexed interesting account of this famous pair, recently deceased at Mount Airy, Surrey county, North Carolina, says the Journal of the Exposition, is gleaned from a late letter of a New York Herald correspondent: "They were born in Siam, May 11, 1811, where they lived until 1829, when they were brought to the United States by a sea captain named Coffin. This person claimed them as his property, and exhibited them for a lengthy period, realizing handsomely from his enterprise, the twins implicitly believing he had as perfect a right and title to them as to any other goods and chattels he possessed. How long this continued my informant was unable to say, but a man named Bunker appeared, who knew the circumstances of their origin, and who interested himself sufficiently in their behalf to free them from the species of slavery in which they were held by Coffin. This done, they adopted the name of their patron, and began giving exhibitions themselves under the style and title of the firm of E. & C. Bunker.

"Their pecuniary and otherwise brilliant success is now a matter of history. Nearly every civilized nation in the world was visited by them, and the medical men of every country acknowledged them to be the greatest living natural curiosity of the age. It was during one of their tours through the United States, traveling as they did at the time in an open baroueche of their own, that they visited a place called Trap Hill, in the adjoining county of Wilkes. Here they made a stay of a few days, and here it was they made the acquaintance of a family called Yates, with whom they became very intimate and friendly, the attraction being two young ladies, respectively named Sarah Ann Yates and Adeline Yates. This was in 1843. In a very short time Eng evinced a decided liking for Miss Sarah Ann, or Miss Sally, as she was called; a courtship followed, and, to make the story short, Eng proposed, was accepted by the damsel, and a marriage was the immediate result. Chang, though a partner of Eng in everything else, was not a partner in his connubial joys and felicities, of which he was constantly reminded, and this state of single blessedness became very irksome to him. He grew miserable and quarrelsome, and nothing could be done to please him, and this sort of companionship was quite disagreeable to the newly-wedded pair. How was it to be remedied, was the question that agitated Eng's and his wife's mind, when suddenly one day, with a woman's tact, a bright idea struck Mrs. Eng, and she lost no time in communicating it to her husband. She had a panacea for all Chang's woes, and this was that he should marry her sister Adeline.

"Eng smiled serenely at the proposition, Chang brightened up at it, but the next question that presented itself was: 'Would the young lady agree to come into the family as a wife as well as a peacemaker?' Mrs. Eng said: 'Leave all that to me; I will fix that.' And sure enough she did. By her persuasive eloquence Miss Addy was won over, and in two weeks from Eng's marriage there were two Mrs. Bunkers.

"They then settled down in Wilkes county, where they purchased a small farm, upon which they continued to reside until 1847, making occasional tours to exhibit themselves. In that year they moved to this county, and purchased the plantation upon which Chang's family now live, which is quite a large and valuable one. At this time they had a number of slaves, which were subsequently increased to about the number of forty. With this force and an overseer they worked the plantation, and were generally regarded as very successful planters.

"Up to the year 1857 they lived together quite harmoniously, it is said, when, owing to domestic quarrels, the true cause of which never has transpired, a dissolution of the firm of E. & C. Bunker was agreed upon. Some say it was fighting among the children; others that it was jealousy of the wives about the number of children they had that caused the separation. But be that as it may, Eng purchased an adjoining plantation, upon which he built a house, just one mile distant from the old home, which now became the exclusive property of Chang. In the division of the property the whole of the original plantation fell to Chang, while a large majority of the slaves, being movable property, became Eng's. Hence it was that, when the result of the war brought about the emancipation of the slaves, Eng found himself a much poorer man than his brother, though both of them were then very well off.

"Immediately upon the separation the brothers made an agreement, which, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, was unalterable, and which to their very deaths was rigidly observed. This was that every alternate three days were reserved exclusively to each of the brothers to do as he pleased. For instance, the three days that belonged to Eng were spent at his house or anywhere else that Eng might choose to go. During that time Chang was merely an appendage of Eng, having neither the right to go anywhere that Eng did not choose to go, nor the power to attend to any business whatever of a private nature of his own. In the same way, when Chang's three days came, and they were punctual to a moment, they departed at once for his home, where he assumed supreme control of the actions and movements of both, and Eng became the nonentity. So exact were they with this rule that no event, however great in importance, and no stress of weather, no matter how severe, could prevent them starting from the house of one to the house of the other when the three days of either had expired. It is related of them that this rule caused one to leave his home just as the marriage of his daughter was about to take place, and the other was prevented from attending the funeral of his son by the stringency of this singular compact. They carried it out to the last, for Chang's final three days had expired on the Thursday evening prior to their deaths, and though it was very cold, misty and severe weather, to Eng's house he would go, in accordance with the irrepealable law.

"Their residences are located respectively three and four miles from this village, in a northwesterly direction. Chang's, the first you come to, is a wooden building, painted white, two stories high, and shaped like an 'L,' with eight rooms, which are well though not luxuriously furnished. Eng's house has much the same appearance as Chang's, but it is built of logs and is not painted. The farms, as I said before, are excellent, well stocked, and are sufficiently capable of maintaining in comfort the families of the deceased twins.

"Their families are very large, Eng's wife having had eleven children, seven of whom are now living. Two of them died in infancy, and two after they were grown. Chang's wife had ten children, nine of whom are living, two of them, a boy and a girl, as before stated, being deaf mutes. The latter was recently married at Raleigh to her tutor, also a deaf mute, at the Deaf and Dumb Asylum in that city. The hospitality of the families is a household word in Surrey county. There was always a welcome and a good meal for every visitor, the latter being compelled to eat something, in every instance, whether he desired it or not, for good fellowship.

"In health the combined weight of the twins was two hundred and ten pounds, which was exceedingly light, compared with that of their better halves. Mrs. Chang weighs about one hundred and seventy-five pounds, is somewhat corpulent, has a fair complexion, and presents the appearance of a healthy country woman in her declining years. Mrs. Eng's avoirdupois is about three hundred pounds. Her appearance is similar to that of her sister, except she is more obese, but just as active. The children are all intelligent, well educated, and promise to make good citizens. One of Chang's sons now lives in California, where he has made quite a small fortune. There are others in various parts of the United States, all said to be doing well, with every prospect of success in life.

"Chang's landed property is estimated to be worth $20,000, his money $10,000, and his personal property, including stock and furniture, at $2,000. Eng's land is worth $10,000, his money $5,000, and his personal property $2,000. Eng's will bequeaths all his landed and household property to his wife during her lifetime; his money to be divided equally among his children at his death, and the property at the death of their mother. Chang's will is substantially the same."

THE study of a few dry figures now and then would be a profitable diversion for Sunday school friends and workers. It serves to show how the scholars stand, and often suggests in what direction efforts in their behalf should be made. Take, for example, the city of Brooklyn, whose Sunday school statistics are quite complete. There is the first fact to be observed that only one in three of its young people between the ages of five and twenty-one attend any school. The whole number is a trifle over one hundred and thirty thousand, and of these not quite forty-two thousand are on the rolls of the Sunday schools. Taking other places for comparison, this is undoubtedly a better showing than the average. Brooklyn perhaps leads in the number of her Sunday school children, and yet where one attends the school two do not. Then, looking at the proportion of conversions, we find that in one year about one in twenty-five join the church; but this does not show how many of the twenty-five are already members, or, in other words, how many of the forty-two thousand profess and how many do not profess conversion. It would be interesting to know what the proportion between the two is. For purely benevolent purposes the children contributed last year $36,700, not quite a dollar apiece, while for all purposes they gave more than a dollar each. This would be an average contribution of about two cents a Sunday from every scholar. As for their libraries, the schools report something over ninety-three thousand volumes on their shelves. If every place, large and small, would only gather statistics of this nature, it would help the cause of the Sunday schools more than at first glance might be apparent. A church may have a comparatively good school, but let it know that perhaps only one in five or ten children in its neighborhood attend any school, and it may begin to think of nerving itself to new and unthought-of efforts in their behalf. Statistics, uninteresting as they are in themselves, can become an important subject for study and comparison. They serve to rouse the energies when they are forcibly presented to the mind.—Christian Union.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Liberal Christian propounds an inquiry: "May we not," he asks, "a thousand years hence, stand in our spiritual lives on the summit of a religion gained, which, compared with our present, will be as the life of a bird to that of a coral?" To which we beg to reply that what a thousand years may accomplish we will not predict; but, judging what has been accomplished in eighteen hundred and seventy-four years, it may be doubted if the "summit of a religion gained" a thousand years hence will very much surpass the height of that attained by the apostles. If the spiritual life of Paul and the other apostles was that of the "coral," certainly we have not got into the air just yet.

A SERVANT GIRL once said she should not have known that her master and mistress were religious had she not heard that they took the sacrament. It was a pity they took it. If a man rolled on a bed of spices you would soon know where he had been; and if a man went with Jesus he must be perfumed with the spirit of Jesus.—Spurgeon.

Religious Intelligence.

A METHODIST Free Church chapel, to seat upward of one thousand people, is being provided at Kingston, Jamaica.

THE average age of fifty-one of the sixty-one Congregational ministers, whose death was reported last year, was sixty-seven, which is a remarkable record. Two were upward of ninety, while ten were upward of eighty.

A WRITER in the Methodist Protestant estimates that there were sixty-one new churches dedicated during the year 1873 in the non-Methodist Episcopal denominations in the United States. Of these twenty-one were in the Methodist Church, twenty-one in the Methodist Protestant Church, and twenty in the Wesleyan, Congregational and Primitive Methodist bodies. Estimating the average cost of these sixty-one new churches at $3,200 each (two in the Methodist Church cost $30,000,) equals $195,200; twenty-four new parsonages, at an average cost of $2,000 each; equals $48,000; amount subscribed to pay the indebtedness on Adrian College, $9,000, there is a grand total of $252,200. Add as much more for the support of the gospel, missionary purposes, ministerial education, etc., and we have over $500,000 raised in 1873 by non-Episcopal Methodism in the United States for church purposes.

A LETTER from Rio Janeiro in the Presbyterian gives an account of the Protestant agencies at work in that important South American center. There is a Church of England chapel for the benefit of the English, and German preaching every Sunday for the German and once a month for the French residents. There is an independent Portuguese Protestant church, having many earnest and active Christians connected with it. In addition to these agencies, the Presbyterians have had a mission in Rio Janeiro for the last thirteen years. Three missionaries and a Brazilian candidate for the ministry occupy this post. Preaching is kept up in two parts of the city. The mission church numbers one hundred and forty-two members. Several of them are men of influence in the community, and, although most of them are poor, they contribute liberally to the support of the gospel. There is a book store connected with the mission, at which not only the Scriptures but nearly all the Protestant literature in Portuguese is sold, and a colporteur is regularly engaged. A day school reaches Catholic families outside of the congregation. One of the most important agencies of the mission is the semi-monthly religious paper, the Imprensa Evangelica, founded in 1864. It has more than five hundred subscribers, and exchanges with sixty-one papers throughout the empire.

THE Southern Churchman reprints the following advertisement, which it says appeared in a New York paper a few weeks ago, "right under the eye of Bishop Potter:" "Prayer for the holy dead will be said and the blessed sacrament administered to-morrow (Thursday) morning, at eight o'clock, at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, West Forty-Fifth street, near Broadway." "What has this bishop done?" asks the Churchman; and answers its own question thus: "So far from doing anything to prevent these evils, he has virtually aided them. He 'consecrated an altar' in this very church, though there is no such service known in our prayer-book; he visits these churches; he lifts no voice against them; but at the very time is fierce against all who err on the other side. Now, does this most estimable gentleman—for estimable he is in all the walks of life—suppose that members of the Protestant Episcopal Church will allow these things much longer? Ought he not to know that the doctrine of the Holy Scriptures is more precious to them than matters appertaining to the church? Does he imagine that the vast bulk of our people, who have been patient for so many years, are growing imbecile? No! The people are wearied and tired and indignant that a little knot of insignificant 'priests' should be allowed to work untold evils to the church of our love." The editor concludes with this strong affirmation: "The next General Convention must legislate on this subject; these evils must be eradicated; the time for inaction has passed, and we must maintain, at all risks, the character of this church as Protestant against all the errors of Rome."

THE success of missions is sometimes best shown by the tactics resorted to in order to oppose them. The following extract from a missionary's report will show how heathenism is being slowly undermined in the Chinese empire: "The Rev. John Chalmers, of the London Missionary Society, writes from Canton: 'The influential part of the community seem to have changed their tactics entirely for the present. Instead of direct or violent opposition, they resort to works of benevolence and public preaching of their favorite doctrines, in imitation of us. They are establishing hospitals and schools and preaching halls in the city and in the country. There is now a benevolent institution in the western suburbs of Canton, for which tens of thousands of dollars are subscribed by the officials and gentry. Medicines are dispensed and prescriptions written gratis, widows and orphans and aged poor are helped, coffins are provided for those who die in poverty, and free schools established or are to be established by this institution throughout the city and suburbs. But a most remarkable fact is the public preaching—a new thing in China, at least in modern times, and evidently in imitation of Protestant missionaries. Not long ago there was an examination of candidates for the office of preacher, held by a committee of the gentry, at which some two hundred preached trial sermons, in a hall open to the public, each being allowed half an hour, and called to halt when the time was up by the ringing of a bell. Somewhere about sixty of these are said to have been selected, to be paid each $13 a month, for preaching in different halls in the town and country. This movement is, on the whole, very encouraging in regard to mission work. It shows that a deep impression has been produced by Christian preaching.'"

CHRISTIANITY IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.—The Rev. Dr. Nesbitt, of Samoa, a missionary in Polynesia for about thirty years, said lately that sixty years ago every island in Polynesia was under the spell of heathenism. There were now about 400,000 Polynesians who professed Christianity, who had been reclaimed from heathenism, and from many of whose islands cannibalism had been extirpated. Had Christian missions been a success in Polynesia? It must be borne in mind that these missions were still in their infancy. Their converts were children. It could not be expected that they would develop the same exalted standard of moral excellence as older communities. In these latter communities Christianity was the growth of many ages. The Samoan group comprised ten islands, large and small, having a population of 35,000. European missionaries took up their abode in these islands thirty-six years ago. Then the Samoans were a heathen, barbarous people, without any written language. Heathenism had been rooted out from among the Samoans as a people. The 34,000 Samoans were a professedly Christian people. Ordinances of religion were observed, and there were schools in every village. They were a church-going people, both on Sunday and week-days. The Bible had been translated into their language, and they had an increasing Christian literature. From Samoa the gospel was being sent to regions beyond, and the voluntary Samoan contributions to the cause of Christianity averaged upward of £1,000 a year. About sixty Samoan students were now in the training institution there, which institution sent forth some twenty students yearly. The students had spread far and wide for the purpose of teaching Christianity among the islands of the Pacific, and their teaching had been very effective.—New York Observer.

THE MALAGASY BIBLE.—The London Friend states that the Protestant missionaries in Madagascar have commenced the entire revision of the Bible in the Malagasy language. The translation of it into that tongue was begun by two Protestant missionaries in 1824, and completed, under great difficulties, in 1835. During the early part of that year Christianity was prohibited by royal authority in Madagascar. The missionaries therefore left about seventy copies of the newly printed Bible, chiefly buried under ground for security, and departed. Some of these copies were afterward burned; others were preserved, and taken to England "as seed-corn, out of which a fresh harvest has sprang." Down to the present time there have been twenty-two editions, either of the whole Bible or of parts of it, especially of the New Testament. From Bagster's "Bible in Every Land" we learn that the first serious attempt to translate the Bible into the Malagasy language was in 1818, when the Rev. Messrs. Jones and Bevan were sent by the London Missionary Society to labor in Madagascar. The Rev. Messrs. Jones, Griffiths and Johns spent the greater part of eleven years in this work. The New Testament was completed in 1825, and after three revisions the gospel by Luke was printed in 1828. In 1832 the Old Testament, as the First Book of Samuel, was printed in Madagascar. This was by or for the British and Foreign Bible Society. In 1835 10,000 Testaments and 5,000 of the Books of Genesis, Proverbs, Isaiah and Psalms were published by the society in London. During this period the entire Old Testament was printed in Madagascar. A fearful persecution broke out in the island, but by a peculiar providence the missionaries were enabled to prosecute their work, and though it lasted seventeen years, and though death was the penalty of an open profession of the Christian faith, not a single apostasy occurred, while the number of believers still increased.—Bible Society Record.

IN 1872 there were 1,862 Roman Catholic priests of all ranks in Great Britain. There are now 1,893. Sixty new priests have been ordained, of whom 11 were Jesuits; but, as there were 39 deaths, the net gain is only 21. In 1872 there were 1,245 public churches and chapels. There are now 1,253—an increase of 8. There are 21 colleges, 86 monasteries and 268 convents. Of the priests 511 are "regulars"—that is, members of the great orders of the church—Jesuits, Dominicans, Franciscans, Passionists and Redemptorists, etc.; and the remaining 1,382 are "seculars." In England alone there are 1,162 secular priests and 470 regulars, 20 colleges, 78 monasteries and 247 convents. There are 20 archbishops and bishops in Great Britain; but of these one archbishop and one bishop are retired and two others are auxiliary bishops. There are 32 Roman Catholic peers, 47 Roman Catholic baronets, 6 Roman Catholic members of the Privy Council and 37 Roman Catholic members of Parliament, all of them sitting for Irish constituencies; and there are 18 Roman Catholic chaplains to the forces. In addition to the 1,253 public churches and chapels, there are 247 private chapels in convents or in the houses of Roman Catholic noblemen or gentry; making a total of exactly 1,500 places in England and Scotland where mass is said. Sadlier's "Catholic Directory," just received, shows that the United States are divided into seven Catholic provinces—namely, Baltimore, Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, Oregon, St. Louis and San Francisco. These provinces contain 7 archbishops, 56 bishops, 4,542 priests, 4,387 churches, 151 churches in course of erection, 1,415 chapels and stations, and 1,259 parochial schools. The returns of parochial schools are wanting in a very large number of dioceses. The Catholic population of each diocese is given in round numbers, and is, of course, inaccurate. The total population, according to these figures, is something over 6,000,000. It is not likely that the number is understated.—Independent.

THE church property in the United States is estimated to be worth $250,000,000.

The World and the Soul.

The Savior's question about the gaining of the world and the loss of the soul has drawn out a great many impressive arguments to prove that the soul is of surpassing worth. As generally argued, there is little or nothing to be proved. It is self-evident that the soul, with its immortality and capacity for joy and suffering, is of more value than a few fleeting years of earthly pleasure and prosperity. No one, not even the most careless sinner, will dispute the proposition that it is the highest folly to exchange an everlasting good for a temporary enjoyment. The greatest difficulty is for men to realize that they are actually making this exchange, and giving their souls and their eternal welfare for what the world has to offer. It was this point especially that Christ would urge, not so much that the soul is of more value than the world, but that people are actually selling themselves for temporal gain. Nobody needs to be convinced that it would be a bad bargain to forfeit heaven for even the whole world, but there are very many who have need to be aroused to the fearful reality that it is this bargain they are making and confirming every day of their lives.

It is not easy to convince the unconverted that there is any such antagonism between the world and the soul, as that the gain of the one shall result in the loss of the other. To them the language of Scripture, concerning the world, is a senseless tirade against innocent pleasures and lawful pursuits. Not to love the world, not to be conformed to it, and to become an enemy of God because a friend of the world, is to them no better than vain babbling. They would make the most of the present, and not sacrifice their future; they intend to gain the world, but they have not the most distant notion that they are thereby losing their souls. The love of the world seals the ruin of the soul, because "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." There may be no marked profligacy, no departure from honesty, no excess of riot in sinful pleasures, but the heart may be so taken up with the world, and so intent on its pursuits, that God has absolutely no place. These two loves cannot co-exist. The one excludes the other, and the world and the soul are thus set against each other. When earthly objects absorb the affections, the thought and the time exclusively, things spiritual go by default, and the kingdom of God is never found because never sought. Where the issue of life or death in the confession of Christ is sharply joined, or where confiscation of property and imprisonment are the certain results of adhering to the Savior, we can readily apprehend the nature of the transaction. Not so, however, when there is no breath of persecution, and when we must seek for a test in the state of the heart and in the strength or weakness of the spiritual affections.

The soul is already lost to God and righteousness, "having no hope, and without God in the world," but the terrible fact is concealed from him whose ruin is threatened. It is the soul itself that is lost, and hence the difficulty in apprehending the process of barter and exchange by which the calamity is reached. Character is wrecked for gain, a good conscience is soiled by forbidden indulgence, and all holy desires are quenched by malignant passions. When Eve plucked and ate the forbidden fruit there was an inward spiritual blight that fell at once upon her, and she was at that moment a lost soul, although still in Eden. The gain and the loss were coincident. Thus in every affair where moral principle is involved a man becomes guilty, mean, polluted, sensual, devilish, when he yields to any solicitation or enticement that violates religious principle. Balaam was doubtless a good man until he sold himself for the wages of unrighteousness; Judas fell by tampering with the ever dangerous proclivity to covetousness; and the certain rich man, whose ground brought forth plentifully, came to a sad end by the same cause. It is with no deliberate purpose that the most of sinners sell their souls for worldly objects; they do not propose to trade off the heavenly inheritance for carnal and temporal things. They think to get a good portion here, and in the hereafter to share in the land of heavenly promise. They do not reflect that the soul is lost just where and when the principles of the gospel are compromised. The price of the gain is paid on the spot, and it is, to all intents and purposes, a cash transaction. No credit is the inexorable law by which the world and the devil are governed in their bargains with sinners. If the world gives, the equivalent, in the shape of character, conscience and purity, must be at once surrendered. He who yields to avarice and steals, or cheats or defrauds, loses his soul before he handles the accursed thing; and he who gives way to licentious appetites is a moral wreck the moment lust is approved and harbored in the heart. The loss of the soul is something within us and now, virtue, piety and love extinguished, and all unrighteousness left to riot and rule in the heart.

Let us not forget that Scripture teaches that the lost soul is the living man walking among the scenes of earth, and still surrounded by probationary and gracious influences. Christ "came to seek and save that which is lost," and Paul declares: "If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost." It is this present loss of the soul that men pay for the gain of the world. To be conscious of the sacrifice of honesty, purity and communion with God, is to be conscious of that which the Savior describes as the world gained and the soul lost. The question of profit scarcely needs a statement, even as limited to the experiences of the present life. Suppose the notorious Tweed had not been convicted and sentenced to a felon's punishment, would there be anything in his ill-gotten wealth and palatial residence, furnished with every luxury, to compensate for that utter and repulsive body of moral death? The lost soul, not damned, is infinitely more than all the world, and far too high a price to pay for its riches and pleasures. But suppose this lost estate be perpetuated—the soul forever and hopelessly lost? The loss is the soul itself, and not merely the forfeiture of admission to the Golden City. Strip the fallen nature of all gracious influences, and of all opportunities for repentance, and eternity becomes a desert waste, and "a land of darkness as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness."

Receiving Members.

BY BISHOP E. M. MARVIN, D. D.

From extended observation and no little inquiry as to the fact, I am convinced that there is in most instances too great precipitancy in the manner of receiving members into the church. Many are received in a manner so careless and slovenly that the fact leaves a very slight impression upon their minds. They come in without any intelligent view of the obligations they are assuming, or any very profound sense of consecration to God. They offer themselves as candidates, and are received at the same moment in numerous instances; or if there is a delay of a few days, there is no use made of the interval for thorough inquiry into the spiritual state of the applicant, or for his instruction with a view to his preparation for the most solemn vows of church membership.

The consequence of this is that great multitudes of people come into the church without any just sense of the obligations either of self-denial or duty which this step involves. The vow of repentance has no definite meaning to them. When they stand up in the house of God, and solemnly and in form renounce "the vain pomp and glory of the world," and "the carnal desires of the flesh," they have a vague sense of the solemnity of the act, no doubt, and realize some indistinct sense of the fact that the claims of God are to be held sacred as against worldly pomps and pleasures. But they do not understand that they are to keep aloof from the dance, the theater, the circus, and kindred places of worldly pleasure and folly. The consequence is that, after having renounced the world, they still cling to it, and the love of it returns upon them in a rapid and unrestrained growth of carnal desire and indulgence, which dwarfs and ultimately destroys all spiritual life. They live in pleasures—vain, worldly pleasures—and are dead while they live.

It is to be feared that some come into the church who never, scarcely even for a day, overcome the "covetous desires" of the world. They are as much given up to the pursuit of riches as before they took the vow, and engage in this pursuit by resorting sometimes to speculations and methods of the most doubtful propriety. They "love this present world," and if ever there is a question as between financial sharpness and Christian duty, it is always given in favor of the former. I trust this class is not very large in the church, but that it is represented in considerable numbers is beyond question.

Is it not true, also, that there are many in the church, with a merely selfish purpose, looking only to their own good, without any just sense of their obligation to maintain the honor and support the institutions of the church, as if the church could do anything toward their salvation otherwise than as it brings them to an active Christian life?

The best time to secure right views and a deep sense of obligation in all these things is in the period of a man's candidacy for membership. Then, of all times, is he most open. If he is not prepared for the truth, but is going to draw back to perdition, he had better do so then than later. Let him not go through the mockery of taking formal vows that he does not understand, and possibly would not take if he did.

There may be instances in which a pastor knows beforehand that the candidate is well instructed and quite prepared for the vow. In such cases, of course, there need be no time required for the preparatory work. But no pastor is justifiable in taking a member into full connection until he is satisfied, upon personal conference, that the candidate is ready for that step, with all the grave consequences of it.

Indeed I believe it is better in all cases to hold applicants for a time as candidates, and see them privately and know the exact view with which they enter upon the public profession of Christ.

One point especially I would insist upon. I would receive no one who had not read the Discipline. Every applicant ought to be kept at the threshold until he has done this. Certainly it is unwise in any man to enter a church without acquainting himself with its conditions. In the Methodist Church these are found in the Book of Discipline. If any man is so heedless as to offer himself in ignorance of what that book contains, the church ought not to allow him to consummate his purpose until he has become sufficiently thoughtful to know what he is doing before he does it.

It is humiliating to find so many of our members ignorant of vital principles connected with their own church. Are we preachers not really to blame? Is it not inexcusable in us to allow any one to come into the church before he knows really what the church is?

I would keep the candidate waiting so long as might be necessary to make him feel how solemn a thing it is, and at the same time how high a privilege it is to take a place among the people of God. If he is faithful afterward he will be the better and happier for this all his life. But he who slips into the church so quick and easy as scarcely to know it, suffers a perpetual loss.

It may be possible to make the way into the church too difficult, and so discourage the timid; but I think this is not the fault to which Methodist preachers are so liable. The tendency among us is in the opposite direction. Moreover, the faithful pastor will know how to encourage the hesitating, and yet secure all the results which I have insisted on.

Bishops and District Conferences.

The Galvestou Christian Advocate suggests some improvement in the constitution of the District Conferences. The attendance of the Bishops is regarded as too onerous to these usually hard-working servants of the church. As the matter now stands they are left at liberty to consult their convenience and other engagements, but it might be well to omit all mention of them in connection with these District Conferences. Says the Galveston:

On one point, however, we have fully made up our mind: We are opposed to the insisting on the attendance of our Bishops at these District Conferences. It imposes too much work; it necessitates continual absence from home, and it allows almost no leisure for reading and study.

But did not our venerable Asbury and McKendree travel through the bounds of the wide-extended work almost continually? They did; but they were unmarried men, and had no certain dwelling place; besides, they had little else to do. There were but few Conferences to hold; no college commencements; no papers to write for; but little correspondence, and scarcely any charity sermons to preach, as compared with the present. We insist that the labor is too onerous for men well advanced in life, as nearly all our Bishops are, and are likely to be.

Again, a Bishop has, according to the Bible, domestic duties; home and family have claims upon him as upon other men, and he may not innocently ignore these duties. But if all the intervals between holding Conferences are to be devoted to District Conferences, then the Bishops must, in effect, bid good-by to their homes, and leave to their lonely wives the care of the household.

The present arrangement allows almost no time for reading and study. One of the Bishops said to us, not long since, that several of the Bishops had deteriorated as preachers since their election to the episcopal office. And no wonder—deluged with letters innumerable, continually in company, talked to incessantly, expected to preach often, to dedicate churches, to make missionary speeches and attend colleges and make addresses; in short, all the time pouring out, and no time to take in, they must exhaust and fall behind.

Our Bishops are representative men in the pulpit, as well as presidents of Conferences. They are expected to be fresh, able and eloquent models of pulpit efficiency, but such an expectation is incompatible with their circumstances. They must have time for reading and meditation, or they cannot sustain the reputation they justly bore before their election as first-class pulpit men. We hope the General Conference will do something to relieve our venerable superintendents from the burden of overwork.

A Suggestive Failure.

The eminent tragedian, Edwin Booth, of New York city, has gone into bankruptcy. The attempt to establish a decent theater did not succeed. We doubt even whether play-going church members gave their preference to this enterprise of the distinguished actor. The New York Observer points out the moral significance of Booth's failure as follows:

Much sympathy is naturally expressed with the eminent tragedian, Mr. Edwin Booth, who has just gone into court as a bankrupt. In other words, he has failed in business. His failure is a very bad one for his creditors, his debts being confessed as far beyond his assets. As he surrenders everything, he is entitled to sympathy if his debts were incurred in an honest attempt to make money by a useful calling.

And his failure, while his fellow-laborers in the same business are growing rich rapidly, compels the question: "Why did Mr. Booth fail?" And the answer is freely given in the papers, as if there was no doubt about it, and we presume there is not. Mr. Booth has spent all his means, and all he could borrow, to produce on the boards of New York what is called the legitimate drama, in distinction from the illegitimate or "nasty drama," which is the entertainment offered at all the other theaters of the city. There are fifteen or twenty theaters in New York, and but one of the whole number, and that was Booth's, pretends to offer to the public the plays of Shakespeare and other great masters. And we are now brought to the knowledge of the fact, in a way that no logic can reason against, that there are not people enough in New York, and adding all the strangers sojourning here, to support one theater that is a theater, while a score of playhouses, with meretricious attractions that address the lower faculties of the mind and the sensual nature of the public, are nightly thronged to excess, and their managers are not in bankruptcy.

There is a moral in this matter, and we mean to find it, and to speak it out when we find it.

Booth's theater has failed because Booth would have it decent. It exhibited plays and the ballet that many of us would condemn as indecent; but, as compared with the other theaters, it was respectable in the character of its performances. And just in proportion to its respectability it was unpopular and a failure. It died of respectability. It may be revived under the same auspices, but it cannot live in New York and be decent. "Hamlet" may draw its hundreds, but "Divorce" will attract its thousands, and the "Black Crook" its tens of thousands. The dirtier the thing is, the greater the crowds that pay to hear it.

WE GREATLY REGRET to learn that the office of the Holston Methodist, Morristown, Tennessee, was consumed by fire on the morning of February 12. We sincerely hope that this excellent paper will soon rise from the ashes and come forth from the fire in all its former strength and prosperity. Rev. J. R. Payne writes to the Nashville Christian Advocate as follows:

We are much troubled over the loss of the Holston Methodist office, which, as you will see from the papers, was entirely consumed by fire yesterday morning, February 12. Loss to Price & Thomas about $3,500, with no insurance. Hope our people will come to the rescue, and set up the Methodist again by the first of March. We cannot do without it.

WE SHALL be glad to receive news items from our brethren from all sections of the country. Brief notices of revivals, the state of the work and what is being done in the churches are always acceptable, and of interest to our readers.

Benjamin R. White.

The death of this venerable Christian occurred while we were busy with the session of the Louisiana Conference, and hence our purpose to notice was for the time neglected. Bro. White was the father of Benjamin F., Thomas B. and Henry O. White, all ministers of the gospel, and well known, especially to the Methodists of Louisiana and Tennessee. Another son, also a devoted and able preacher, died in the work some years since. The aged sire, not only through his own useful life, but through the ministry of his sons, whom he dedicated and trained for Christ, will have a rich constellation of stars in his crown. We tender our sincere sympathy to the bereaved. Mrs. M. M. Hayes furnishes us with the following notice of her father, who died full of years and ripe for the heavenly inheritance:

Benjamin R. White was born in Edgecomb county, North Carolina, January 15, 1800, and died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Hayes, in Opelousas, Louisiana, December 30, 1873. How sad was the dying of the old year to our hearts. For fifty years my father had been a faithful servant of the Master, and the fruits of his careful training has been the dedication of four noble sons as watchmen on Zion's tower. Already threescore and ten years had been allotted him, and when the summons came he expressed his readiness to depart. We, his children, and our aged mother, will try to meet him "over there."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Nashville Christian Advocate calls attention to a matter of pronunciation. We have sometimes been not a little disgusted with the instance of affectation and bad taste mentioned. The writer in the Nashville says:

"Is it right to trill the r? I find no authority for it, and yet the practice obtains to a considerable extent in the pulpit. I seldom notice it anywhere else except in singing, and among a few foreigners. My own impression is that it is wrong, inasmuch as there seems to be no authority favoring it, and as it is a useless quavering in the pronunciation of words containing the letter r. With Americans it must be a contracted habit, an affectation, unwarranted by polite usage, unnatural, pedantic and superfluous. I admire plain, Christ-like preaching—love to listen to the learned and refined; but when I notice a preacher making a strained effort to trill every r that is trillable (unless he forgets it,) I feel mortified. But there are noted examples of this habit, and as young preachers are more or less inclined to pattern after stars, it may not be amiss to condemn (as Webster calls it) such pedantic affectation. W. J. W."

(We think our correspondent is right. In "Principles of Pronunciation," in Webster's Quarto Dictionary will be found what we consider correct views on this subject.—EDITOR.)

REV. DR. LEFTWICH, presiding elder of the St. Louis district, Methodist Episcopal Church South, writing to the St. Louis Christian Advocate of February 20, concerning the work on his district, says:

I am not prepared to give full reports from all the charges, but the following facts and figures will confirm what I have written. Within the past few weeks the additions to the churches, as far as can now be reported, are as follows:

Centenary, 37; First church, 75; St. John's, 47; Carondelet, 35; Bellefontaine, 75; Bridgeton, 12; Kirkwood, 25; Chouteau avenue, 27. Total, 323. Other charges would swell the figures to 350.

At Bellefontaine they are having a most remarkable work. Nearly 100 souls have professed conversion there in the last three weeks, and the good work goes on. At Bridgeton the church and the community are being stirred with wondrous power, and souls are being converted daily. At Eden, Mount Zion, Manchester, Kirkwood and on the Maramec the saving power of grace is abroad, and the work deepens and widens in every direction, "and great grace is upon them all."

REV. JOHN PAULY, now presiding elder of the Houston German district, Texas Conference, and for many years engaged in the German work in New Orleans, has been in our city for two weeks past, laboring with our German pastors in protracted meetings. Good success has crowned their efforts and a decided revival influence prevails. Souls have been converted and the German charges have been greatly refreshed. We trust the good work may go on and that there may be a large ingathering.

A COMMUNICATION from Dr. Lovick Pierce will be found on our second page. He promises us two more articles on the same subject. We are glad to see that our revered and venerable brother is still able to write with so much clearness and force. His testimony and experience are to be heeded by the church. It happens that the article by Bishop Marvin is on the same topic, and that his views are very much in accord with those of Dr. Pierce.

WE REGRET exceedingly to learn that Mrs. Mattie S. Cooper, wife of E. F. Cooper, of Selma, and daughter of Rev. Jefferson Hamilton, D. D., died in Mobile on the twenty-second of February. The bereaved have our prayerful remembrance and sympathy in this their hour of sorrow.

Sudden Death.

The Western Methodist announces the death of Rev. Leroy Massingale of the North Mississippi Conference.

The Rev. E. E. Hamilton writes from Macon, Mississippi, that the Rev. Leroy Massingale died of apoplexy, at his residence, four miles from that place, February 9, 18[illegible]. He was stricken on the morning of the seventh while sitting in his chair packing his clothes and books in his saddlebags preparatory to leaving for his appointment on the next day. He fell to the floor speechless, and notwithstanding all was done by skillful and faithful physicians and affectionate nursing that could be done, he never roused up, he never spoke. Thus, suddenly and unexpectedly to all, our beloved brother passed away from earth.

He was a man of strong natural powers of mind. He had a clear understanding of the spirit and doctrine of the Holy Scriptures, and was a successful and laborious preacher beloved by all. He joined the militant ministry in our church at nineteen years, was nearly sixty-nine years old when he died, so that he has been in the work almost fifty years. His body was brought here (Macon,) and a funeral service held in the church on the tenth. The business houses were closed during these services, and a grand congregation were in attendance. The church service closed, the Masonic fraternity took charge of the body and deposited it in the Odd Fellows' cemetery, with Masonic honors, to await the resurrection of the just. Bro. Massingale became a member of the North Mississippi Conference at its organization, and was formerly a member of the Alabama Conference. I hope some of his old and life-long associates in the ministry will furnish a sketch of his life and labors for the church.

REV. R. W. MASSEY, of Phillips county, Arkansas, remits his annual subscription to our paper, and says:

I have become fond of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and would sensibly miss its pleasant visits. I have the work known as Helena circuit, composed at present of only two churches—Central and LaGrange—ten miles apart, between which I alternate my services. My leading official is your friend and kinsman, Colonel William P. [illegible], with whom I enjoy pleasant pastoral and social relations. The church in this part of White River Conference is quiet, but we work and await the troubling of the waters.

DR. YOUNG reports, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of February 21, that the pleasant protracted meeting at Columbia, Tennessee, had closed. Within the past two weeks the pastor has received about sixty members, and witnessed about twenty conversions. Bro. J. P. McFerrin has been assisted by his indefatigable presiding elder and the Rev. R. Wilkes. The congregation in Columbia is very large, and remarkably quiet and devout. While Dr. Young was waiting for the train on Monday a few friends of the Vanderbilt University gave him endowment notes to the amount of $1,000.

MR. HAMMOND'S revival meeting, says the Central Christian Advocate of St. Louis, February 18, have continued, to the time of writing, with unabated interest. This week he has determined to give greater attention to children's meetings. He finds that in a city like this he cannot always secure their attendance to suit his convenience. In the meantime the work is prospering in most of the churches. In all the German Methodist churches in Union, Trinity, Central and Wesley chapel there is a manifest growth of interest, conversions and accessions to the church.

To the Louisiana Conference.

Conference, by resolution, directs the preachers to take a collection for expense of delegates to General Conference during the month of March and to forward the same to R. J. Harp, New Orleans.

BRO. DAVES' friends must remember that to receive and answer a letter costs him fifty cents in specie. The ten cents required by the United States does not meet the Mexican postage, which is twenty-five cents specie for each half ounce. He would like to receive letters from all his many friends, but they ought to inclose twenty-five cents (currency) additional postage.

THE jubilee celebration of the Felicity Street Sunday school, which occurred February 20, was an occasion of much interest. The speaking and singing by the children were excellent, and the refreshments dispensed in the basement were highly enjoyed by all. The school is prosperous, and the superintendent, W. H. Foster, is as active and zealous at any time for thirty years past.

BISHOP KEENER reached home on his return from Mexico on Monday evening, March 2. He is in excellent health and in fine spirits. The prospects of our mission in Mexico grow brighter every day. Our readers may look for a communication from the Bishop in next week's ADVOCATE.

CHANGE OF TIME.—By reference to the column of special notices it will be seen that the time of holding the Demopolis District Conference, Alabama, has been changed from the seventeenth to the tenth of April.

ANOTHER COMMUNICATION from Mexico, of great interest, will be found on the second page of this week's paper.

WE SELDOM realize while we are young that we are living our life in each of those hours which we often leap over in imagination, so desirous are we of those ahead, which we fancy will be so much fuller of happiness. And yet to most of us the day, it may be the hour, in which we make our most important step comes to us unexpectedly, with no warning for the preparation which we should have thought necessary beforehand.

Joy is for all men. It does not depend on circumstances or condition; if it did, it could be only for the few. It is not the fruit of good luck or of fortune, or even of outward success, which all men cannot have. It is of the soul or the soul's character; it is the wealth of the soul's own being, when it is filled with the spirit of Jesus, which is the spirit of eternal love.—Bushnell.

THE chief of police of Hartford states, in his official report, that crime is increasing in that city.

MARRIED.

FALLER—BAILEY.—On the twenty-fourth of February, by Rev. Lewis A. Reed, at the residence of A. Faller, Esq., Algiers, Mr. Francis H. Faller, of New Orleans, to Miss Mary Jane Bailey, of Rapides parish, Louisiana.

FRAZER—CHAPMAN.—By Rev. W. S. Wade, at the residence of the bride's father, February 10, 1874, Rev. John S. Frazer, of the Alabama Conference, to Miss Mary Ella Chapman, of Grove Hill, Clarke county, Alabama.

JORDAN—HAND.—At the residence of the bride's father, February 18, by Rev. C. H. Phillips, Mr. F. A. Jordan to Miss Mittie O. Hand, both of Enterprise, Mississippi.

ALLEN—TAYLOR.—February 22, 1874, at the residence of the bride's father, by the Rev. C. H. DuBose, John Wesley Allen to Miss Elizabeth Taylor, all of Choctaw county, Alabama.

BRITT—FORD.—February 29, 1874, at the residence of the bride's mother, by the Rev. C. H. DuBose, C. W. Britt to Miss Lougenia Ford, all of Choctaw county, Alabama.

TUCKER—GRAY.—At the residence of the bride, in Winnsboro, Franklin parish, Louisiana, on the evening of the twelfth of February, 1874, by the Rev. A. W. Moore, Mr. Owen Tucker and Mrs. Mary E. L. Gray, all of Franklin parish.

RAMON—SMITH.—By Rev. D. J. Wright, at the residence of the bride's mother, in Butler, Choctaw county, Alabama, January 22, 1874, Mr. John A. Harmon to Miss Sue T. Smith.

GILMER—BRUISTER.—By the same, at the residence of the bride's father, J. W. Bruister, January 29, 1874, Dr. A. B. Gilmer to Miss Amelia Bruister, all of Choctaw county, Alabama.

BAGLEY—VINSON.—In the Methodist church of Monroe, Louisiana, on the evening of February 12, 1874, by Rev. Charles F. Evans, John M. Bagley to Miss Anna B. Vinson, eldest daughter of R. B. Vinson, of Monroe.

SEAMAN—WOODARD.—February 19, 1874, in Tensas parish, Louisiana, at the residence of the bride's father, J. S. Woodard, by Rev. P. H. Dieffenwerth, Mr. Joseph H. Seaman to Miss Ollie S. Woodard.

HYAMS—PORTIS.—By the Rev. E. M. Turner on the twenty-fifth of January, at the residence of the bride's father, Colonel John W. Portis, in Sugarville, Clarke county, Alabama, Mr J. R. Hyams, of Shreveport, Louisiana, to Miss Ella A. Portis.

A CARGO of Langdale's chemical manure is to be here by the ship Iris. We call the attention of farmers and gardeners to the card, to be found in these columns, from Messrs. Meeker, Knox & Shultz, No. 49 Carondelet street.

MR. S. ANDERSON, the well-known photographer may now be found at the elegant apartments, 51 Canal street, where he is prepared to execute, in artistic perfection and at moderate prices, photographs and sun pearls.

THE Pelican Job Office is at Nos. 112 and 114 Poydras street, where orders for commercial, book and job printing will receive prompt and satisfactory attention at the hands of the proprietor Mr Ernest Turpin.

IT AFFORDS us pleasure to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement, in another column, of Messrs. Poole & Hunt, Baltimore, Maryland, whose reputation as manufacturers of first-class machinery is well known in the South, and second to none in the United States. For nearly a quarter of a century they have been prominently before the public, year by year strengthening their claims to public confidence, until to-day, with an immense establishment, as perfect in its appointments as experience and mechanical skill can make it, they can send forth every article of their manufacture perfect and accurate in all its parts, as tested by the fixed and high standards by which their work is regulated. They who have used their machinery can best vouch for the truth of what we have asserted.

SOAP MANUFACTORY.—The soap manufactory of our excellent fellow-citizen, James H. Keller, has become one of the necessary institutions of New Orleans. The people have become satisfied that his soaps are superior to those manufactured in the East, and country merchants will do well to acquaint themselves with the fact that they cannot purchase anywhere articles which, for practical purposes, are superior to the articles turned out at the manufactory of J. H. Keller. His card, over his trade-mark, will be found in our advertising columns.

CARRIAGES, HARNESS, ETC., ETC. Among the most enterprising of our merchants will be found the firm of Messrs. J. A. Lum & Co., at No. 162 Gravier and 13 Union street, manufacturers and dealers in carriages, etc. They have a long-established reputation as reliable dealers and clever gentlemen. No one who wishes to purchase should fail to examine their complete and beautiful stock of vehicles. Our readers will find their card in the ADVOCATE for twelve months to come.

HARDWARE.—Elsewhere will be found the advertisement of that excellent firm, Messrs. A. Baldwin & Co., whose vast stock of foreign and domestic hardware, locks, guns, cutlery, nails, steel, iron and castings, and indeed everything in the hardware line, is offered to purchasers, and they are invited to call at 74 Canal street, or 91, 93 and 95 Common street.

CIGARS.—We invite attention to the card of Mr. Jules Alzar, wholesale and retail dealer in Havana and domestic cigars; also a large stock of the best brands of leaf tobacco. He invites country orders. Our readers who are interested in the trade or consumption of cigars or tobacco will do well to call at No. 20 Royal street.

FROM the advertisement in another column our readers will notice that Mr. George McCloskey has retired from the establishments 76 St. Charles and 97 Canal street, and has refitted and furnished the old McCloskey soda water stand, No. 83 St. Charles street, where soda water, mead and pastry will be dispensed.

DRY GOODS.—Messrs. Levy Bros., No. 580 Magazine street, advertise this week a large and well-assorted stock of dry goods, and we invite special attention to the stock of spring goods which they are now opening, and propose to sell at prices which they feel sure will meet the views of purchasers. Give them a call.

THE attention of sufferers from coughs, colds, asthma, and affections of the throat and lungs, is called to the advertisement of H. Laplace, Nos. 21 and 25 Elysian Fields street, manufacturer and proprietor of Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm. Sold at all drug stores at $1 per bottle.

STAPLE AND FANCY DRY GOODS. Mr. Kling, the proprietor of the St. Ann dry goods store, No. 182 Royal street, displays a beautiful stock of fancy and staple dry goods, and a large assortment of belts, collars, cuffs, embroidery, etc. He solicits country orders and guarantees satisfaction.

HAVANA CIGARS are imported direct by P. A. Desforges, No. 9 Camp street. His establishment is handsomely fitted up and his stock tastefully displayed. We are assured that he keeps choice cigars, and will give prompt attention to country orders.

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS.—Every description of cemetery and building work completed in the best manner, and at low figures, by George Stroud, corner of St. Charles and Girod streets. Mr. Stroud is one of our most reliable citizens.

WAGONS.—Mr. D. Berlein, at No. 120 First street, whose wagons took the premium at the Louisiana State Fair in 1872 and 1873, proposes, in a card to be found elsewhere, to sell two-horse wagons at $65, which have usually sold at $75 and $80.

WOOD AND COAL.—We call attention to the card of Mr. John Maning, at No. 112 Annunciation street, corner of Thalia, who offers to deliver all kinds of wood and coal to any part of the city at the very lowest market prices.

MESSRS. PABLO & CO., mineral water and ginger ale manufacturers, Nos. 270 and 272 Royal street, caution the public against buying or selling bottles having their name pressed thereon.

GAS-SAVING BURNERS are advertised in another column by Julius Loeffler, No. 43 Royal street.

FOR FAMILY USE.—Meats of all descriptions are made much more palatable by the use of the famous Halford Leicestershire Table Sauce, which is not fiery, like many foreign sauces but has more body of the choicest materials than they have. All grocers sell it. mh5 4t

THE NAME "CASHMERE BOUQUET," as applied to toilet soaps and perfumery, is registered and patented as a trade-mark by COLGATE & CO., New York, and can be used legitimately only by them. Purchasers of the Cashmere Bouquet Soap and Handkerchief Extract will secure the genuine only when bearing the name of COLGATE & Co., New York. fe12 4w

THE

GREAT AMERICAN CONSUMPTIVE REMEDY

Consumption is NOT an incurable disease. Physicians assure us of this fact. It is only necessary to have the RIGHT REMEDY, and the terrible malady can be conquered.

HALL'S BALSAM IS THIS REMEDY.

It breaks up the NIGHT SWEATS, relieves the OPPRESSIVE TIGHTNESS ACROSS THE LUNGS, and heals the lacerated and excoriated surfaces which the venom of the disease produces.

While Life Lasts There is Hope.

It may not be too late to effect a cure even after the doctors have given you up.

HALL'S BALSAM is sold everywhere, and may be had at wholesale of the Proprietors, JOHN F. HENRY, CURRAN & CO., at their Great Medicine Warehouse, 8 and 9 College Place, New York. Price, $1 per bottle.

HALL'S BALSAM is also a sure remedy for COUGHS, COLDS, PNEUMONIA, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, SPITTING OF BLOOD, CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH, and all other diseases of the respiratory organs.

Also Proprietors of Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup, Carbolic Salve, Edgy's Troches, Oxygenated Bitters, Mott's Liver Pills, etc.

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.

THIS MEDICINE, FOR THE CURE OF

DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA

and all diseases of the Bowels, is without exception the most valuable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to Infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most acute attacks. For infants its use is recommended in preference to the death-dealing "Soothing Syrups," etc. No household should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.

A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from

Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis,

and all Pulmonary affections. It is specially adapted to the relief of Hoarseness, and all diseases of the Throat caused by excessive use of the voice. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Ball & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION,

Scrofulous and Tuberculous affections, Rickets and all complaints characterized by deficient nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.

This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is

Unrivaled as a Rubefacient,

and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the extremities should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

THE GREATEST

MEDICAL DISCOVERY

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder-humor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Raw and Inflamed,

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away in miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,

DONALD KENNEDY.

CAKES AND PIES.

In the dough! In the dough!
This is the way we make it go:
Roll it, roll it smooth and thin;
Pound it with the rolling-pin;
Cut with thimbles, and it makes
Just the nicest dolly cakes.

Dolly now must have a pie;
We will tunke it, you and I.
Here's a cunning little tin;
Roll and roll the pie-crust thin;
Spread it smoothly now within;
Lay some bits of apple in;
Cover nicely; let it bake;
That's the way our pies we make.

Dolly may not eat it all!
Then, if playmates chance to call,
We will give them a surprise
With our little cakes and pies.
All we make is good to eat,
For our hands are clean and sweet;
And we have such handy ways,
Our dear mother often says,
That she thinks, by all the looks,
We shall soon be famous cooks.

The Giant Watabore.

In the year no hundred and something and one, there lived a mighty giant—a scientific giant, named Watabore. This mighty giant was noted for devouring information. Not an idea nor an opinion could come near him but he would swallow it instantly. Nothing was too much for him. More than once he took in a whole headful of conflicting arguments without choking. The country, for miles around, rang with accounts of his daring and greed.

Well, this mighty scientific giant went on in this way, devouring information and swallowing all sorts of creeds and opinions, whether they agreed with him or not, until at last, as might be supposed, his system became terribly out of order. His eyes couldn't see straight; his ears deceived him; his appetite was completely gone; and he grew so thin that his poor body was not an eighth of a mile around. What to do he didn't know. The things he had swallowed disordered him to such an extent that everything went against him. The world soured on his mind. Everything was confusion.

When at last he decided to call in a first-class homeopath-allopath-hydropath-electric-movement-cure physician, he found there was no such person to be had. He couldn't even get a plaster-pill lotion, though he sent to every shop in the country. And when he attempted to carry out his idea of remaining perfectly quiet with active exercise, he found it wouldn't answer at all. All at once he remembered that either the telegraphic locomotive engine or the steam telegraph, he wasn't sure which, was wonderfully good for something, if applied boiling cold and taken inwardly on soft flannel; but his friends assured him the thing couldn't be done, that no nurse living would undertake to apply such a remedy, so he gave it up, though his sufferings were fearful. His mind couldn't lie easy in any position, and, as I said before, his appetite was entirely gone. Serve up facts, opinions, theories and creeds as daintily as his friends might, not one could he swallow.

They consulted the man in the moon.

"Let him take a lecture every other night," said the man in the moon.

It was a bitter pill; but the giant took it. Every other night he swallowed a lecture, but it did not help him. In fact he grew worse. There wasn't a point on which his mind could rest comfortably. Hungrier than ever, it was useless to offer him anything. Nothing would go down.

At last somebody thought of something.

Show him an opinion-maker.

They brought him one, but it was such a little thing that the mighty giant could make nothing out of it.

"It seems to be some sort of a hop-toad," said he; "big for a hop-toad," yet smaller than those skipping things called horses. Fetch me a microscope.

They brought one. Watabore carefully stood the opinion-maker on his finger and commenced to examine it.

"Ha!" cried the giant, "what do I see? Can it be possible? The opinion-maker is nothing but a man! Grind my teeth! but he is at work now. The little midget is throwing them off before my very eyes—all sorts of opinions—good, bad and so-so. Some of them worse than so-so—positively poisonous! And here have I been, gulping down his wares whole, without examining them. Odd flupps! The world must be full of these creatures. Fetch me another."

So the giant went on, with his microscope, examining one opinion-maker after another, until he arrived at the very sensible conclusion that these little creatures might be very useful in their way, but there was no reason why he should let them do all his thinking. Opinion-making was a business in which every one had a right to take part for himself.

From that day the giant prospered. His appetite returned; but, instead of swallowing every opinion he met with, he either made very cautious selections, choosing the good and rejecting the bad, or he prepared his own. He collected the best raw material he could find for the purpose, and took care to examine his stock very often, so as to throw out all opinions that were not worth keeping. And when he found an opinion very different from his own, he compared both carefully and held to the better one. On this diet his appetite became just what a healthy giant's appetite ought to be, and—that's all I know of the mighty scientific giant Watabore, who lived in the year no hundred and something and one.—Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, in St. Nicholas.

The Lost Dinner.

In the town of Newcastle, in England, there was a man who went by the name of Patient Joe. He was called Patient Joe because, if grief came to him, he would say: "It's all for the best; those who love God shall find that all things work together for good."

If things went well with him, Joe would praise God; and if things went ill with him, he would praise God still, and say: "God knows best what is for my good. We must not judge of things by this life alone; there's a life to come after this; and things that may not seem good for us here may be good for us there."

In the coal-pit where Joe worked some of the men would jeer and laugh at him when he said: "It's all for the best." There was a man by the name of Tim, who would miss no chance to laugh at Joe.

One day, as Tim and Joe were getting ready to go down into the deep pit, Joe, who had brought his dinner of bacon and bread with him, laid it on the ground for a moment. Before he could take it up a hungry dog seized it and ran off.

"Ha, ha!" cried Tim, "that is all for the best, is it, man? Now stick to thy creed, and say 'Yes.'"

"Well, I do say 'Yes,'" said Joe, "but as I must eat, it is my duty to try to get back my dinner. If I get it back it will be all for the best; and if I don't get it back, why it will be for the best just the same. God is so great that he can rule the smallest things as well as the largest."

So Joe ran after the dog, and Tim, with a laugh and an oath, went down into the coal-pit. Joe ran a long way, but could not catch the dog. At last Joe gave up the chase, and came back to the mine, thinking to himself that the men would all have a good laugh at him.

But he found them all pale with alarm and awe. "What a narrow escape you have had, Joe!" said one of them. "The pit has caved in, and poor Tim is killed. If that dog had not run off with your dinner you would have gone down with Tim into the pit, and been killed too."

Joe took off his hat, and while his breast heaved and his cheeks grew pale, and the tears came to his eyes, he looked up to heaven, but said not a word.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Salt-Rising Bread.

A correspondent of the Household gives the following receipt for making salt-rising bread, which is said to be superior to common yeast bread, and is considered by some as more wholesome:

"Put three teacups of water, as warm as you can bear your finger in, in a two-quart cup or bowl, and three-fourths of a teaspoonful of salt; stir in flour enough to make quite a stiff batter; this is for the rising, or emptyings, as some call it. Set the bowl, closely covered in a kettle, in warm water, as "warm as you can bear your finger in," and keep it as near this temperature as possible. Notice the time when you "set" your rising; in three hours stir in two tablespoonfuls of flour, put it back, and in five and one-half hours from the time of setting it will be within one inch of the top of your bowl. It is then light enough, and will make up eight quarts of flour; make a sponge in the center of your flour with one quart of water of the same temperature as rising, stir the rising into it, cover over with a little dry flour, and put it where it will keep very warm, but not scald; in three-fourths of an hour mix this into stiff dough; if water is used be sure it is very warm, and do not work as much as yeast bread; make the loaves a little larger, and keep it warm for another three-quarters of an hour; it will then be ready to bake. While rising this last time have your oven heating; it needs a hotter oven than yeast bread. If these rules are followed you will have bread as white as snow, with a light brown crust, deliciously sweet and tender."

BEANS AS POULTRY FOOD.—If you have any beans that you cannot market, you may make good use of them for your fowls. They will not eat them whole, however, as every boy knows, but they must be cooked. Boil them well, and when done stir in at once about one part corn meal to two of beans. The mixture can be kept several days, and the hens will be found to thrive well upon it.

THE Galloway cows are usually black and without horns, and, as they are best fitted for colder and rougher sections than here, are not likely ever to be much introduced. Although their milk is rich, it is deficient in quantity. They fatten on scanty fare, have a hardy constitution, yield a superior quality of beef, but are slow in coming to maturity.

PARSNIPS.—Scrape and split them, and put into a pot of boiling water and cook until tender. Dress with plenty of butter, salt and pepper, or you may parboil them and dip into a beaten egg and grated cracker, and fry in hot lard. They are very good baked or stewed with meat.

AT THE minimum estimate there are twelve thousand unemployed women in the city of New York.

PIMPLES, ERUPTIONS, ROUGH SKIN.

The system being put under the influence of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical discovery for a few weeks, the skin becomes smooth, clear, soft and velvety, and, being illuminated with the glow of perfect health from within, true beauty stands forth in all its glory. Nothing ever presented to the public as a beautifier of the complexion ever gave such satisfaction for this purpose as this Discovery. The effects of all medicines which operate upon the system through the medium of the blood are necessarily somewhat slow, no matter how good the remedy employed. While one to three bottles clear the skin of pimples, blotches, eruptions, yellow spots, comedones, or "grabs," a dozen may possibly be required to cure some cases where the system is rotten with scrofulous or virulent blood poisons. The cure of all these diseases, however, from the common pimple to the worst scrofula, is, with the use of this most potent agent, only a matter of time. Sold by all druggists.

COVERED WITH ERUPTIONS.—CURED.

CLAVERACK, Columbia Co., N. Y.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, BUFFALO, N. Y.—Dear Sir: I am sixty years of age, and have been afflicted with Salt Rheum in the worst form for a great many years, until accidentally I saw one of your books, which described my case exactly. I bought your Golden Medical Discovery and took two bottles and a half, and was entirely cured. From my shoulders to my hands I was entirely covered with eruptions, also on face and body. I was likewise afflicted with Rheumatism, so that I walked with great difficulty, and that is entirely cured. May God spare you a long life to remain a blessing to mankind. With untold gratitude,

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans, and has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, as they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gin of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

THE DIAMOND COTTON

THE GREATEST LABOR-SAVER of the AGE; with ONE MAN and ONE HORSE does the work of from SIX to TWELVE men and from TWO to FOUR horses. It CHOPS and HOES both sides, WEEDS and DIRTS the cotton at one operation. After which it is converted into an excellent CULTIVATOR, for use between the rows throughout the season. This machine has been tested upon a growing crop, and proved a thorough practical SUCCESS. It bears the highest TESTIMONIALS from our best cotton planters. It has soon become as indispensable to the cotton planter as the cotton gin or press. It has taken the first sweepstakes prize, the GOLD MEDAL at the Georgia State Fair as the latest and most valuable Improvement in agricultural implements, and the first premium wherever it has been exhibited. Active and reliable AGENTS are wanted in every town and county, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Applications for agencies should be made without delay. Retail price of machine, with attachments, $35 and freight. A most excellent COTTON PLANTER and GUANO DISTRIBUTOR has been added to the machine. Price $5 extra. New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 4 feet 6 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-seventh ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales...	18,073
Lake		21
Arkansas		3,781
Mobile		1,254
Texas		1,931
Total		25,062

On Saturday the inquiry was fair, but the movement checked by the assortment being poor, and buyers finding it difficult to fill their orders, as well as by their claiming concessions from factors which the latter would not admit. We heard of sales at 11c. for ordinary, 12c. for strict ordinary, good ordinary at 13c., strict good ordinary at 13 9/16@14c., low middling at a fraction under 14c., 14 9/16@14 13/16c., and strict low middling at 15c. The business embraced 5,000 bales. On Monday a decline of 1-16d. in Orleans at Liverpool and of 1-16@3-32c. in futures at New York, together with heavier receipts than had been expected and a falling off of 2-16@4-10 per cent. in sterling exchange, combined to check the demand and depress prices, and although there appeared to be a fair inquiry, it was mostly at figures below the views of factors; the sales were consequently confined to 4,850 bales. The lower grades, from low ordinary to strict ordinary, were offered more freely, and, being in less demand, were disproportionably depressed compared with the better grades, the former giving way ¼c. and the latter ⅛c. On Tuesday a further decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, and of 3-10 ₰ cent. in foreign exchange, together with the falling off in the receipts being less than had been expected, had a depressing influence, under which prices exhibited increased irregularity, showing a general decline of ⅛@¼c. in the grades below low middling and ⅛c. in the better qualities, but with occasional transactions at less than our inside quotations.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 16,000 bales, against 19,000 for the corresponding time last week and 17,000 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,000,076 bales, against 885,255 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 323,657 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 44,981 to Great Britain, and of 75,858 to France, and a decrease of 7,991 to other foreign ports. WATERS' CONCERTO AND ORCHESTRAL ORGANS are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever built. The Concerto and Orchestral Stops are the best ever placed in any Organs. They are produced by an extra set of reeds, peculiarly voiced, the effect of which is most charming and soul-stirring, while the imitation of the human voice is superb. These Organs are the best made in the United States.

WATERS' NEW SCALE PIANOS have great power and a fine singing tone, with all modern improvements, and are the best Pianos made. These Organs and Pianos are warranted for 6 years. Prices extremely low for cash, or part cash and balance in monthly or quarterly payments. Second-hand Instruments taken in exchange. Great inducements to the trade. Agents wanted in every city and county in the United States and Canada. A large discount to Teachers, Ministers, Churches, Schools, Lodges, etc., etc. ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES MAILED.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PROSPECTUS OF THE General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR.
A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the Kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the Lives of the Bishops will be published in the DAILY; also a Pen-and-Ink Sketch of the Members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the greatest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the master-minds of the church—questions in which every Methodist will feel the liveliest concern.

The DAILY will be a handsome sheet of four pages, of good size, printed on good paper, and in clear type; and neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it all that the church may desire.

The services of a competent reporter have been secured, and the subscribers may rely on receiving the earliest intelligence of the deliberations of the Conference through the Daily.

Many persons desire to preserve the Proceedings and Debates of the General Conference in a permanent form. To all such we take pleasure in saying that the numbers of the DAILY ADVOCATE when bound will make a handsome volume that may be read with interest in years to come.

Address A. H. REDFORD, Agent, Nashville, Tennessee.

Subscriptions will be received by ROBERT J. HARP, Agent, New Orleans. fe5 tf

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Rev. Jacob Knapp, famous as a revival preacher, died at Rockford, Illinois, aged seventy-four.

WORCESTER, MASS., March 4.—Several temperance meetings were held to-day. This afternoon clergymen of all denominations met for consultation. Resolutions were adopted expressing sympathy with any movement that tends to stop the sale of liquor, but the present movement is not indorsed.

CHICAGO, March 4.—The woman's temperance crusade in this city has been virtually abandoned, even before it had taken any definite form. At a meeting of ladies interested in the cause to-day, some of the most prominent movers in the matter announced their intention of giving up the attempt.

NEW YORK, March 5.—Committees representing the General Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States and General Session of the Presbyterian Church of the South have held several meetings, in which the subject of consolidation was thoroughly discussed. Great harmony and good feeling prevailed.

The action taken was substantially as follows: The committees unanimously agreed to report to the respective bodies, which will meet in May and June this year, that a plan of co-operation is practicable so far as the leading features of the ecclesiastic work is concerned, especially that relating to home and foreign missions and public action.

No steps thus far have been taken toward effecting or organizing a union of the denominations represented. The harmony which thus far prevailed renders it probable in the minds of many that this consummation will be realized.

WORCESTER, MASS., March 5.—The temperance women have abandoned Dio Lewis' plan, and will seek to operate through the owners of buildings, by pledging them not to let them to the liquor dealers.

LOUISVILLE, March 7.—A meeting was held last night to devise ways and means for the reception and accommodation of members of the General Conference of the Methodist Church South, which convenes here.

PHILADELPHIA, March 8.—A large meeting in the interest of the Palestine Exploration Society was held this evening at the First Presbyterian church. Prof. Hitchcock, president, and Lieutenant Steener, of the United States army, commander of the late expedition into Moab, made interesting statements.

BUFFALO, March 9.—Ex-President Fillmore died, at his residence in this city, at ten minutes past eleven o'clock last night.

He was conscious up to the time of his demise. At eight o'clock, in reply to a question by his physician, he said his nourishment was palatable. These were his last words. His death was painless.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, D. C., March 9.—It is with deep regret that the President announces to the people of the United States the death of Millard Fillmore, one of his honored predecessors, who died at Buffalo, New York, last evening. The long-continued and useful public service and eminent purity of character of the deceased ex-President will be remembered beyond the days of mourning in which a nation will be thrown by the event which is thus announced.

As a mark of respect to his memory it is ordered that the executive mansion and the several departments at Washington be draped in mourning until the close of the day on which the funeral shall take place, and that all business be suspended on the day of the funeral.

It is further ordered that the War and Navy Departments cause suitable military and naval honors to be paid on the occasion to the memory of the eminent citizen whose life is now closed. U. S. GRANT.

By the President:
HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 9.—All freight trains caught in the snow have been abandoned for the present. In Summit valley snow is twenty-five feet deep on a level. Several snow-plows and engines are off the track.

One east-bound passenger train is still at Alta. A western-bound passenger train is at Reno. The western-bound passenger trains lie at Tonno. Another eastern-bound passenger train lies at Hulleck's.

At Cisco over six feet of snow has fallen during the present snow-storm.

NASHUA, N. H., March 10.—The Democrats are holding a jollification meeting, claiming the Governor and House of Representatives, and possibly the Senate.

Later.—Returns from one hundred and four towns give McCutchin 16,971, Weston 17,187, and Black 896. The same towns last year gave Straw 16,997, Weston 16,016, Black and scattering 825. Republican loss in one hundred and four towns is 968.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, March 4.—The aggressive movements of the Carlists have served to arouse a feeling on the part of the people to aid the government, by all the means in their power, to crush the insurrection. Contributions of money and clothing are pouring in, and all the theaters in this city have given performances in aid of the cause. Telegrams have been received from the principal authorities, offering moral and material support.

LONDON, March 5.—The new Parliament assembled to-day. The opening proceedings in the Chamber of Peers was formal and uninteresting.

In the House of Commons Henry Chaplin (Conservative) proposed, and Lord Cavendish seconded the motion, that Mr. Brand, speaker of the last House, be declared speaker of the present House. After eulogistic speeches the motion was carried unanimously.

Perry Hubert congratulated the speaker in behalf of the absent minister, and Gladstone tendered him the compliments of the opposition. Swearing of members then began. Gladstone was most warmly received by the Liberal members when he entered the hall and took his seat on the front opposition bench.

The correspondent of the Daily News at St. Petersburg writes, under date of the twenty-eighth ultimo, that serious rioting has occurred in Eastern Poland, in consequence of the closing of churches by order of the government. At one place the disorder was so great that the military was called out and fired on the rioters, killing and wounding seventy persons.

LONDON, March 6.—Lord Northbrook, Viceroy and Governor General of India, telegraphs to the Indian office that it is expected the government will be obliged to maintain three million of persons for three months. The expenditures on account of the famine to the end of February last are estimated at $7,500,000.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburg are expected to reach England to-morrow. Extensive preparations have been made for their reception. The day will be observed as a holiday.

LONDON, March 7.—Upon the fall of Coomassie General Sir Garnet Wolsley issued a general order to his troops, complimenting them upon their bravery, and congratulating them upon their success. In conclusion he said: "England is proud of such men, and I am proud of commanding them."

The remains of Dr. Livingstone will be transported from Africa to England at the public expense.

HAVANA, March 7.—The report of the killing of ex-President Cespedes, by some members of the San Quentin battalion, has been confirmed.

It appears that on the twenty-seventh ultimo the Spanish troops captured a negro, and were ordered by their commander to shoot him. The negro promised, if his life was spared, to lead them to the spot where Cespedes could be found.

This was assented to, and the ex-president was discovered, with a few friends, five leagues from Masseradora. His companions succeeded in getting away, but he could not escape; and while closely pursued by a detachment of troops, led by a sergeant, turned and fired six shots from his revolver. This was returned by the troops, and Cespedes received bullets in the head and breast, causing instant death. His body was brought to Santiago de Cuba and buried on the first instant.

LONDON, March 9.—Dispatches received at the war office from General Sir Garnet Woolsley say that no means were left untried to effect a peaceable solution of the campaign. The King's palace was not touched until the last hour, and the troops left Coomassie without one article of plunder.

Of thirty-four officers sent out from England to organize the expedition four were killed, three died of fever and seven were wounded.

The rains have commenced, and the streams are swollen, impeding the homeward march of the troops.

BERLIN, March 9.—The arrest of the Bishop of Treves last week caused much excitement among the Catholic population. It was followed today by the forcible closing of the seminary attached to the bishop's see, in accordance with the decrees of the courts and the orders of the government.

Large numbers of people gathered around the institution and tried to prevent the officers from doing their duty. A riot followed, which threatened to become serious. Troops came to the assistance of the authorities and quickly dispersed the mob. To-night the city is reported quiet.

VIENNA, March 9.—A riot broke out at Pesth to-day, and was not suppressed until the military, which was called out, had fired on the mob, killing four persons and wounding many. Several buildings were burned by the rioters.

LONDON, March 10.—Additional dispatches from the Gold Coast report General Wolsley as having recrossed the river Prat, February 15. Three out of six kings, tributary to King Kolle, have given in their submission to British supremacy of the Ashantee throne. War is considered at an end and the kingdom hopelessly disrupted.

CHARLES LAMB gives some advice about making speeches which might be applied with advantage to other occasions. He says a speaker should not attempt to express too much, but should leave something to the imagination of his audience; and he tells how, being called on to return thanks for a toast to his health, he rose, bowed to his audience, said, "Gentlemen," and then sat down, leaving it to their imagination to supply the rest.

Reception of the American Bishops at the Legation.

We take the following account of a most interesting occasion from that able journal, the Two Republics, published in the City of Mexico. The reception was on the evening of the third of February.

On last Tuesday evening, the usual reception occasion of our popular minister, Hon. John W. Foster, his parlors were crowded by a large number of ladies and gentlemen, of both branches of the Anglo-Saxon family, also by Count and Countess Enzengberg, German minister, Sr. D. Giuseppe Biajl, the Italian charge de affairs, and some other foreigners, when and where were presented to this large and respectable assemblage the Right Rev. Bishop Arthur Simpson and Right Rev. Bishop John C. Keener, who have recently arrived from the United States. Colonel Foster availed himself of this occasion to render a just tribute to the varied and useful services of these distinguished prelates at home, and the meritorious object of their visit.

Upon introducing Bishop Simpson, Colonel Foster made the following remarks:

"It is a great pleasure to me, as I am also sure it is to this large company of English-speaking residents of Mexico, to have present with us to-night two gentlemen so distinguished in the church and in society, and I may add so much honored by the people of the United States. And I am confident that all of you, as you have taken them by the hand, can bid them a hearty welcome, and will indorse my words when I express an earnest wish for the success of the mission which brought them to this country. Whatever may be our beliefs, we can bid a God-speed to every movement which has a tendency to develop religious liberty and purity of Christian faith and practice, elevate the morals and quicken the intelligence of the people.

"Bishop Simpson has spent a long and useful life in the cause of education and the church in the United States, and there are few living men to whom my country is more deeply indebted for its present condition of intelligence, morality and patriotism than to him. We are glad to see him in this capital, in this era of peace and stability, and there is no impropriety in expressing the hope that Mexico may profit from his ripe experience and his philanthropic spirit. It is not often that we are favored with such an opportunity as this, and I trust the Bishop will favor us with a few words of good cheer to-night."

Whereupon Bishop Simpson responded in an easy and elegant manner, thanking the polite host for thus affording him an opportunity of meeting such a large number of respectable members of the Anglo-Saxon race. He paid a high tribute to Anglo-Saxon enterprise and energy, and very playfully rebuked that element for their assumptions of superiority in all and every case. He drew a pretty fine thread upon the benevolent propensity of the Anglo-Saxons, on both sides of the ocean, to extend their territorial dominion, which the Bishop seemed to think was not entirely with the view of spreading the gospel and of enlarging the era of freedom. At least from the tenor of his remarks he judged their motives were very much mixed, being a sort of blending of Bibles and firearms, schools and sewing machines, building railways and telegraphs as a civilizing process at the rate of so much per cent. upon investment, which was never lost sight of.

Bishop Simpson paid a high compliment to Bro. Jonathan's peculiar, well-known and world-wide acknowledged modesty, which he said was legitimately derived from his ancestor, John Bull; and upon the whole he administered a very wholesome sermon in a very pleasant garb, which was received with much merriment by the assemblage.

The Bishop paid a high tribute to the intelligence and respectability of the English and American element in Mexico, and expressed a wish that their residence here would promote their welfare as well as that of the people among whom they resided, and concluded with some complimentary remarks in reference to the accomplished lady of the legation and her interesting family.

Upon introducing Bishop Keener the minister said:

"One of the pleasant features of the presence of our distinguished friends is that it illustrates the disappearance of sectional differences in the United States. As the representative men of the North and the South make their fraternal visit to this country; so the greater part of our countrymen at home are striving together to develop the resources and prosperity, and to augment the greatness of our common country.

"In calling upon Bishop Keener to give us a few words of greeting from home, I desire to say that Mexico has no better friend or more enthusiastic admirer in the United States than he. When in New Orleans, en route to my post of duty, I received from the Bishop a glowing account of Mexico, which I wish to say to him I have found in a great measure realized in my own experience."

When Bishop Keener addressed the company, and after paying his respects to the minister, his family and the audience, he observed that he had never despaired of the Yankee nation, after seeing a barrel of shoepegs in the Crystal Palace, at London; with some other remarks pointing out the peculiar talents of the Yankee people for traffic, Bishop Keener proceeded to say: "Mr. Foster has said he had a great admiration for Mexico, and that nothing could subserve the American people more than a visit to this region, for in their strong national conceit they know but little of other people. Mr. Parks, of England, observed that 'John Bull has a good deal of conceit too.'" True, whatever we have of that quality, we have come honestly by it. The Bishop said that at one time he supposed Mexico to be made up of a turbulent population, fit only to receive our surplus negroes, but what was his surprise to find here a sprightly race, full of genius, with artisan and art skill of a high order, having many extensive schools, a brilliant school exhibition, equal to the very best at home; having a library that would do credit to Philadelphia, and an academy of the arts better than anything we hope for in New Orleans in the next fifty years, and a refined and elegant society.

"Mr. Grote," continued the Bishop, "in his admirable History of Greece, has laid much stress on the conformation of the Grecian peninsula and archipelago, as to their effect upon developing the Greek civilization. So he felt a great interest in the features and formation of a country which has produced a people capable of ridding themselves of many monopolies, and of evolving a freedom which advances the public schools and a religious toleration. The more especially as they have done this not by interference from without, but of their own inherent force; and have shown that through a period of war, of revolution and counter revolution, which to us was but confused anarchy, there was in fact a thread of consistency, which, after a long history of mining and countermining, has at length issued in the present hopeful condition of affairs in this republic."

Bishop Keener said he looked with great interest on the topography of this beautiful and sublime region which gave birth to such results as upon the vale of Cordova and Orizaba's luxuriance of tropical wealth. Who says Eden was in Asia? He listened to the rapturous admiration of friends as the Cordilleras unfolded themselves in successive ranges, passing away into the dim, cloud-like outline of "the misty, dying blue." When he saw the grand achievement of engineering skill, while he mounted up upon almost impassable grades, a sense of pride filled him at the triumph of our race, by the Englishman and the Mexican, over the terrible obstacles of nature.

The Bishop concluded his remarks as follows:

"From the delightful reunion, as we have here to-night, of gentlemen who well represent the literature, the arts and commerce of different countries, and the faith of different churches; and of our fair countrywomen, both of England and America, who are always first and last in every good work, we may well hope for the diffusion of those great principles of free trade, of public schools and an open Bible, and I doubt not we shall live to see the greatest development of the republic of Mexico in all modern improvements and Christian civilization, under the enlightened and benign guidance of the able jurist and pure patriot who now presides over its fortunes, and who gives such full assurance of its stability."

THE BOYS.—The tired mother, when nightfall comes, cannot help drawing a long sigh at the sight of her boys' torn jackets and trowsers; and her aching head may whirl as with gleeful shouts they come trooping into the room in rough-and-tumble fashion. But with what loving tenderness does she not only endure all their noise, but sympathize in their sports, if she be a true mother. Some such feelings as these which are put into verse she bears in her heart:

"Boys will be boys—but not for long:
Ah, could we hear about us
This thought: how very soon our boys
Will learn to do without us!

"How soon but tall and deep-voiced men
Will gravely call us 'mother?'
Or we be shrinking empty hands
From this world to the other!

"More gently we should chide the noise,
And when night quiets the racket,
Stitch in but loving thoughts and prayers
While mending pants and jacket!"

THE utility of Arctic expeditions being again under discussion, Nature (of London) makes a strong plea for them on the ground that they have opened the way to profitable commerce. One of the earliest Arctic expeditions "discovered the White sea route to Russia, and opened a flourishing trade. The Spitzbergen voyagers led to the establishment of a fishery which added millions" to the wealth of Great Britain. The same is true of explorations in the North Pacific. Its valuable fisheries were all made known to the world by hardy Arctic explorers. And as to the loss of life, the experience of the survivors of the Polaris expedition is proof that men are hard to kill in the frozen regions of the North. That a company of sailors should subsist on an ice-floe for months, without fire, drifting more than a thousand miles, and yet all reach home in good health, almost tempts us to believe that the vital principle must acquire additional tenacity in Polar regions.

BISHOP JANES said at the anniversary of the Sunday School Union: "The song literature of the modern Sunday school contains one grain of sense, one of melody, one of religion, and seven of nonsense!"

Singular Phenomena.

MR. EDITOR: The following very remarkable phenomenon was witnessed in Covington county, this State, in December last. I wish to submit it to the contributors of your scientific column, hoping to hear from them through the same at an early day. They need not try to dodge behind the plea of untruthfulness, as every word can be established beyond the question of a doubt. There were more than a dozen witnesses, for whose veracity I can avouch. Yourself and Bro. John Mathews can avouch for me.

On the thirteenth day of December last, about four o'clock P. M., Mrs. Ward, an old lady living with her son, being in the house alone, was surprised to see corn-stalks, sticks, bark, etc., strike the door-shutter and fall on the floor. She arose, went to the door, but, seeing no one, she became alarmed, and called her daughter-in-law, who was some paces from the house, in the field, saying to her to run there, for an evil spirit was there (or "the devil," to use her own words.) Mrs. Ward, on reaching the house and witnessing the phenomenon, was so much frightened that she was immediately seized with an agné. Mr. Ward, who was some distance from the house, with another man, at work, was sent for. Pieces of wood, bark, corn-stalks and light-wood (pine) striking against the door-shutter still continued. He sent for several of his neighbors, who witnessed it through Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, till eight or nine o'clock, when it ceased.

Pieces of wood eighteen or twenty inches in length, and two to three inches in diameter, were brought from the woods, a distance of one hundred yards or more. Wood placed near the fire, for lighting purposes for the family, was taken up in their presence and spirited to the same door-shutter. Mr. Ward's daughter, who was washing the tableware, had all the teaspoons forced from her hands by this unseen power, and carried to the same place. A carpenter's chisel was found, which Mr. Ward says is not his, and no owner in the community can be found. A rumbling noise on the house-top attracted their attention, and on examination a bushel or more of dirt or earth was found lodged there, which had the appearance of having been burned in the fire. Some of the earth is still on the house. Mr. Editor, if curiosity should carry you there soon you can see it.

A large bar-plow, weighing fifteen to eighteen pounds, was seen by some of the family to rise up and settle on the top of the house, and you can see it there when you go after the earth. It stands a living witness of all the other incidents here recorded, for no man could throw it where it is. There are many other incidents in connection with this (to me) most remarkable phenomenon, which would consume too much space and time to record.

I know most of the people who witnessed the facts recorded, and know the most of them to be a religious, church-going people. I again refer you to the Rev. John Mathews, of your city, for my character.

The above is submitted to Dr. T. O. Summers, Jr., A. S. Andrews, D. D., Steele and other scientists of the age, hoping soon to hear from them through the columns of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I am, very truly and fraternally,

W. C. MENEFEE.

ORION, ALA., February 23, 1874.

The Vanderbilt.

The Nashville Christian Advocate says:

We are asked a good many questions about the Vanderbilt—its present status, plans, prospects, etc. So far as the main edifice is concerned, the work goes bravely on—and good work it is, as we can personally testify. Dr. Young runs like a clock—all right in his bureau. Read his communication on the first page—that tells its own tale.

The formal corner-stone laying is to take place on Monday, April 27. Bishop Wightman is to deliver an address, and other distinguished gentlemen are expected to speak on the occasion, of which due notice will be given in the Advocate.

"When will its halls be open for students?" We hope by the beginning of next year.

We would not advise those who have entered the ministry to leave their pastoral work to go to the Vanderbilt or to any other of our institutions of learning. We say this in answer to inquiries made in the premises.

Indeed we do not think it advisable that all who are called to preach should "go through college," or attend the university. We must follow the leading of Providence in this matter, and consult the proprieties of the case. College training, after all, is only a means to an end—if the end is reached by any other means we are content. Let the church furnish all possible facilities for those—whether in the ministry or not—who want the highest educational advantages, and can profit by them.

A MAN named Edwin Bailey has just been executed, at Gloucester, England, for the murder of his child. Just before his death Bailey declared that his crime and death were attributable to his having imbibed atheistical views under the teaching of Bradlaugh and Holyoake, which demoralized his mind. The Christian Shield commends this statement to the careful consideration of these so-called public teachers.

Selma Dist., Alabama Conference.

To the Preachers and Official Members of the Church in the Selma District, Alabama Conference:

BRETHREN—You will see in its appropriate column the time of your second quarterly meeting. Let all be present, to elect lay delegates to the District Conference. The preachers will preach a missionary sermon at all their appointments, and lift a collection before the meeting of the second Quarterly Conference. Urge the people out of a little to give a little. Dr. McFerrin's "Word to the Brethren" will show you the necessity of prompt action. Fears are entertained that in consequence of short collections some of the outstanding drafts will not be met in due time. This will never do for our beloved church. Let us avert such a calamity by prompt action—preaching upon the subject, and seeing each member of our charge and obtaining at least a small portion of their missionary contribution, if it is only twenty-five cents. We must urge the people of this district to greater liberality—the rich, that they be ready to give and glad to distribute; the poor, that they cast their mite into the treasury of the Lord; and all men, that they minister as of the ability which God giveth. Until we have discharged this duty we have not declared the whole counsel of God; and let no man charge it upon us that he has failed to do his full share in sustaining the credit of the church for which Jesus died. We profess to be looking now for the latter-day glory of the church, and we lean on the sure word of prophecy; but Christians, one and all, must do a great deal more than they have yet done before that glorious day arrives. We might as well expect to see our forest crowned with the golden sheaf without the labor of the husbandman, as expect to see a moral wilderness, more barren still, become a spiritual vineyard without the spiritual husbandman's toil. God has decreed that the world shall be filled with peace and righteousness, but he has not decreed to do it without means. He has accomplished a way of salvation for our race, but he has left it to us to make it known. He has sent glad tidings into our world, but has made it our business to proclaim the joyful sound. Not that all should preach or teach, but that all should preach and teach, or enable others to do so, with the means he has intrusted to their care. Thus each man becomes an embassador for God; and these things being so will not each layman within the district gladly respond: "I will come up to the help of the Lord? I am ready and willing to pour out my gold, and frankincense and myrrh, at the Redeemer's feet. 'I will honor the Lord with my substance, and with the first fruits of all my increase.'" God help the people of central Alabama so to respond that this year their empty barns may be filled, and a bountiful harvest for both man and beast smile upon the land.

The Children and China

MR. EDITOR: The scholars and teachers of the Raymond Methodist Sunday school, with a number of friends, assembled at the church in Raymond, on Sunday afternoon, February 15, 1874, for the purpose of forming a "Nickle Missionary Society," for the benefit of the China mission of the Methodist Church South. Forty names were found to be enrolled as members, when Rev. George F. Thompson, pastor in charge, and Major George W. Harper, superintendent of the Sunday school, proceeded to organize the society.

It was agreed that the society be called the "Raymond Methodist Sunday School Missionary Society, auxiliary to the China mission of the Methodist Church South." The meetings of the society are to be held on the first Sunday in each month, at four o'clock P. M. Each member is required to contribute five cents a month. Officers were elected to serve during the year 1874. Since then the second meeting has been held and a number of new names added. Two of the members were selected to deliver speeches, at the next meeting upon the subject of missions. By the close of the year it is to be hoped that every scholar of the school will be a member. The school numbers over a hundred scholars and teachers

YOUNG AMERICA.

CORRECTION.—Mr. Editor: I see that in the published Minutes of the last session of the Mississippi Conference Vicksburg station has no credit for missionary money. This is a mistake, which you will please correct. Vicksburg station paid $38, $13 of which was for the Mexican mission.

MERIDIAN, February 24, 1874.

THE extensive religious awakening in Scotland, commencing in the city of Edinburg, under the labors of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, is spreading over the whole of the land. In the cities the mid-day prayer meetings have from two thousand to two thousand five hundred attendants. Ministers and members of all evangelical denominations unite in the work.

AT THE meeting of the executive committee of the Evangelical Alliance, on Monday, it was resolved to raise $5,000 for the aid of Mr. Cook's family, and the churches were requested to take collections for the purpose on the third Sabbath in March.

BY THE PATH OUR MOTHER TROD.*

Brother, dearest, I am dying;
Place your hand upon my brow,
And remember, now I am trying
To obtain from you a vow.

We have wandered far and weary
From the home we loved so well,
From the path our mother followed
Ere she gave her last farewell.

Fortune's smiles have ever blessed thee,
Health and wealth have been thine own,
And to share thy brightest pleasures,
What a wife and child you own!

Yet I see the same expression
Which our father ever wore—
Care, deep care, spread o'er thy features,
Plainly telling of thy woe.

Come, now, here at this last hour
Let me tell you what to do,
For I cannot bear to leave you
When I see you troubled so.

And I long so much to meet you
In that home I see so plain;
But remember, you must cherish
Well the vow I now obtain.

Leave this glittering, worldly bauble,
Which ambition calls a name,
Read your Bible: it will teach you
How to be a better man.

It will calm and soothe your sorrow,
Teach how to love your God,
Bring you to our home in heaven
By the path our mother trod.

* The dying words of my brother.

Terms of Membership.—No. II.

BY REV. LOVICK PIERCE, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: I closed No. 1 at a point that might lead me right out in No. 2 to some strictures on my opponent's sad, troubled state at the idea of keeping one of these souls that professed a desire to flee from the wrath to come at the threshold of the spiritual temple long enough to make his acquaintance. He calls it keeping him in abeyance, which is just what it is, and just what we want him to feel it is. I will now give an instance, in my own pastoral experience, to show the wisdom of the General Conference in making it comparatively hard to get into the church. I was pastor, that year, of a city charge, where the nominal membership was about six hundred. My noble predecessor had had a great revival of religion running on to the end of the year. My recollection is that he left upward of two hundred of these probationary members, all of whom, under that old six months' probation term, unless a few of the openly fallen-away ones had been struck off by the official board, would have floated into the church like drift-wood lodges on a beach. Class meetings had gone into disuse, and the consequence was that, in the loose way the Methodist Church was going on then, there was no way which the church could defend itself from this incessant influx of unconverted members. As long as class meetings lasted; and were made a condition of membership, the church was as well protected against the incoming of unconverted members as it was possible for anything projected by finite minds ever can be. Every one that applied to be received on probation knew, from the language of our General Rules, that unless they continued to manifest their desire to flee from the wrath to come, by abstaining from all evil, and engaging in all good works inseparable from the outcroppings of a renewed mind, they would be dropped, and that the habitual attendance upon class meetings was the test, and that because class meetings, in those days, were substitutes for pastoral, personal visitations. And I say now that, in as far as special looking after new beginners is important to the sound indoctrination of their minds in the incipient principles and experiences of a truly converted soul, it was the most efficient process ever adopted; was so because at that time the class meeting was a meeting of the whole church, and the sympathy of all the renewed souls in the meeting was centered upon these mourners—seekers they were called then. Their whereabouts in the mazy field of a tempted soul seeking Christ, but lost in feeling, was the subject of the most careful ascertainment, whereupon the most appropriate exhortations and pertinent relations of experience in others were poured upon them, with suitable songs, and prayers that seemed to take hold on Heaven with prevailing power, and in this way the church was always well posted on the religious status of all who were to succeed to membership at the end of six months, if found, in the intervening months, working out their salvation as prescribed in the General Rules—for in those days these rules did rule. All these applicants knew that attendance on class meeting was a test of their going on or falling away. Consequently, if they neglected their class meetings voluntarily, it was understood as notice given of their wish to quit; and when it was known that their absence was voluntary, they were dropped—that is, they were no longer counted as probationary members.

And it is in place for me to say, as perhaps the only living witness that was then and is now in the regular itinerant work, that I have never known any period in our church when the proportion of soundly converted members—who were Christ's, because they had crucified the flesh, with its affections and lusts—was so overwhelmingly large as in the period which began its waning state, about the close of the third decade; and, as a general issue, kept time exactly with the surrender of class meetings as a test ordeal for entrance into the church, and of loyalty to its rules and orders after membership had been conceded by law measure. But as an eye-witness—and also as a dissenting witness, for I never believed in it as a wise and wholesome policy—it is my duty to say, that the church ran wild upon the idea of getting people committed to joining the church at the camp meeting revivals, and unfortunately called this giving of the hand at a camp meeting joining the church—so published it in their reports. Of course every one that saw these persons thus give their hands, under an invitation to join the church, being wholly outside of our understanding in the premises, when afterward they found many of these citizens, whom they knew, and saw them join the church, as the officiating minister called it, drinking, cursing, card-playing, and doing many other wholly irreligious things, quoted him as a Methodist—said he saw him join—and took occasion to condemn all religious excitement; and if skepticism was his forte, he set down all conversions to sympathetic and emotional causes, denying always anything like the new birth. For these and many other prudential reasons I dissented from this unguarded way of seeming to take members into the church; and no less so because all the camp meetings in the world, as camp meetings, could not lawfully take one member into the church, because no camp meeting is a church, and this act is a church act!

This brings me back to my starting-point—the utter loss of the sanitary effect of the old class meeting policy, which kept watch at the port of entrance, and cut off all dead capital. This having ceased to be used as a test question, whether these probationers were continuing to manifest their desire of salvation, according to the Wesleyan scale, it came to pass that an unregenerated membership was accumulating so rapidly that a stop must be put to the increase of membership by law, and a way established which would allow of church membership only through law—an ordeal of inquiries and answers which would enable the pastor to know whether he was building this spiritual temple of God with lively stones or with dead blocks. So a few of the then oldest watchmen on our Zion's walls offered this rule as an ordeal of trial, to which many that would gladly be floated into the church from off one of these revival waves, would never come for examination and promises. This rule was worded with special reference to a sound conversion. This I know, because I was its author myself. By the genuineness of their faith—I meant saving faith in Christ. It might have been better done. As it is, it is too indefinite. So obvious was the necessity for narrowing the door of entrance into the church that the resolution to adopt this rule was carried with that gladness which proved its fitness. Everybody felt that something of this kind had been a mournful desideratum in our church for an eventful decade in one of the most important periods in our history—most important because it was the decade which followed immediately upon one of the most remarkable triumphs ever gained over old doctrinal errors by a course of simple, legitimate Scripture exegeses. But, unfortunately for us, just as we had leavened the public mind with the soundness of our theology, we begin to lose the esteem of the best portion of civil and social society, who had all along before estimated Methodism as the purest form of evangelical piety known to observing minds. But now, through this very idea of my reviewer—easy to get in and hard to get out—had so depreciated the once grand currency of Methodism—its notorious, unimpeachable integrity in moral consistency—as to reduce its praiseworthy character as a church down to its individual worthies, while as a church its glory was departed.

There were, at the time of this new departure, a few of these old croakers after what they called Wesley's rule—the only rule of admission among us: a desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins—that demurred to this new order of things, and so they do still. But, as I wish to say, the time had come when more advanced minds must rule. Accordingly the results of the fourth decade made it evident that something must be done to prevent this drift-wood stock of probationary members from landing in the church as a thing of course. Hence this new regime. So when I returned from the General Conference, in 1840, to my charge, where more than two hundred probationary members had passed their six months' term, of course I took the earliest opportunity to call this roll, and explain to them this ordeal of inquiries into the religious experience of such as desired to be incorporated into the church upon a basis of religious faith, principles and purposes; only the more vigorous and decided because of six months of thinking and praying over this matriculation state. This call I continued to make for weeks, with exhortations appended, and out of this large number of respectable people that had matriculated in the fall and winter before, as they no doubt felt, for a regular lifetime race for heaven, I could never find more than seventy that would respond. Now, while this was no doubt the worst case that ever occurred, it is therefore the most fitting for my purpose. I was present and saw the precedents to this mournful terminus. The door of the church, to use my reviewer's words, did stand open night and day, especially of nights. I have seen that pastor open his church door three times in one long, warm night meeting. This seeking matriculates looked well, but in my opinion never paid. All that stuck on would have come in a month after if our method of getting in members had been wisely adjusted to a more calm and reflective mood of mind; while many mercurial, excitable souls have been drawn into this circle without any fixed religious principles or purposes, and fallen back into the world, with its pleasures and follies, and with wounded pride, became enemies to everything called religious excitement. That this tree, as a stock, has borne evil fruit is undeniable. And if so, the tree, as a stock-tree, is evil. So says Christ.

This new regime in our economy, as it was amended and enlarged in New Orleans, in 1866, is working well wherever pastors work it right. We have no probationary ward now; do not take any one into the church to get religion in it, but only such as come in to live religion.

They come as applicants, to be received into the church upon an open profession of faith and an oath of obedience to church discipline. I know that the accessions to the church within my knowledge, under the operation of this rule, are manifesting more stability than before.

We are seeking to get a membership that will tell David's experience: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path. I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep all thy righteous judgments."

The Dancers Killed.

MR. EDITOR: In these days of scriptural and historical light, the worldling and even some members of the church will ask: "What harm is there in dancing?" Sometimes I answer this question by asking: "What harm is there in worshiping an idol?" Who can perceive, with the physical eye, the moral turpitude of such an act? And yet God regards such worship as treason against himself, and denounces death upon all such devotees. Therefore in the blessed light of facts we reach the moral nature of such deeds, or, as Aristotle would reason, "we see the sinfulness of the act in its result."

Thus premising, we turn to the Bible for instruction and correction. In Exodus xxxii, 19, 25, 30, 35 we read: "And it came to pass, as soon as he (Moses) came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing; and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount." "And when Moses saw that the people were naked (for Aaron had made them naked, unto their shame, among their enemies;") "Moses said unto the people, Ye have sinned a great sin." "And the Lord plagued the people, because they made the calf which Aaron made." What was it that Moses saw which caused his "anger" to "wax hot?" "He saw the calf and the dancing." His "anger" was so "hot," when he witnessed this awful treason against God, that he lost self-control seemingly, "and cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them." Why? Because "the people were naked—naked unto their shame, among their enemies, and had sinned a great sin!" What course did he pursue? What kind of discipline did he administer? "Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him. And he said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbor. And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses; and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men." "These, no doubt, were the chief transgressors."—Clarke. Thus at the command of God the sons of Levi slew brothers, companions and neighbors who had been guilty of the abominable dance to the golden calf.

From the facts above furnished it is plain that dancing was the heathen mode of idol worship. "Dancing before the idol takes place in almost every Hindoo idolatrous feast."—Ward. "Of the various sacred cows of Egypt, those of Isis, of Athor, and of the three kinds of sacred bulls, Apis, Basis, Mnevis, Sir G. Wilkinson fixes on the latter as the prototype of the golden calf; 'the offerings, dancings and rejoicings practiced on that occasion were doubtless in imitation of a ceremony they had witnessed in honor of Mnevis.'"—Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.

But the punishment inflicted upon all the dancers, as above detailed, is not the most alarming feature in the display of divine wrath. That which shows the greatness of the "sin" is found in the awful words of God as he speaks of their final doom: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book."

In my esteem it amounts to no argument of value to tell me that the Hebrews had sacred dances! The record of Hebrew dances makes dancing no more right, before God, than the record of Solomon's seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines makes it right, before God, for a man to have more wives than one. I say this because in the first instance of the married relation there were only two parties—Adam and Eve. And although a long night of error reigned, yet when Jesus came he relieved the law of marriage from the argument of multiplicity in marriages among the Hebrews. So in reference to dancing. The first instance of dancing, as recorded in the Old Testament, reveals the hot displeasure of the Almighty. In the New Testament the Apostle Paul puts "dancing" in the same category of "idolatry," and says "that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." I say the apostle puts dancing in this category, because he uses the word Komos in this connection, which word is rendered, in the Greek lexicon by Liddell & Scott, "jovial festivity, with music and dancing." And I defy any man to furnish a better definition of modern dancing? From all the above I draw two conclusions: 1. That dancers should have no place in the Christian church. 2. That all who dance will be sent to hell.

A Model Methodist Preacher.

MR. EDITOR: Having just finished reading the autobiography of Rev. Heman Bangs, of the New York Conference, I can but wish the book was in the hands of every Methodist preacher in the land. While listening to the writer tell the story of his itinerant ministry in his own lifelike way, there are very few preachers will feel satisfied with themselves; some of us will feel stealing upon us the consciousness either that Heman Bangs was much more than a plain Methodist preacher or that we are much less. And yet, from the beginning to the ending of his life, it is evident that, so far as the human part of the work is concerned, his uninterrupted ministerial success was the simple result of his unremitting ministerial effort. Think of a man already married and settled in his homestead, and who had never passed through the curriculum of even a high school, think of him quitting his blacksmith's shop at the call to preach, and thenceforward during a period of fifty-four years filling circuits and stations and districts unceasingly, studying and qualifying himself for the work as he moved along, preaching almost daily, traveling almost incessantly, building up churches and parsonages and colleges almost everywhere he went, always acceptable and always successful. The wonder of it all is the very absence of anything wonderful in the man himself. He was no rara avis. The glowing eloquence that captures the multitude was not his; his sermons did not resound with the oratorial majesty of a Bascom; they did not flame with the luminous imagery of a Christmas Evans; there was no human element in them to magnetize the masses; they were strong with vigorous thought and sound wisdom, and they were clearly and logically and earnestly uttered, but they possessed none of the dazzling attractions of genius. Yet this man moves on from place to place, gathering souls into the church everywhere and all the time. It is presumed that not less than ten thousand stars glitter in the crown which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give him in that day. I call him a model Methodist preacher, because in Heman Bangs we see a plain man, by a plain process, achieving a success that is nothing less than extraordinary. I call him a model Methodist preacher, because he stands forth in fine illustration of the capacity of the Methodist Church for developing soul-saving preachers. There is not a church on earth but the Methodist Church that can produce preachers like Heman Bangs. In any other church such a man might have "wrought righteousness and obtained the promises," but in the Methodist Church only could he have wrought a crown sparkling with the luster of ten thousand stars. Only by the offices and in the fields of labor which are peculiar to the Methodist Church could Heman Bangs ever have became what he certainly was for more than half a century—a most triumphant preacher of the gospel.

The life of such a preacher is full of valuable instruction for every man who aspires to success in the work of the ministry. Having read the book, and witnessed the irrepressible energy and muscular spirituality and abundant success of this faithful minister of the gospel, I thank God and take courage. J. W.

Knowledge of Sins Forgiven.

MR. EDITOR: I saw an article in a recent number of our excellent paper, entitled "The Knowledge of Sins Forgiven," which, I fear, is calculated to do harm rather than good. I do not intend to spring a controversy, but rather to call the writer's attention to it, that he may explain himself in accordance with the teachings of the Master.

He sustains the first part of his subject, which is: a person whose sins are forgiven knows it. He writes strong and well about it, and brings a number of Scripture quotations as testimony.

In the second part of his subject he assumes the position that a person who professes a knowledge of pardoned sins must know the very time when it was done, and the exact place too; and if he does not know when and where, he is deceived about the matter; he has no pardon of sin; his profession is "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal."

Now I think he has failed (as he should have) to establish this assertion, for it is only an assertion. While he quotes Scripture on Scripture to prove the first part of his subject, he does not bring out a single "thus saith the Lord" to support the second. I do not know that there is any command requiring a person to know the precise time when he was forgiven, and the exact place where, although there are some who do know when and where it was done.

If I have not misunderstood him, his doctrine amounts to this: If a man does not know when and where he was born (of the flesh,) of course he was never born at all. Then we have a large number of persons in the world who never were born at all, because they know not the time and place of their birth. And yet these persons live, and the question would naturally arise how they came into being.

Now I am satisfied that when God forgives a man, he forgives all past sins at once; but there are some persons in the church who are slow to gather up the proper evidence of pardon, and others who cannot tell when they first began to love him; but they love him nevertheless.

True religion is to love God our Savior supremely, and our neighbor as ourself. The lawyer asked (Luke x, 25:) "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" And he told him if he would do this he should live. John says (First Epistle iv, 16:) "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." And if a man loves God he will know it, because he will feel it. Therefore he is not required to know the time and place in order to know that he is a child of God.

WORK.—Work is of a religious nature; work is of a brave nature, which it is the aim of all religion to be. "All work of man is as the swimmer's." A waste ocean threatens to devour him; if he front it not bravely, it will keep its word. By incessant, wise defiance of it, lusty rebuke and buffet of it, behold how it loyally supports him—bears him as its conqueror along! "It is so," says Goethe, "with all things that man undertakes in this world."—Carlyle.

ANDREW JACKSON was accused of bad spelling, but John Randolph defended him by declaring that "a man must be a fool who could not spell a word more ways than one."

MY BROTHER.

Lines written on the death of Dr. J. T. Keanon, who died of yellow fever, in Memphis, Tennessee, October 7, 1874. He laid down his life for his friends and the suffering poor.

At midnight's mystic hour I gaze upon
The glory of Orion, and listen to music
From the spheres. My brother, then I wonder
If thy spirit hovers near, enjoying.
Too, the beauty night reveals to us.
Even as thou wast wont to while with us here.
The bright and busy day sometimes shuts out
Thine image from my poor, sorrowing heart;
But when night puts on her sable mantle,
My heart puts on its deeper mourning too.
List'ning, I hear "Dead!" from the autumn wind;
The shadow of the grand floats as a pall,
And the pale-faced moon whispers: "Dead! dead! dead!"
Dear brother, shall we see thy form no more?
Thy cheering voice shall we not hear again?
As the welcome Christmas comes each child will Miss thy greeting and thy many generous gifts.
Then in childhood wast my counselor, and Sweetly humored many a girlish wish.
In after years, when our Father laid his Chastening hand on me, taking our idol,
Then didst came, forgetting home and interest,
And with the wine and oil of sympathy
Didst seek to heal my breaking heart.
O that I could have nursed thee in that hour.
That trying hour, and wiped the death-dew
From thy brow, then have heard thy latest breath!
This was denied. But methinks around thee
Hovered our sainted father, my darling,
And thy beauteous Marie Lou, waiting
To bear thee home on wings of love.
At morn and at eve orisons shall rise
For those who kind vigils kept o'er thee, even
In that hour of parting of soul and body;
Then with brotherly care—tenderly, yes,
Tenderly—laid thy body away, and,
Royal Mason-like, giving honors due,
Laid it in their own loved cemetery,
To rest secure till Christ shall bid it rise,
And meet him in the sky with songs of joy.
I would that I to night might on that grave
Pour a libation of tears, bitter tears.

BRANDON, December 3, 1873.

Obituaries.

MRS. TABITHA S. MILLER, wife of Rev. A. G. Miller, departed this life November 20, 1873, at her residence near Jackson, Louisiana. She was born in middle Tennessee, August 2, 1828. Her maiden name was Watson. Some of her brothers and sisters and many relatives yet reside near the place of her nativity. She came to this State while yet a child, and shortly after her first marriage, to Mr. Gorden, she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Jackson, Louisiana, under the ministry of President D. O. Shattuck, before he went to California, of which church she remained a faithful member until her death.

She died of erysipelas in the face and head, and was taken from us so suddenly that she left no dying testimony or even a farewell to comfort husband, children and friends; but her holy life had been a living expression of the beauty and power of Christianity, and we know she is at rest, and lives with him who said: "Because I live, ye shall live also."

The husband, children and a large circle of friends mourn over the loss of a model wife, of a loving mother and of a devoted Christian. Theirs the loss, hers the immortal gain. The chief mourner inquires, in the language of William Cullen Bryant:

"How shall I know thee in the sphere which keeps
The disembodied spirits of the dead,
When all of thee that time could wither sleeps
And perishes among the dust we tread?

For I shall feel the sting of ceaseless pain
If there I meet thy gentle presence not,
Nor hear the voice I love, nor read again
In thy serenest eyes the tender thought.

Will not thy own meek heart demand me there—
That heart whose fondest throbs to me were given?
My name on earth was ever in thy prayer.
And wilt thou never utter it in heaven?

The love that lives through all the stormy past,
And meekly with my harsher nature bore,
And deeper grew, and tenderer, to the last,
Shall it expire with life, and be no more?

A happier lot than mine, and larger light,
Await thee there; for thou hast bowed thy will
In cheerful homage to the rule of right,
And lovest all, and renderest good for ill.

Yet, though thou wear'st the glory of the sky,
Will thou not keep the same beloved name,
The same fair, thoughtful brow, and gentle eye—
Lovelier in heaven's sweet climate, yet the same?

Shalt thou not teach me, in that calmer home,
The wisdom that I learnt so ill in this
The wisdom which is love—till I become Thy fit companion in that land of bliss."

EDWARD DUDLEY was born in St. Augustine, January 10, 1795, and died, at his residence near Farmersville, Alabama, October 26, 1873. He married Miss Mary H. Thompson June 18, 1823, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in June, 1824, at Philadelphia church, in Putnam county, Georgia. He erected the family altar the evening after joining the church, which he maintained through his long religious history. He was soon selected as class-leader, for which he was admirably qualified, and served the church in this office for nearly half a century. When he moved to Alabama, nearly forty years ago, he settled near Farmersville, and he and his family formed a nucleus for the first Methodist church in this portion of the county, which he also named Philadelphia; and through his instrumentality this church has been and promises yet to be a power in this community.

I never knew a man more fully consecrated to God, with all he possessed, than he. As the Lord's steward he used well his pound. All the institutions of the church shared largely in his liberality. His house was well known as the preacher's home, and many of our preachers have been sheltered under his roof and fed on his bounty, always receiving his parting blessing. He was kind and hospitable, especially to the poor. He discharged every obligation according to his ability, and often said that giving was a means of grace, and in the use of this means he had great satisfaction. He was always punctual in the discharge of his religious duties. His seat at the house of worship was never vacant, unless prevented by affliction. He was really a man of prayer. In secret, around the family altar or in the great congregation, he was the same man of prayer. The depth and height of his religious enjoyment was very great, especially in his class meeting. The Bible was the book of books with him. Its sacred truths were food to his soul. He was much interested in reading the church literature, and had a very good library of standard books, with which he was acquainted. Being passionately fond of reading, much of his time was spent in that employment.

His testimony of a genuine religious experience was clear and satisfactory. He lived near the foot of the cross. I inquired frequently of his prospects. The reply was: "I am living by the day, patiently waiting the Master's call. I am ready at any time." When confined at home he sent a note to be read to the brethren, that they would pray for him, that his faith fail not. Being asked, a short time before he breathed his last, if all was well with him, he replied: "All is well. I only await the Master's time."

He has left an aged, bereaved and afflicted companion. May the Lord sustain and comfort her by his grace. Out of a large family of children but three remain. They all have families, and are among the professed followers of Jesus. If they follow that father as he followed Christ, it will be well with them in death. Our loss, in many respects, is very great, but with him it is infinite gain. Peacefully he has passed away and entered upon that rest that remains for the people of God.

JOSEPH M. SCOTT.

"THE righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." It would therefore seem appropriate to record in our religious journal a testimonial to the name and memory of WILLIAM BALDWIN LOTT, who died in Madison county, Mississippi, July 16, 1873, of typhoid pneumonia, in the fifty-fourth year of his age.

The deceased was born in Nash county, North Carolina, and came to this country at an early age, with his father, Rev. E. Lott. The effect of early religious training showed itself in the development of a promising manhood, and few sons have lived to give more comfort to the parental heart. With a well-balanced judgment and passions under strict control, he soon took rank among his neighbors as a leading man. With great firmness and integrity of character, he possessed at the same time a gentleness that allied him to all the forms of amiability and tenderness that came in his way; and while he never seemed to seek popularity, few men were so universally esteemed.

He was united in marriage to Miss Eliza G. Hill, and, finding in her a rare combination of intelligence and piety, his life was thus made enviable in all its aspects. He and she joined the Methodist Protestant Church in Attala county, Mississippi, in 1846, and from that day they walked sweetly together in the heavenly way. When the two churches united, several years ago, they came willingly into our church, and he was prominently identified with her interests till the day of his death.

The writer knew Bro. Lott for nearly twenty years, and can testify to his liberal Christian views, and can safely say that he never heard from him an expression that savored of bigotry or bitterness. Principle and not impulse, was his motive power, and this gave him a graceful calmness in the midst of external agitations. His speech seemed always with grace, seasoned with salt, and he had no use for useless words.

Bro. Lott was a Mason and an Odd Fellow, and gave the patronage of his good name to every associate and measure that looked to the good of his race. As a Christian he was intelligent in his faith, devout in spirit, consistent in his deportment and uncomplaining under the saddest disasters. The sun of his pilgrim life sat in calmness, reflecting from the shadow of death the rays of celestial loveliness. Says a loved one who saw him die: "He was perfectly resigned, saying that his Lord would take him to heaven. He looked handsomer in death than in life, as there was an angelic expression over his features which all observed who saw him." An immense concourse attended his funeral service, which was conducted by Rev. W. Harrington. All hearts seemed to feel a bereavement in his death, and it was sad to see the grief of many of his former slaves in the case of one who had been to them all that is embodied in the relation of a Christian master. To his heart-stricken wife and daughter, bowed bending like reeds beneath the weight of such an affliction, there can be no comfort except in the words of Jesus, who is the resurrection and the life, and who says to them in this night of gloom: "The bruised reed I will not break, and the smoking flax I will not quench."

"When through the deep waters I call thee to go,
The rivers of sorrow shall not overflow;
For I will be with thee, thy troubles to bless,
And sanctify to thee thy deepest distress."

HINTS ON PREACHING.—If a minister, through the blessing of God, would be powerful in converting men, let him eschew the idea of preaching for the mere purpose of preaching. Let him prepare to preach his discourses with a strong aim! Prettiness is not in place in the pulpit; certainly not in a revival. It is not the highest ideal of a sermon that it is precise and dignified, and offends nobody's taste! Foster complained of Blair that he kept his thoughts so long standing to be dressed that they were chilled through before leaving his hands. Sermons may be elaborated till they are spoiled. They may be so "perfect" as to be perfectly worthless. They may be

"——— correctly cold and correctly dull, Faultly faultless, icily regular, splendidly null."

Faultly faultless, icily regular, splendidly

Tholuck would call these like properties "dried sweetmeats in a glass jar." Such sermons are good enough to lay away as embalmed beauties, but they are totally unfit to be preached to a living congregation. Souls never cry out under them. When ministers are full of the Holy Ghost they do not preach thus. They cannot do it. The moment they are in earnest they preach in any way rather than this. And many revivals have been checked, and permanently brought to a close, by preaching plain and homely but solemn truths in a weighty and downright earnest manner.

A SIMPLE Highland girl on upon an old master with whom had formerly served. Being kindly invited by him to share in the family dinner, the usual ceremony of asking a blessing having been gone through, the girl, anxious to compliment the ancient host, exclaimed: "Ah, master, ye mnun hae a grand memory for that's the grace ye had when I was wi' ye seven years ago."

PLAY-TIME.

I love to see the children
In their merry play,
Playing, playing, playing,
All the live-long day.
Grief will come hereafter,
There's time enough for tears;
To me the children's laughter
Brings back the younger years.

The children have no sorrow;
Then let them laugh and play.
And though we weep to-morrow,
Like them we'll laugh to-day.
Laugh in the sunny day-time,
Laugh, though it be in tears;
As in the children's play-time
We see the younger years.

Like Produces Like.

All living beings are born of eggs, and developed from eggs. All end their growth in changes which have begun with the egg. Every successive generation begins anew with this egg. Since there have been men or quadrupeds on earth, since animals have existed, they have reproduced in every generation all the changes in their growth and transformation which are characteristic of their race. Now see what this amounts to. There are several hundred thousand different kinds of animals living on this globe of the different types. Every one of them has its line of development. Every sparrow begins with the egg, and goes through all the changes which are characteristic of sparrow life, until it is capable of producing new eggs, which will go through the same change. Every butterfly comes from the egg, which produces the caterpillar, which becomes a chrysalis, and then a butterfly, laying eggs to go through the same changes. So with all animals, whether of higher or lower type. In fact the animal kingdom, as it is now, is undergoing greater changes every year than the whole animal kingdom has passed through from the beginning until now; and yet we never see one of these animals swerve from the plan pointed out, or produce anything else than that which is like itself. This is the great fact. Every being reproduces itself, under conditions which are as varied as they have been from the beginning of the world until now; and yet they do not change. Why is that? Because by nature they are not changeable. That is what we must infer. And if those which live now are not changeable, and do not pass from one to another, though they represent all the changes which animals can pass through, is it logical to assume that those of early ages have become what we see now in consequence of changes in successive generations? Have the laws of nature changed in such a manner that what does not take place now has taken place in early times? I say, no. I say, just as the cycle which every animal passes through in its development from the egg to its perfect condition, returns to the plan impressed upon that animal by the Creator, just so have the various forms, the remains of which we find preserved in the rocks, been from the beginning the steps through which it has pleased the Creator to carry the animal kingdom up to man, that being made in his own image, who is endowed with a spirit akin to his, by virtue of which alone we can understand nature. Were we not made in the image of the Creator, did we not possess a spark of that divine spirit which is a god-like inheritance, why should we understand nature? Why is it that nature is not to us a sealed book? It is because we are akin to the world, not only the physical and the animal world, but to the Creator himself, that we can read the world and understand that it comes from God.

The physical causes are the same now as they were before. Chemical agencies, physical agencies, act now as they have acted from the beginning. We have the evidence of this in the identical character of the rocks of the older and more recent formations; we have evidence of it in the chemical identity of the materials of which celestial bodies are formed, of which the more recent investigations of physicists have given us satisfactory demonstrations. The physical world remains the same. The laws that govern it remain the same, and from the beginning until now they have acted in the same way. Are, then, the different animals which have existed at different times, and which differ in the most varied manner, the result of causes which do not vary, which act ever in the same manner? This is contrary to all argument, contrary to any evidence we have. We cannot ascribe diversified results to uniform causes. We cannot ascribe the cause of certain facts to agencies the action of which is unknown to us. Physicists and chemists know perfectly well what electricity, what light, what magnetism can produce. They know perfectly well what are the possible combinations between chemical elements; and they know perfectly well that these various combinations and these various causes are different from the causes whose effects we witness in the animal kingdom. Therefore I say that it is not logical to ascribe the diversity which exists among living beings to causes which exhibit uniformity of nature and uniformity of action. I can conceive only one possible cause, and that is the intervention of mind in such a way that it shall produce what we have seen. We know perfectly well how the human mind acts—how free it is, and how in its manifestation we recognize the stamp of him who manifests itself. In the poet, in the painter, in the architect, in the sculptor, at all times we see this manifestation. Now why should we not have something of the same kind in nature? Mind is not a manifestation of matter. It is something independent of it. To the extent to which we know its freedom, to the extent to which we can maintain independence of certain influences, to that extent, and in a similar manner, do I conceive the intervention of mind in the production of living beings for all time, upon a plan laid out and carried out from the beginning, with reference to an end, and that there is that reference to an end, and that the end is man is seen in the relation which man bears to the lowest vertebrates, the fishes. That there is a reference to man is seen from the gradation which we observe through all times, from the beginning to the end. That this cannot be the result of merely physical conditions is further shown by the fact, which is constantly recurring, of the transformations reproduced every day through the whole animal kingdom, in the production of new individuals. Prof. Agassiz.

The Free Church of Italy.

The "Christian Free Churches of Italy," as they prefer to call themselves, but are generally better known under the name of the Free Church of Italy, are, we believe, the only purely or entirely native Protestant organization in this beautiful land. While all the others are mainly indigenous, this is the only one, of any size, that is wholly so. Their churches throughout Italy are enjoying encouraging prosperity. They are an instrumentality well calculated to reach and evangelize the masses. Their greatest misfortunes seem to be their extreme poverty and the want of a strong organization as a church.

We will speak only of their work in Florence, as being that about which we are the best informed, and as this city is one of their principal centers of evangelization. They have here enjoyed the counsels and substantial aid of Rev. Dr. Van Nest and the Rev. Messrs. MacDougall and Alexander. They have in this city quite large and prosperous schools. A very successful fair was recently held for the benefit of these schools. It was, as usual, conducted by ladies, and resulted in netting about two thousand francs, a great success for a Protestant Italian fair, and that, too, without the aid of a lottery, generally the unfailing accompaniment of benevolent and religious fairs in this country, whose people are afflicted with a wonderful lottery mania.

A NEW CHAPEL OPENED.

On the first of January there was opened a new chapel belonging to the Free Church in Florence. It was formerly a Roman Catholic church, one of the most ancient in the city. It is a monument, in the main, of the liberality of Presbyterians in England and Scotland, and, probably none the less, of the untiring zeal of Rev. Mr. MacDougall in procuring means from the mentioned foreigners for it. It is a modest yet tasteful and beautiful chapel. It was filled with considerably more than five hundred persons at the opening exercises, which were conducted by the noted Sig. Gavazzi, who preached a telling and eloquent discourse from the twenty-third and twenty-fourth verses of the fourth chapter of St. John: "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth," etc. The audience was held, as it were, spell-bound from the beginning to the end of his eloquent sermon. In the evening of the same day Sig. Jahier preached a calm but able sermon from the first verses of the first chapter of Romans. It was, indeed, a "high day" for the Free Church in the "Athens of Italy."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The fifth General Assembly was very recently held in Pisa, commencing on the sixth and closing on the ninth of January. Twenty-three churches, located in as many different cities in Italy, were represented in it. Prof. Paul de Michelis, the president of both the former and this assembly, conducted the opening religious services, preaching an excellent and able sermon on brotherly love, St. John xiii, 34. Their secretaries were Signors Berin and Borgia. A report was made by the commission appointed to examine the administration of the last year's committee on evangelization, and their policy and stewardship were praised in the highest terms. Rev. Mr. MacDougall, the able and cultivated pastor of the Scotch Free Church in Florence, is the treasurer of this committee, and in this capacity has charge of all the general funds for their support. He made his report to the assembly, which was so carefully and accurately prepared that it was received with great satisfaction and commendation. The Rev. Messrs. Van Nest and Alexander, both intimately associated with these churches, and the latter superintendent of the work of the American Congregational churches in Italy, which support quite a number of the Free Churches, were presented to the assembly, and addressed it. Dr. Van Nest has been of immense service to these infant churches in various ways. Their most important committee, that on evangelization, for this year is composed as follows: Prof. Paul de Michelis, president; Sig. Henry Jahier, secretary; Rev. Mr. MacDougall, treasurer; and Signors Gavazzi, Lagomarsino, Conti and Borgia. A plan was inaugurated for the early establishment of a home for worn-out evangelists and colporteurs, and the widows and orphans of such as might decease. They also adopted a penny system for all their churches for aiding their work of evangelization. Both of these are very laudable movements. Their assembly was a very pleasant one.

MODE OF RECEIVING A MINISTER.

A young candidate for the ministry, Sig. Mariani, having been previously examined by a committee, appeared before the assembly and delivered an eloquent and well-digested discourse. He afterward retired temporarily from the assembly, while its members consulted concerning receiving him into their ministry. All being very well satisfied with his ability, zeal and edifying conduct, he was unanimously admitted among the evangelists of the Free Church. He was then recalled into the assembly, and, having replied satisfactorily to the questions propounded by the president, he was elected by acclamation an evangelical minister, and received from each the fraternal embrace.

THEIR CITIES.

First among these, in the minds of the members of the various Protestant churches in the United States, is undoubtedly the famous orator, Alexander Gavazzi; and the Free Church is probably more commonly known there as that of Gavazzi than by any other name. The hundreds and thousands, both East and West, who heard him at the time of our last General Conference have, no doubt, a distinct recollection of him, and need no pen-sketch from our imperfect hand. We have heard him two or three times in his native tongue. His theme, on one occasion, was the "Sacred Heart of Jesus." He certainly handled, "without gloves," the wily priests and the superstitious laymen of the Church of Rome. In some things we were satisfied and pleased, but in others, we confess, we were disappointed. But he was represented by his friends as not being in a speaking mood, so we were not at all disposed to judge him severely. He is certainly powerful in wit and sarcasm, and is a very popular speaker, when in a good mood, among his fellow-countrymen. He is the orator of the Free Church, if not of all the evangelical churches in Italy. But as a skillful, wise and prudent leader he is certainly surpassed by Prof. Paul de Michelis, the president of both the assembly and the committee on evangelization. The latter is a very able tactician, a far-seeing leader, and very felicitous in his utterances, nearly always saying just the right thing in the right manner and place. He is undoubtedly the present leader of the Free Churches. After these, we must acknowledge, as the leading spirits in the assembly and church at large, and probably in the order named, Signors Francis Lagomarsino, Henry Jahier, Lodovico Conti, Berin, Borgia, Bracchetto and Colombo. These are all men of creditable ability, and some of them men of talent and mark.—O. C., in the Methodist.

Stealing Dr. Guthrie's Sermons.

The doctor told us two interesting stories in connection with one of his published sermons, which I will give as nearly as I can in his own words: "Some years ago I was advertised to preach for Dr. Cooke, of Belfast, on a particular Sabbath. Before I left home I received a letter from an Irish minister, asking me, as a great favor, that I would not take for my text on that occasion: 'Behold, I stand at the door and knock;' and then went on to say: 'I'm ashamed to give you my reason for this; but, being in Edinburg one day, I heard you preach from that text. On my return home I was very much pressed for time, and I thought I might use your discourse with as much of your language as I could remember; and it succeeded so well, and was so highly prized by my people, that I gave it in Dr. Cooke's church with similar results.' But this was not all; for the letter went on to say: 'And I have yet another favor to ask of you, my dear sir—that you will not preach from another text (naming it,) and I will give you my reasons for making this further request: One day, when I was again late in preparation for my pulpit, a student came in to see me, to whom I told how I was circumstanced. 'Oh!' says he, 'I was in Edinburg last Sunday and heard Guthrie preach. I took notes of the sermon. Will they be of any use to you?' Well, sir, I took them and preached them, and again, as in the other case, repeated them to Dr. Cooke's congregation. 'Of course,' said the doctor, 'I took a different text from either of these two; and after sermon a gentleman came up, and, grasping my hand, said kindly: 'Thank you, sir, for obliging me, and keeping off the two texts, as I requested.' 'Ah!' says I, 'my good friend, is this you? Well, it was very easy for me to oblige you.' But I have still another story to tell you about that very text. There was a vacant charge in one of our country districts, to which probationers were appointed to preach as candidates. Well, sir, the first came and gave out that text, and preached from it in as many of my words as he could remember. The next Sabbath the second did the same; but the third Sabbath the elders had got wisdom, and so they asked the preacher if he would kindly tell them his text. 'With the greatest pleasure, gentlemen,' he answered. 'It is: Behold, I stand at the door and knock.' 'Well, then,' said the elders, 'as we have heard that sermon these two last Sundays, you will perhaps oblige us by something fresh.'"—Sunday at Home.

RIPENING FOR GLORY.—Some of the planets finish their rotations in much less time than others. The nearer they are to the sun the more speedily they revolve. Mercury, for instance, is not quite eighty-eight days in accomplishing his year, while Saturn takes up considerably more than twenty-nine of our years in circuiting the same common center. Thus some of God's converted people are soon matured for glory, by their nearness to and intimate communion with the Sun of righteousness. These are frequently known to outrun their brethren, and (like John at the tomb of our Lord) to reach the sepulcher, finish their course, and ascend to their Master's joy at a very early period; while other saints, who do not ripen so fast, or who have a larger field of usefulness to occupy on earth, are detained from their crown until they are full of years and good works. Each of these is gathered as a shock of corn in its season. O, believer, if thy God summon thee away betimes, his Spirit will first perfect that which concerneth thee; nor will Providence apply the sickle until grace has made thee white for the harvest. Or if he lengthens thy thread, having much for thee to do and much to suffer, he will show himself tho God of thy old age, and not forsake thee when thou art gray-headed; for he hath inviolably declared: "Even to your old age, I am he; and even to hoar hairs will I carry you."—Isaiah xlvi, 5.—Toplady.

PRAYER is the key of the day and lock of the night.

Scientific.

M. RIVIERE enumerates in Les Mondes the different species of animals whose bones were found with the skeleton of the man found lately in the Cave of Mentone. They were those of a cat, two cave-bears, a wolf, a rhinoceros, the horse, several swine's teeth, a chamois, four kinds of stags, including Cervus Canadensis, the Bos primigenius, Capra primigenia, and a species of Lepus. They indicate very clearly the epoch to which the man belonged. His bones were all present, save some of those of the feet and the lower extremity of the left tibia, and were all in place, the attitude being that of one who had died in his sleep, just as he was found, on a bed made of ashes, charcoal and burnt bones, and amid the refuse of his daily life. Among other objects found were two flint knives, a bone pin cut from the radius of a stag, and twenty-two perforated teeth of the same animal.

IT IS not so many years ago that botany consisted of little more than a knowledge of plants' names. It was, perhaps, unavoidable that it should be so; we have to know the names of the parts before we can build the machine. But the question now is: "What about these plants?" and in the inquiry botanical students are experiencing an interest never expected years ago. One of the most active in this modern field is Kerner, a Swiss botanist. What he says (and he has often little things to tell us about) is always listened to with attention. A particular field with him is to show that many popular ideas about plant life are fallacies, and this clears the way for a perception of the true state of the case. One of his recent papers is in regard to the influence of wind in distributing seeds. It has long been noted in America that, though we have believed that the feathery matter attached to seed was an especial provision of nature to aid in the distribution of seed, it does very little toward it. Take the common dandelion for instance. In early summer we may see the down in every direction floating in the air; but of hundreds examined we believe one has never been found with a seed attached. It has also been placed on record in American scientific journals that the down (pappus) of the Canada thistle is rarely if ever found floating with the seeds attached. There is near to the farm of the writer—not, in fact, fifty feet from his line—a piece of land over which he has no control. For the past ten years a patch of Canada thistles has flowered there undisturbed; but, although carefully watched, not a plant has ever made its appearance on this farm, or anywhere that the writer knows of, but in the one original spot. Seeds or roots can be carried from place to place by men or animals, or by some similar force; but the influence of wind has been much overrated. Kerner proves this by an examination of the glacial flora of Switzerland. He finds that these icy and slow-moving powers are the great plant distributers there. The same species will follow their downward track for miles, but have extended but a comparatively narrow distance on each side, and this, too, though many of them are provided with what botanists of the last age would call excellent wind distributers.

AGREEMENT DISCOVERED.—"Dr. Stuart had republished two extracts from the works of Samuel Pike, entitling the tract to which he had prefixed a preface: 'Brief Thoughts Concerning the Gospel,' etc. Without knowing anything about Dr. Stuart's connection with it, Dr. Chalmers had read one of the London Society's tracts, called 'Hinderances to Believing the Gospel,' which was, in fact, the first part of 'Brief Thoughts,' etc.

"Shortly afterward the two friends met on the streets of Edinburg. A long and eager conversation ensued. Street after street was paced, and argument after argument on either side was vigorously plied. At last, however, his time or his patience exhausted, Dr. Chalmers broke up the interview; but as at parting he shook the hand of the amiable though somewhat pertinacious controversialist, he said:

"'If you wish to see my views stated clearly and distinctly, read a tract called Hinderances to Believing the Gospel.'

"'Why,' said Dr. Stuart, 'that's the very tract I published myself!'

"The corner of the street—the heat of the argument, gathering additional intensity as it was about to be broken off—his own eager and, as he thought, most satisfactory closing exclamation—the look of wonder, running up into ecstasy, which Dr. Stuart fixed on him as he uttered it—all these fixed themselves in Dr. Chalmers' memory; and he used often to describe the parting scene as a proof how easily it may happen that men think they differ while really they agree."—Life of Dr. Chalmers.

THE GREAT CHANGE.—Conversion is the most glorious work of God. The creation of the sun is a very glorifying work—when God first rolled him along the sky, scattering out golden blessings on every shore. The change in spring is very wonderful—when God makes the faded grass revive; the dead trees put out green leaves and the flowers appear on the earth. But far more glorious and wonderful is the conversion of the soul! It is the creation of a sun that is to shine for eternity; it is the spring of the soul that knows no winter—the planting of a tree that shall bloom with eternal beauty in the paradise of God!—McCheyne.

A COCKNEY TOURIST met with a Scotch lassie going barefoot toward Glasgow. "Lass," said he, "I should like to know if all the people in this part go barefooted?" "Part of 'em do, and the rest of 'em mind their own business," was the reply.

THE most fortunate man, if he is without faith, is like a beautiful flower in a glass of water, without root and without duration.

Religious Intelligence.

THE members of all the Methodist churches in the world number a little over 3,000,000; ministers, 19,100; local preachers, 58,000; Sabbath school scholars, 3,000,000.

THE Saturday Review tells of a Scottish clergyman who quoted a text of Scripture in his prayer, and added: "For that, O Lord, is the correct translation of the passage."

ELECTIONS were held on Sunday, January 4, at Berlin, for members of the new Ecclesiastical Lay Council, and in nearly all cases the supporters of Free Church views were successful.

DURING the past year various charitable institutions of London have received no less than eighty anonymous contributions of £1,000 each, and one donation was of the amount of £5,000.

THE Basle Mission Society has in India, China and Africa 98 male and 59 female European laborers, 95 native catechists and evangelists, 101 Christian teachers and helpers, and 3,718 communicants.

THERE are but fifty churches in Berlin, Germany. The building of churches appertains to the State, and the people will not give voluntarily to this object, and they are not allowed to call their own pastors.

DR. CUMMING has given to the world a new book on Revelation. He has one new idea in it; the number of the beasts, 666, he makes out to be the number of persons who voted, or had a right to vote, at the Vatican Council.

NATIVE Christian chapels have been so far constructed along the two thousand miles of the sea-coast of China that for eight hundred miles of that coast a footman might put up at a Christian chapel each night of the journey.

THE Evangelical Witness has returns from all the New Connection circuits of Canada but two, on the vote on union with the Wesleyan Connection. The vote stands fifty-five circuits in favor of the union, eighteen against it.

ON THE first of January Prof. Friedrich held the first Old Catholic service at Carlsruhe, in a Protestant church. The event created much interest, and the church was filled with a congregation of three hundred people, among whom was Prince William of Baden.

THE Cronstadt Gazette notices the spreading of Russian Christianity in Japan. A former bronze, Paul Sarvate, is one of the most active apostles. In Hakodadi there is a Russian church in which service is held in Japanese. The Bishop of Kamschatka received during his presence at that port ninety-five Japanese into the communion of the church, and five hundred demanded baptism.

GREAT interest is now awakened for Christianizing the Jews. More than $300,000 were contributed in Great Britain alone the past year for this object. In Jerusalem there are 60 Jewesses meeting daily to hear the gospel; ministers are now welcomed in every house at Jerusalem. Within the last sixty years, since the establishment of the society, 25,000 people have been converted to the Christian religion.

THE Roman Catholics have at Sikawny, a few miles from Shanghai, China, a large and fine mission property. A correspondent on a visit to the mission in August last found there the bishop and some sixty foreign priests who were spending a month together preparatory to their winter's campaign. After mentioning the fact he very properly asked: "If Rome can furnish a bishop and sixty European priests for one province, shall not every American church send out as many for the eighteen principal provinces of this great empire?"

THE Abbe Deramey has written a letter giving an account of the condition and prospects of the Alt Catholic movement in the Swiss Jura. He says: "In spite of innominous pamphlets, in spite of a thousand venomous insinuations, in spite of threats, menaces, and even actual violence, our churches are filled, our catechizings well attended, we dispense the sacraments, and we fulfill, both inside of the church and outside, all the official duties of the religious Catholic life. They have now twenty-one cures, and the number of worshipers increases with the installation of each new cure."

GERMAN METHODISM, METHODIST E. CHURCH (NORTH,) IN TEXAS.—The following table gives the summary of statistics of the work, as reported last year, in connection with the German district of the Texas Conference, and this year at the first session under the new Conference organization:

THE presbytery of Egypt transacts its business and keeps its records in the Arabic language. At the late meeting there were present, 11 members of presbytery, eight ministers (six of whom were missionaries, and two natives,) and five native elders. The committee appointed to translate the Book of Discipline reported the translation of the three parts known as "Form of Government," "General Administration," and "Book of Discipline," at the same time suggesting that a copy of the translation in writing would be given to each congregation, to be corrected and returned at the next annual meeting. A call from the Cairo congregation for Mr. Ibrahim Yusef to become their pastor was presented to him, and, after considerable deliberation, was accepted.

THE new church edifice for Rev. Dr. John Hall, now in course of erection at the corner of Fifth avenue and Fifty-Fifth street, will, when completed, be the largest Presbyterian church in the United States, if not in the world. The ground alone cost $350,000, and the building, it is estimated, will cost $500,000 more. This is a large outlay; but a much larger building than the one now occupied by this congregation was rendered necessary by the remarkable success which has attended Dr. Hall's preaching during the six years that he has been officiating in this city. His present church, at the corner of Fifth avenue and Nineteenth street, is altogether too small to accommodate the crowds that flock to hear him. In the afternoon, as well as in the morning, of every Sabbath day the pews not only are filled, but camp-chairs have to be placed in the aisles, and still many people are obliged to go away, not being able to find even standing-room. We think, therefore, that Dr. Hall's people, who have among their number many of our wealthy and influential citizens, acted wisely in taking measures to extend their pastor's influence. A congregation with a building that seats but a little over one thousand has no right to monopolize the services of such a man as Dr. Hall. It is expected that the new building will be ready for occupancy next November.—New York Times.

A REFORMED Episcopal church has been formed at Moncton, in New Brunswick. The members of the new organization put forth the following declaration: "We, whose names are hereunto appended, in humble reliance upon almighty God, do hereby now declare our separation from the Episcopal Church of New Brunswick, presided over by the Right Rev. Judin, Lord Bishop of Fredericton, and that we unite with the Reformed Episcopal Church of America, the Right Rev. George David Cummins, D. D., presiding bishop." The Rev. Edmund D. Neill, president of MacAlister College, in Minneapolis, and a Presbyterian, has also applied to his presbytery to be transferred to the Reformed Episcopal Church. The change of denominational relations will not it is said, affect Mr. Neill's official connection with the college. In New York steps were taken toward the formation of the First Reformed Episcopal church, at Steinway Hall, a few Sundays ago. More than one hundred persons tarried after the services to take part in the organization. Bishop Cummins stated that two churches would soon be established in Philadelphia and one in Brooklyn.

THE BIBLE IN BENGAL.—A decision of the Bengal government in favor of Bible circulation in that immense presidency, numbering sixty-five millions, has been just given by the Lieutenant Governor, Sir George Campbell. It is addressed to the convener of the committee of the Calcutta Bible Society, and is to the following effect: "Sir, with reference to the Rev. J. E. Carlyle's letter dated July 16, 1862, offering to supply copies of the Bible to the libraries of all the schools and colleges in Bengal, I am to convey the thanks of the Lieutenant Governor for the society's offer. The Bible is already in the library of some government schools and colleges; but as government has no specific information whether it is supplied in all, the director of public instruction will be requested to assist you in distributing English vernacular copies of the Bible to all government schools and colleges, if you think proper to supply them. The dispatches of the home government quoted by you plainly lay down that the Bible should be kept in the libraries of government schools and colleges." The only exception made to this general principle by the government is in reference to the village pathshalas or primary school, where "it is feared" by the government that a general distribution might "arouse suspicion, and do little good."

MR. SPURGEON AND HIS WORK.—The editor of the Western Christian Advocate, in a conversation with Bishop Foster, elicited some highly interesting information concerning the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon and his work. The editor says: "Conversing a morning or two since with Bishop Foster, about religious matters in London, he mentioned the work accomplished by Mr. Spurgeon. In seventeen years Mr. Spurgeon had received thirteen thousand persons into his church on profession of faith, had erected thirty-six chapels in the metropolis, and supplied the same with ministers trained in the college of his own founding and managing. There were over sixty young men at this moment studying for the ministry under his oversight. At first sight, said the Bishop, the face of Mr. Spurgeon repels; but on a moment's conversation that impression vanishes, and you feel as if in the presence of a friend who has known you for years, and who is deeply interested in everything that concerns yourself. In reading the Scriptures, before preaching, Mr. Spurgeon indulges in words of comment and application; 'and nothing,' said Bishop Foster, 'could be fresher or more pertinent. Persons who might not be interested in his sermon have their eyes and ears intent during the reading. But perhaps the crowning peculiarity of Mr. Spurgeon,' continued the Bishop, 'is his gentle, genial and even tender and pathetic tones in delivering the gospel message, and in his power of personal recognition. There is scarcely a man in all of his regular congregation, aggregating nearly seven thousand hearers, whom he does not know personally. To a great extent he can call them by name, and as to their temporal and spiritual condition he needs not that any one should inform him.' Bishop Foster visited Mr. Spurgeon in his study twice, three years intervening between the visits. On the second call Mr. Spurgeon gave him an instant recognition, called him by name, inquired after matters in New York, and exhibited the liveliest interest in the object of his visit to England. 'Parting with me on the occasion of my first call,' said the Bishop, 'Mr. Spurgeon said: "Go and tell them—the ministers of the Wesleyan Conference—to revive the spirit of Wesley."' His spirit was that of one intently anxious to multiply and strengthen the hands and hearts of such as sought the conversion and salvation of the masses of people.'"

Religious Awakenings.

In the North and West extensive revivals are prevailing. The number of conversions reported weekly is large, amounting altogether to many thousands. In Scotland also, where even Whitefield's fervid eloquence failed to arouse much enthusiasm, there have been remarkable demonstrations of power. In our Northern States the winter is the season of comparative leisure, and proves most opportune for special and protracted efforts. Every winter the results are considerable, but the present season has been marked by an extraordinary harvest. Some peculiar measures have been resorted to by such noted revivalists as Hammond and Moody. The men and their expedients are severely criticised and condemned by some, and highly lauded and commended by others. We are too far from the scenes of their labors to judge, and those who are on the ground may need time to reach just conclusions. If the people are converted, and the churches truly and spiritually revived, it must be God's work. We do not understand, however, that the prevailing revivals are generally conducted by so-called revivalists, or that they are the result of unusual and exceptional expedients. By far the greater proportion of converts are led to Christ by the pastors of the churches through the ordinary means of preaching and the prayer meeting.

In the South the churches are moving on with no unusual degree of interest. We do not hear of anything extraordinary in the way of revivals. In our own denominational bounds the state of religion is above the average, souls are being converted, and members received, but no extraordinary awakenings are reported. Last summer and fall the revivals in the South were scarcely less among us than those which are now taking place in the North and West. This year we should look for still greater things. There are means to the end. Holiness in the church is perhaps the greatest. A high state of spirituality in believers is almost certain to manifest itself in the conviction of sinners, and a deep and earnest inquiry on the part of the ungodly. In reference to new and sensational methods, there is the test of fruits. If we have fallen into a stupid and dead way, and the usual service and preaching seem to put people to sleep, or fail to interest them in the things pertaining to their salvation, something should be done at once. More secret prayer, closer communion with God, and the fresh anointing of the Holy Spirit, would help the preacher even more than expedients; and the good brethren and sisters, who are longing for times of refreshing, might break up the monotony of a sleepy formality by realizing that the kingdom is within them. But variety, novelty, anything to stir up the lukewarm, so we are sure that our methods are edifying and in harmony with the methods and operations of the Holy Spirit. That either Christ or Paul would have conducted meetings as some of our modern revivalists do is doubtful, but it is certain that the great Head of the church blesses and sanctifies means which many tolerably good people are ready to condemn.

Our old Methodist way, faithfully worked, is good and successful. The altar exercises, calling penitents forward for special prayer, and singing and praying with them till they find peace and assurance, have been the life of the church. In some cases possibly this usage has so far been discontinued that the membership has grown rusty, and the preacher scarcely has the courage to call for mourners. Herein let us walk in the old paths, and stick to the methods which have largely kept our church from the encroachments of formality, and from dying of respectability and stagnation. There is nothing like a Methodist altar, or, if the expression be liked better, "mourners' bench," to take the starch out of the preacher, and to bring the church into close quarters with the enemy. As a matter of drill, and as a means of keeping up the aggressive and working spirit of Christians, it is invaluable.

Some men may be peculiarly qualified for revival work, but every preacher is called to save souls. He may be more of a revivalist than he supposes if he will pray for the gifts of the Spirit and preach for the immediate conversion of sinners. Let him cast his net in faith, expecting to draw it in not empty. Let him plead with his God for the power, and let him aim at this one thing, and he will be more than a mere sermonizer—he will be a soul-saver. Every Christian may be in some measure a revivalist, and should be. Only let him realize his mission and believe, and work for it, and the fire will break out and run swiftly.

College of Mineria.

OTHER SCHOOLS AND FOUNDATIONS.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 14, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: On Saturday last a friend who could talk Spanish fluently accompanied me to the college in which those scholars who have passed a favorable examination in the public schools take a scientific course and finish their education. This structure is directly in front of our Capilin, one square off. It occupies about half the square on which it is built; is of gray stone, and of fine architectural design. You enter first into a large court, which is surrounded with fifteen or twenty massive pillars supporting arches and galleries. The main stairway going up from the court to the halls and corridors above is worthy of the Florentine Cosmo. From the wide porches there are entrances to the different apartments, over which are written the names, "Higher Mathematics," "Physics," "Chemistry," "Astronomy," "Engineering," "Geology," "Mineralogy," etc. The professor of chemistry, meeting us, was very attentive, provided us with the janitor, and in company with four or five students we were shown all over the institution. I was not prepared to find anything so extensive and thorough in this part of the New World. In the astronomical department they have six telescopes, one of them as powerful as that of the Smithsonian Institute, several meridian instruments, a very fine observatory, from which we looked out upon the sublimest plain, lake and mountain scenery which the world affords. I noticed in the department of mechanics three steam engines, one locomotive, besides a vast supply of all the ordinary apparatus. In natural philosophy there was an electric glass plate five feet in diameter, an excellent spectroscope, and five or six theodolites; in geology and mineralogy a large cabinet of specimens; in the meteorological room all the modern appliances. Several hundred thousand dollars must have been expended in these apartments alone. The laboratory was furnished with some twenty distinct fire-places for the use of students. I walked through it all, thinking of Centenary. Oh, for a little of this surplus wealth of apparatus! By the by, I notice that at a meeting of the friends of Agassiz it was resolved, as a monument to his memory, to endow the department of natural history in Harvard College with $300,000, and that $60,000 were subscribed on the spot! Why is it that so many of the princely friends of education seem to be in that end of the country? When shall we have not the luxuries of appliance, but the bare necessaries to present to the young men of the South, who wish to be educated at home, and of Methodism, who wish to present their powers to their own people.

The government offers to the students of the "Mineria" six prizes. Those who distinguish themselves are furnished with $3,000 each, in order that they may spend two years abroad perfecting themselves in science. Two go to England, two to Germany and two to the United States this year and each year.

In connection with this college are the law, medical and art schools. The law course is very complete, requiring six years to master it fully. The medical also presents superior advantages, and the one of fine arts is all that could be desired. The common school tributary to these finishing departments consists of thirty-five professors. Scholars are in attendance five years. The building, St. Alphonso, is an immense affair, its front occupying a whole square. Near this building is another very large establishment for females, and just beyond one for the blind. These do not include some twenty-two Lancasterian schools, which are independent of government aid. Then there are one or two immense foundations which have been endowed by benevolent individuals—one for orphan girls, which is nearly as extensive as St. Alphonso. Only this latter supplies everything that may be needed—board, clothing, etc. Every ten girls have a matron, and have a distinct parlor and mess-room. Of this last I have only learned through the Hon. Mrs. Foster. It has an endowment of $3,000,000. It will be seen from this that the Mexicans appreciate the education of children. This immense power was once in the hands of the Jesuits, but not so now. If they are here they are deeply disguised. What an opening does this body of youth present to the churches who seek to inform the minds of the people with the truth as it is in Christ. Shall it grow up and develop without the knowledge of God's word? Can the truths of science, the graces of a cultivated literary taste or the pursuit of fine art satisfy these spirits which were made for communion with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ?

A people can never be too intelligent for Protestantism. We are not afraid of the clash of schools or the force of reason, but only ask that the New Testament may be opened and studied under the full blaze of all knowledge; that it may be analyzed and sifted to the last word; that its pure and lofty spirit may have opportunity to mix with all that is true or noble or lovely in every region of thought or discovery, and leaven the whole. The apostle planted himself first of all in the centers of the most refined and thoughtful people the world then knew—at Athens, Ephesus, Corinth and Rome—knowing that Christianity was eminently suited to guide and control those who were inquiring after "the good," "the true" or "the beautiful." And it is in this point of view that Mexico promises a quicker and larger harvest than those uncivilized and unrefined races which are also open to missionary effort.

Catechisms and Institutes.

MR. EDITOR: While, with Bro. Richardson, I believe we need a more exhaustive work on systematic theology, yet I cannot agree with what seems to be his opinion, that Wesley, Clarke, Fletcher, etc., can be compressed into a volume or two of two or three hundred pages. These works are good, and will always be so. Mr. Wesley will be read a hundred years hence with more interest than he is read now; and the time is coming when he will be regarded as the grandest uninspired man the church has ever produced. Let the galaxy remain entire and stand just as it is. There is none more brilliant in all history. Neither does the church nor the age demand any new doctrine. I hope the progress some of our people boast so much about is not for a moment, by a solitary man, thought to embrace the notion that as a church we imagine we have improved on the doctrinal teachings of our fathers, or desire in the least to modify them. Their doctrines will never need change, for they came from God, and are as old as prophets and apostles. The divine origin of Christianity, however, has not shielded it, but rather invited assault. Our fathers contended for "the faith delivered," and did their work like true men. But they met the attacks, as the attacks were then made. They answered the arguments as the arguments were then urged. These arguments have always been drawn from certain views of the accepted philosophies of the day, and the answers to them have mainly come from the same sources. Consequently, as the philosophies have changed, the field of conflict has changed—the weapons of both assault and defense have been recast. Hence, while the truth has ever remained the same, the battle has raged all around it as a stationary citadel. Infidelity has a history, just as astronomy has a history, and a most wonderful and instructive one it is. During the last half century the philosophies—physical and metaphysical—have made amazing revolutions. Psychology, criticism, chemistry and philology perhaps more than all others. Infidelity has sought to buttress itself on these, and from this basis to destroy the temple of truth. True, these objections may not be altogether new, but they are in new forms, and are laid with so much scientific shrewdness, and pressed with such brazen impudence and show of learning as to appall and overawe and unsettle the faith of many. Inasmuch, then, as they are put in the light of facts and principles established, or supposed to be established by modern science, is it not proper, nay, is it not the duty of the church to resist them in the light of the same facts and principles? They are contained in nearly all the higher literature of the day, and have, through the popular literature, made their way down to the popular mind. They are not hailed to the Universities of England, Germany, France and New England. They are at work everywhere. Any preacher can, with little trouble, find them working their mischief in almost any congregation; and he is compelled to meet them, whether he will or not. But answers to these new forms of infidelity are not found stated, specifically, clearly and fully, in our standard commentaries and Institutes. Yet it is just these answers, specific and satisfactory, that many of us need, that we may be workmen not ashamed. Should not the young preacher know these objections—their weight, strength and particular purpose—and be able to remove them when asked to do so? By all means; and this knowledge should be obtained from a text-book stamped with the distinct, broad imprimatur of Methodism. Our fathers replied not only to the falsehoods of avowed infidels like Hume, but also to errors of doctrine held by other churches—true churches and false. And from them we learned both the errors and their answers, as they were then stated. Such a book we need now to meet the same kind, not the same form, of error and falsehood.

Our church (and I may include the Northern Methodist also) has produced a very considerable literature of a certain sort—short little commentaries, books on baptism, lectures, sermons, essays on morality and church economy, biographies and the like. These books have done as good service as such could do. But very few of them indeed can live more than a day. Since our founders and fathers gave us their definitions, expositions and apologies, nothing really great has come from American Methodism. This is a very remarkable fact, when we consider the number and talents and zeal of our membership and ministry. And yet it could hardly have been otherwise. There are the best reasons in the world why this fact should have been just as it is—why we should not have created a literature, high, broad, profound and permanent.

Now neither the books we have made nor those we have inherited fully supply the present demands made upon our ministry by the church and the world. We are compelled to go outside of Methodism to furnish ourselves. The Southern Review is all we have of the kind of reading I am speaking about. But while this is a very excellent paper, deserving all praise and all patronage, yet it is plainly incapable of taking the place of a text-book in the hands of young preachers.

I do not know that it is in the line of General Conference business to write such a work, or to have it written, but I do feel that if by any means such a treatise, say as that lately issued by Dr. Hodge, of Princeton, on systematic theology, could be given to our preachers, it would add greatly to our efficiency. If we had just such a discussion from the standpoint of Methodism for our preachers, and a well-digested and suitable series of doctrinal catechisms in the hands of our Sunday school teachers, then it seems to me we would "hold fast the form of sound words," "and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness and fear."

Yours, etc., J. W. RUSH.

MOBILE, March 3, 1874.

Nuptial Alliance of England and Russia.

The Duke of Edinburg and the Russian Grand Duchess were married according to the forms of the Greek Church, and again according to the marriage service of the English Established Church. After performing the latter ceremony Dean Stanley preached a sermon, of which the following is the conclusion:

It is now nearly eight hundred years since the last nuptial alliance between the royal houses of England and of Russia, when, in the dim twilight between history and fable, the greatest and best of the early Princes of Muscovy, Vladimir Mononuchus, wooed and won the love of the Princess Gytta, the daughter of King Harold, the last of the Saxons. How little could either monarch then have pictured the world-wide progress which each people would have made before another prince and another princess of either realm should cement by a sacred family union the union of two countries? That the small island on the confines of the Western Ocean, struggling with difficulty to hold its own against invaders from every quarter, should have been made the mistress of the seas, and holds the gorgeous East in fear; that the barbarous principality in the center of the wild Sclavonic forests should have grown up into the mighty civilized empire which now almost joins hands with the descendants of the distant Anglo-Saxon race, alike in the heart of Asia and on the borders of America! What a prospect of possible greatness, of infinite advance in the ages yet to come, is suggested by that retrospect of the ages that are past! And in proportion to the grandeur achieved by the two nations which thus once more approached each other is the importance of any event which permits this mutual understanding and love. They have known each other in war—both as friends and foes. With chivalrous respect they have seen and tried each other's strength beside beleaguered fortresses and on hard-won battle-fields. They have each listened to the lisping accents of each other's literature and science. Their commerce and their enterprise have embraced the world; their churches have exchanged a friendly message, and breathed many a kindly hope for the great "hereafter," which, if each be true to itself, assuredly awaits them both. And now comes that more general, genial, cordial union, which brings the two nations, as it were, face to face and hand to hand, in the plighted troth of those whom each regards as its living representative. Had it been possible in those distant days for Rocci, the old sea king, first founder of the Russian empire, or, in the later days, for Peter, its mighty renovator, to have chosen the future destiny of one of the daughters of their race, they would have rejoiced that the alliance should have been formed with a sailor prince, the pride of that gallant profession which was to that early chief, and yet more to that wonderful creator of the Russian navy, so deep, so delightful an interest. Had Alfred the Great looked onward for a partner who should cheer and ennoble the career of the first and only English prince, the only one of all the lengthened line who, coming to man's estate, has borne that glorious name—he, the wisest and best of England's kings, would have welcomed with no ordinary gladness, in this union of the West and the East, the advancement of those designs which he acknowledged so far beyond his age, for bringing his western Anglo-Saxon realm into contact with the distant races of Asia; he would have blessed the day which would give an additional pledge of peace and good will among the foremost nations and the foremost churches of Christendom.

May the blessing of England, as she is represented this day in this long-established seat of English piety in Russia, descend on the union which we trust shall within this week be accomplished! May the touching farewells from the shores of the Neva be echoed by the cordial welcome from the shores of the Thames to her whose very bearing and continuance shall forever remind us of the tender love which has watched over her in this her native land, and will follow her in her adopted home! That was an affecting and all-sufficing consolation with which the Israelite mother in old times gave her "one only child" to the young traveler that came by the angel's guidance to seek his bride in a distant land. "Behold," she said, "I commit my daughter unto thee of special trust." Of special trust, indeed, is the treasure thus given to our honorable keeping. May every Englishman and English woman, whose hearts are touched by the thoughts of this week, feel bound, so far as in them lie, to do their utmost to make the future worthy of the promise of this magnificent beginning! May the benediction of both churches and both countries rest on the coming destiny of these two youthful lives henceforth, as we trust, to be united in the indissoluble bond of a common and ever-increasing interest in the same works of noble and precious purpose; the same keen pursuit of all things pure and true, lovely and of good report; in the constant reaching forward after the high and holy purpose, whereby alone families are blessed, and kingdoms established, and nations exalted!

LAST HOURS OF REV. EMILE F. COOK.—The early hour of going to press last week, says the New York Christian Advocate, prevented us from giving more than a brief notice of the death of Rev. Emile F. Cook, president of the French Wesleyan Conference. A friend writes us from Paris, under date of February 2:

"For several weeks after his return to Paris he was confined to his bed under medical treatment, and was then ordered to the south of France as a means likely to promote his recovery. Accordingly he and Mrs. Cook went to Hyeres, where they have been staying the last five or six weeks; but while he sought the benefit of the change, he went to die. Last Thursday he passed quietly away.

"It seems he had risen in the morning, and had partaken of his dejeuner, when he said to his wife: 'I am very tired; I am leaning on Jesus; I want to go to sleep.' And as she was assisting him back to his couch he fell asleep in Jesus, and now slumbers in anticipation of a brighter morn. The funeral takes place to-day at Nimes. A deputation has been sent by the Evangelical Conference in Paris to attend it, and a service will also be held at the same time in the chapel at Les Ternes, where Mr. Cook had been the pastor for the last eight years. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss.

To the Louisiana Conference.

Conference, by resolution, directed the preachers to take a collection for expense of delegates to General Conference during the month of March, and to forward the same to R. J. Harp, New Orleans.

LAY DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.—I have important documents to send to the lay delegates to the General Conference, but do not know the address of only a few of them. Will each one please send me his address?

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

Mississippi Conference.

A resolution was passed at the last session of the Mississippi Conference requesting preachers in charge to take up collections, during the months of March and April, to defray the traveling expenses of the delegates to the General Conference, and to send the money to the delegate most convenient to them. It is important that the collection for delegates in this and all of the Conferences should be attended to at once. Every pastor should present the subject to his congregations, and forward the funds immediately.

MR. WILLIAM WALKER left last week for Baton Rouge, whither he goes to assist Prof. W. H. N. Magruder in the Baton Rouge Collegiate Institute. Mr. Walker is the son of Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., a graduate of the Southern University of Alabama, and a refined and cultivated Christian gentleman, as well as a most competent teacher. The Picayune, of which he was for some time one of the writing editors, in its issue of March 5, says:

Mr. William Walker left this city yesterday for Baton Rouge, where he will reside in the future, devoting his attention to the cause of education.

Our friend Walker, who has for some time past been connected with the press of this city, is a smooth and graceful writer. A scholar endowed with a clear and vigorous intellect, he has wielded his pen in defense of patriotism, truth and right, of which he has been a faithful and consistent champion.

In the halls of the college, in the ranks of the Confederate army and in the editorial sanctum he has, in every instance, justified the confidence and trust reposed in him.

HONORS TO COMMODORE M. F. MAURY.—On Friday, February 27, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, the General Assembly of Virginia passed resolutions expressing concurrence in the design of certain distinguished individuals in Europe to build a lighthouse on the coast of Brazil as a tribute to the memory of the late Commodore Matthew Fontaine Maury. One of the resolutions reads:

"That in the opinion of the General Assembly of Virginia it is in every way fitting that the nations of the earth who go down to the sea in ships should unite in paying tribute to the memory of the author of the wind and current charts, which, while they were given without price, have saved millions of dollars to commerce annually, and have laid the maritime world under obligation to their illustrious author; that the Governor be and he is hereby requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions on parchment to the Royal Geographical Society of England."

The Richmond Whig, in indorsing the resolutions, hopes that the action of the Legislature will be followed by contributions of the citizens of Richmond, leading merchants and bankers to raise a fund at once, and in time to accompany the copy of the resolutions.

DEATH OF A PROMINENT WESLEYAN MINISTER.—The Rev. George Scott, D. D., chairman of the Edinburg and Aberdeen district, died February 1. He had been in the ministry a little over forty-three years, the first twelve of which were spent as missionary in Sweden. He long served, with marked ability, as chairman of districts, and had been president of two colonial Conferences. His illness lasted several weeks, during which he showed the greatest patience. His feelings were not ecstatic but rather those of quiet and peaceful assurance. He said himself: "I have not ecstasy; but the Rock is firm, and I feel I am upon that Rock." He quoted, with great emotion, the words:

He calls a worm his friend;
He calls himself my God;
And he shall save me to the end,
Through Jesus' blood.

On one occasion, when those around him had thought him asleep, on opening his eyes he said: "I have had an hour of sweet communion with Jesus." Nor were such expressions only occasional, but frequent. They illustrated the constant tone of his spirit during that lengthened illness.—New York Christian Advocate.

KNOXVILLE.—The revival at Broad Street, Knoxville, says the Holston Methodist of February 28, is still going on. It is a work of great power. Between forty and fifty have embraced religion, and up to Sabbath last Bro. French had received into the church thirty-three persons. Bro. W. C. Carden, of Athens, was with him at last accounts.

There is also an extraordinary work of grace going on in the First Presbyterian church, Rev. James Park, pastor. He has recently been assisted by Rev. G. A. Caldwell, of Bristol. We should have stated that the services are union as between the First and Second Presbyterian churches. A greater seriousness than usual is prevailing in Knoxville.

BRO. DAVES' friends must remember that to receive and answer a letter costs him fifty cents in specie. The ten cents required by the United States does not meet the Mexican postage, which is twenty-five cents specie for each half ounce. He would like to receive letters from all his many friends, but they ought to inclose twenty-five cents (currency) additional postage.

A VERY modest reviewer of Strauss' last book says: "We venture to ask, however, whether anything is gained by eliminating God and immortality?" "With equal diffidence," says the Christian Register, "we venture to reply: Not much."

The Bible in Foreign Lands.

JAPAN.—Our readers will be glad to know that the work of Bible translation is going forward in Japan. As is, we suppose, well known, the gospels by Matthew, Mark and John have been already printed; Luke is ready, and at the last accounts the blocks for printing were in process of preparation. Two editions of Mark have been printed, two of John and one of Matthew, while portions of them have been sent to Nagasaki, Kobe, Ozaka and Yeddo. The Old Testament is in the translators' hands, several books of Moses being ready for final revision.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The reports from Honolulu show continued and increasing demand for the Bible. Rev. J. F. Pogue, under date of November 24, returns thanks for grants of funds for printing Micronesian Scriptures, and gives directions about finding more Bibles. He adds: "We have a constant call for the Bible in the Hawaiian language. One of the island associations voted at its last meeting to canvass its field to ascertain the destitution of the word of God." He speaks favorably also of the Samoa or Navigators' Islands, which have never been so united as at present. The people have never been in a more hopeful condition, socially and politically.

WEST INDIES.—Porto Rico.—We have still hopeful indications from this island. A gentleman from whom we have heard before, still sends us encouraging statements. A desire for improvement among the people creates an appetite for the Holy Scriptures.

MEXICO.—Matamoras.—We continue to receive encouraging reports from Mr. Samuel A. Purdie, of the Friends' mission in Mexico. He meets with opposition from the priests, as might be expected, yet the work of Bible distribution goes on. Extracts of a letter from him show the nature of his work and of the sort of opposition encountered. By the way, the expense of travel on the business referred to is not charged to the American Bible Society, which only grants the books. Mr. Purdie suggests the printing of portions of the Scriptures at Matamoras. His suggestion was approved, and a small donation was made by way of a trial. It was gratefully acknowledged. The Gospel by Matthew is to be printed first, and other portions may follow if the experiment is successful.

NORWAY.—A grant of $250 was made to the Methodist mission in Norway, for Bible work. By a communication recently received from Rev. Mr. Hansen, of Christiania, who gratefully acknowledges the receipt of the funds, we learn that this money is to be expended in the supply of poor children in Sunday schools. Under the mission there are seventeen Sunday schools, one hundred and twenty teachers, and one thousand and forty-four children. Mr. Hansen says: "We like to see every one of the children provided with the Bible, but, as many of the children are poor, they cannot pay for it, so that we have to give it to them either for half cost or for nothing."

CHILI.—Valparaiso.—We are glad to learn that there are some indications for good in Chili. In another place may be found some extracts, in evidence of this, from the Valparaiso Record. The reader will see that the Bible Society of that place is not inactive.

TURKEY.—We have a pleasant item of intelligence to report from Constantinople, which will be found in Mr. Bliss' letter. It is the printing of the Hebrew and Hebrew-Spanish Old Testament in parallel pages, for the Jews.

PORTO RICO.—Fajardo.—Our friend at Fajardo writes exultingly on receipt of the Bibles granted him for sale and distribution. He says at the close of a letter, dated December 10, 1873: "Hallelujah! Yesterday afternoon I had the joy not only to receive but to unpack the box of books, immediately sold three Bibles. Joy inexpressible! Only think—the first box of Bibles ever brought to Fajardo."—Bible Society Record.

Books and Periodicals.

BETHEL AND PENUEL. By Charles S. Robinson, D. D. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

A handsome volume of 317 12mo pages, and containing twenty-six sermons by the popular pastor of the Presbyterian Memorial Church, Madison avenue, New York. The sermons are all, about Jacob, and are pretty exhaustive of the facts and lessons afforded by this remarkable character and life. They are fresh, graphic and edifying. Price, sent by mail, $1.50.

FAVORITE HYMNS IN THEIR ORIGINAL FORM. Selected and verified by William Leonard Gage. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co., 1874.

It is well known that many of our best hymns have been changed or bridged by compilers and editors. This is a matter of great interest to see these hymns in their original form, as left by their composers. The author of this little volume has presented many of the choicest hymns of our language as originally written. This is a work of interest and worth doing. Price, $1.25, sent by mail.

THE POET'S GIFT OF CONSOLATION TO SORROWING MOTHERS. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

A beautiful volume, containing gems from many authors, adapted to purposes of consolation. Among them are some of the finest gems in our language. Price, $1.50, sent by mail.

WHY ARE NOT ALL PHYSICIANS HOMEOPATHISTS? is the title of a pamphlet by Dr. William H. Holcombe, of New Orleans. It is, of course, ably written, somewhat caustic, and very severe on our old school friends. But when doctors disagree, etc. We are obliged to the author for a copy of the work.

THE SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR for March has a full and varied table of contents. In addition to editorials, interesting answers to inquiries and original articles from correspondents, it contains "Prof. White's Analysis of Different Parts of the Cotton Plant," his "Analysis of Different Fertilizers," and copious extracts from "Dr. Pendleton's Report of Experiments, at Experimental Plat of University of Georgia," besides practical articles on the varied topics connected with the farm and garden. Terms, $2 a year. Address W. L. Jones, Athens, Georgia.

THE HOT SPRINGS AS THEY ARE is a stout pamphlet, by Charles Cutter, and giving all desired information about these renowned healing waters of Arkansas. We are indebted to Rev. I. Z. T. Morris for a copy.

GOOD THINGS for February has a good table of contents. Among other articles we note: Pawning To-Morrow to Enjoy To-Day, Sleeping Through the Winter, Learning Things Out of School, The Easter Daisy.

THE AMERICAN ARTISAN for March is, as usual, splendidly illustrated, and filled with the freshest items and articles on scientific and practical subjects. Published by Brown, Allen & Co., New York.

THE Minutes of the Mississippi Annual Conference, for the session held at Brandon, December 10–15, 1873, have been received. We are greatly obliged to Bro. H. Walter Featherstun for a copy.

WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT IN CASE OF ACCIDENT is the title of a little pamphlet issued by the Industrial Publication Company, New York. Everybody should read it.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for March has: The New Hyperion, Ferdinande Lesseps, Patience in Friendship, and other articles.

MOON'S BEE WORLD is an excellent monthly, devoted to bee culture. A. F. Moon & Co., publishers, Rome, Georgia.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the report of the board of administrators of the Charity Hospital of New Orleans for 1874.

OUR Sunday school periodicals for March have been received. An excellent number all around.

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY for March is one of the best numbers of this excellent publication.

LITTLE CORPORAL for March has a fine table of contents, and is splendidly illustrated.

CHURCH'S MUSICAL VISITOR for February has a fine table of contents.

THE Terry Island Adventists are very much bothered to understand why the world did not come to an end upon the day which they appointed for that little event. Their newspaper organ "regards it as incomprehensible." "We do not know," says the editor, "why we are here today. We have reviewed the argument. We do not find a flaw in it." Then he candidly adds: "Perhaps we and our followers are the simple-minded, foolish people the world at large esteems us to be; perhaps our hopes are a mere dream." From which the Tribune concludes that this gentleman's head, at least, is rapidly becoming level.

DEDICATION.—On Sabbath, the twenty-second of February, says the Galveston Christian Advocate, we assisted in the dedicatory exercises of a new church on Washington street, Houston. It was dedicated on Washington's birthday, and will be known as the Washington Street church. The exercises were continued, and when we left the omens for good were most hopeful. The church is neat, tasteful, sufficiently commodious, and reflects credit on the zeal of the pastor, Rev. F. T. Mitchell, and the liberality of the people.

A REMARKABLE MAN, claiming to be the Messiah, has recently appeared in Arabia. He came forth from the desert, where he spent many years mortifying the flesh, and pretends to work wonders and performs miracles. He has a melodious voice, remarkably brilliant eyes and a fascinating appearance, and is winning followers.

THE American pilgrimage is to start in May. The men and women who go abroad on this errand are to visit "the Grotto of our Lady of Lourdes" in France, and then proceed to Rome. They take a first-class steamer and go comfortably, which is the most sensible thing about it.

NEARLY every Methodist Episcopal Church in Chicago is in a state of revival such as has not been enjoyed for years.

MARRIED.

JOHNSON—HILL.—At the late residence of Mr. Hubbard Hill, on the twenty-ninth of January, 1874, by Rev. Ira B. Robertson, Mr. B. C. Johnson to Miss Mollie Hill, all of Warren county, Mississippi.

BROWN—HOLLOMAN.—At the residence of the bride's father, T. R. Holloman, on the seventeenth of February, 1874, by Rev. Ira B. Robertson, Mr. Summerfield Brown, of Madison county, Mississippi, to Miss Mollie A. Holloman, of Yazoo county, Mississippi.

AMERICAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA.—By the politeness of John D. Scott, Esq., manager, No. 10 Carondelet street, we have been furnished with the twenty-fourth annual statement of the above company, showing its receipts during 1873 to have been $1,130,330.95, and its expenditures and losses $678,-075.55. Its total assets are $4,450,290.75. For further information apply to the public agent, as given in the advertisement referred to.

STATIONER, PRINTER AND BLANK-BOOK MANUFACTURER.—For finely executed job printing and promptness in filling orders, and cleverness in all respects, as a gentleman, citizen, printer and merchant, our readers will find no one to excel our worthy neighbor, Col. A. W. Hyatt, No. 38 Camp street. See his advertisement elsewhere.

COTTON AND SUGAR FACTOR.—We call attention to the card of Mr. Alph. Delblanc, No. 21 St. Louis street, engaged in the cotton, sugar and general commission business, and receiver of consignments of moss, wool, hides, chickens, eggs, etc.

DRY GOODS.—Among the enterprising mercantile houses on upper Magazine street is to be found that of Mrs. D. J. Loewenstein, No. 549, who proposes to sell at surprisingly low prices a fine stock of goods, now arriving.

FOR SALE.—The fine and eligible cigar factory, No. 47 Bienville street. It is offered for sale, consisting of extensive and valuable property, stock and fixtures. See advertisement.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

TO THE CONSUMPTIVE.—Let those who languish under the fatal severity of our climate through any pulmonary complaint, or even those who are in decided consumption, by no means despair. There is a safe and sure remedy at hand, and one easily tried. Wilbor's Compound of Cod Liver Oil and Lime, without possessing the very nauseating flavor of the oil as heretofore used, is endowed by the phosphate of lime with a healing property which renders the oil doubly efficacious. Remarkable testimonials of its efficacy can be exhibited to those who desire to see them. Sold by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston. mh12 lt

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL,

THIS MEDICINE, FOR THE CURE OF

DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA

and all diseases of the Bowels, is without exception the most valuable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most acute attacks. For infants its use is recommended in preference to the death dealing "Soothing Strups," etc. No house-hold should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.

A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from

Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis,

and all Pulmonary affections. It is especially adapted to the relief of Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat caused by excessive use of the voice. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Ball & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION,

Scrofulous and Tuberculous affections, Rickets and all complaints characterized by deficient nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.

This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is

Unrivaled as a Rubefacient,

and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the extremities should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

THE GREATEST

MEDICAL DISCOVERY

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases of thick thunderhead. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases in which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is

Raw and Inflamed,

your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fillers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful. As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,

au11 1y DONALD KENNEDY.

Price, $1.60 per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE BEST ADVICE THAT CAN BE given to persons suffering from

DYSPEPSIA, BILIOUS COMPLAINTS,

CONSTIPATION, COLIC, SICK HEADACHE,

Fever and Ague, Nervous Debility,

or of any disorder of the Stomach, Liver or Kidneys, is to tone, cleanse and regulate them by the use of

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills.

They act very mildly, yet thoroughly restore the functional action of the Digestive Organs and the Intestines, and renovate the whole system, imparting a good appetite and healthy assimilation of food. They produce neither Nausea, Griping nor Debility, and may be taken at any time, without change of diet or occupation.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

Dr Tutt's Hair Dye

possesses qualities that no other dye does. Its effect is instantaneous, and is so natural that it cannot be detected by the closest observer. Being harmless and easily applied, it is in general use among the fashionable Hair-Dressers in every large city in the United States. Price, $1 a box. Sold everywhere.

WATERING THE CHICKENS.

BY A. H. POE.

Close beside the rick she stands,
Little Quaker maiden sweet,
While the chickens thickly flock
Round the basin at her feet;
Now she strokes each feathered back
"Poor old Bristle, must thee fight?"
And a portly mother-hen
Gives a croak of faint delight.

Warmly wrapped in hood and plaid,
Bands of brown hair, smooth and bright,
Such a peaceful little face
Looks out on the world of white!
"Dickie, did thee freeze thy comb?
Stop thy crowding, Blackie, there;
Chickens must be kind and mild;
Dip thy bill, and say thy prayer."

Stiff and tame they drink their fill,
Shivering as the winds go by;
Even pompous Chanticleer's
Frozen into modesty.
"Farewell, Downy, farewell, Snuff,"
Beam her kind eyes beautiful,
As she turns toward the house,
And the skies are white as wool.

Little Corporal.

How to Make the Tears Come.

"Katie, what are you doing?"

"Reading, mamma."

"Well, I wish you would help me a little."

Katie laid down her book and went to her mother. She was only nine years old, but she was a great comfort, with her rosy, happy face, and willing little hands and feet. She found her mother now looking tired, and the baby she was holding crying with its might.

"Are you sick, mamma?" she asked.

"My head aches dreadfully, and the baby is so cross. Can you warm some milk for his bottle, and then go and see what has become of the children? They'll be sure to get into mischief if they're left with Bridget long."

Katie brought the warm milk, wet a cloth in cold water for her mother's head, and then ran down into the kitchen. There she found her little sister Georgia sailing chips in the water-pail, while baby Gretta sat on the floor in the pantry sucking the cork of the molasses jug.

"Come, Georgia and Gretta, I want you," said Katie. "Mamma says we may go and sit in the parlor, all by ourselves, and I will read you a story."

The children were always ready to go with Katie, and it was really quite a treat for them to sit in the best parlor. So Katie washed their faces and hands, and away they went full of glee.

For awhile they amused themselves by looking at the pictures and all the pretty things about the room. Then Katie drew two hassocks into the bay window for the children to sit on, and wheeled her own little easy-chair up in front of them.

"Now," said she, "I'm going to read you a story. It is about a beautiful queen who had her head cut off."

"Wid de scissors?" put in Gretta anxiously.

"No, indeed," said Katie. "They did it with a—with a—with some kind of a machine."

"Sewing machine?" remarked Georgia.

"Of course not," said Katie indignantly. "Her name was Mary, Queen of Scots, and her cousin wanted to kill her and be queen herself. Now keep still, and I'll read how they did it."

So Katie began to read. She was greatly interested in the book, and read it over and over again. But it was too hard for the little ones to understand very well, and she was greatly surprised to find that they had not even shed a tear at the most affecting part.

Georgia was peeping out of the window and Gretta was playing with the curtain tassels.

"Why, girls!" cried Katie, "don't you care a bit? I should think you'd feel bad enough to cry!"

"What about?" asked Georgia innocently.

"O, dear!" said Katie, "I'll begin back again, and when I come to the place for you to begin to feel bad I'll look up." So Katie began again, and when she looked up the children tried their best to feel badly, but they couldn't.

Georgia even giggled behind her apron; said Gretta suggested that Katie should cut their necks a little, just a little bit.

"I'll tell you what we'll do!" exclaimed Katie. "Sit still till I come back."

In a minute she came back with two onions, which she told the children to hold in their handkerchiefs.

"When I say, 'Now,'" said she, "you can rub them on your eyes."

The little ones waited anxiously for the word, and then rubbed their eyes with a will. Poor little Gretta, in her zeal, tumbled over her hassock.

And the tears! O, yes, there were plenty of them, to Katie's great dismay.

First came onion tears, and directly after it real ones. How the poor little red eyes ached! It took Katie a long time to comfort the children; but by tea-time they were as gay as ever. Katie thought she would never try onion tears again.—Youth's Companion.

THE TWO ROADS.—There is a place where two roads meet. One is broad and smooth, and leads gently down hill. At first it looks pleasant, and has trees to shade it and flowers in the hedge-rows, but by degrees the trees become fewer, the flowers disappear, the road goes down steeper and steeper, so that you find it harder and harder to turn back, and at last, if you go on, it becomes a straight, crumbling cliff, and you find out too late that the road leads nowhere but to destruction, and you slip or fall forward, and are dashed into the sea below.

The other road is so narrow that there is hardly room for two to go together, and it is rough at first and steep up-hill, and for a long way you will find few flowers in it; but if you will only walk on steadily a bit you will find it becomes less steep and rough, and there are flowers in plenty, and at the top of the hill you will see a beautiful house, with your Father in it, waiting to welcome you.

The broad road is the road to selfishness; the narrow road is the road to goodness. At first it seems easy and pleasant to be selfish, and hard and painful to be good. But selfishness leads to ruin in the end, while goodness leads us up to our Father in heaven.—Parables for Children.

BOYS, MIND YOUR COMMAS.—The comma, like the tongue, is a little thing, and, like it, will make good sense or nonsense, just according as it is used. Take, for instance, the old nursery rhyme. With the commas misplaced it is so nonsensical that it needs a commentary to explain it:

Every lady in the land
Has twenty nails on each hand,
Five and twenty on hands and feet;
This is true without deceit.

Alter the position of the commas and the meaning is clear:

Every lady in the land
Has twenty nails, on each hand
Five, and twenty on hands and feet;
This is true without deceit.

An auctioneer once advertised a lot of chairs which, he said, "had been used by school children without backs."—Youth's Companion.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Work for the Month.

We are passing into the month of March, one of the very busiest for the farmer. Planting has commenced in earnest, and the close attention of the farmer is required early and late.

COTTON.—In our work for February, and an article in our former number, we have given the mode of preparing for planting, and all that is necessary to mention here is, plant whenever the soil is in prime condition. Some of the first planting may be injured by frost, but then it will be time enough for replanting. It is far better to run this little risk and also take the chance of an early matured crop if it escapes frost.

CORN should now be planted for a full crop, and the soil be prepared as for cotton. Do not plant too thick, and do not drop more than three seeds in a hill. The distance has to be determined by the nature of the soil—strong soil will bear closer planting than poor. Pay particular attention to the covering, and have it not done too deep. Deep covering necessitates a longer time for the corn to appear above ground, and in wet weather subjects it to rot.

CANE must be planted whenever the soil is in condition. Have the ground thoroughly and deeply prepared.

RICE must be planted in the latter part of the month. Also it requires thorough tillage. It is planted on level ground, in drills eighteen inches apart, one bushel of seed to the acre.

SWEET POTATOES.—At the end of the month the slips are ready to be drawn from the lazy beds. Plant them in beds prepared as for cotton. If no rain falls, when it is desired to prick out the slips saturate them in a mixture of manure and water and plant late in the evening. They will grow as well as if planted in rain.

THE VEGETABLE GARDEN.—This month is the very busiest in the garden. You may continue to plant peas every ten days for a succession. Where the cabbage plants are large enough transplant them into rich and deeply cultivated land. Onions and leeks have to be sown. A few turnips may also be sown. Those who have neglected to do it earlier may plant Irish potatoes for family consumption. Carrots, parsnips, tomatoes and peppers must be sown. Melons to be sown in well-prepared, rich soil, and after coming up to be protected in cold nights. Cucumbers, okra, squash, pumpkins, beets, celery, spinach, all, to be sown. Where these vegetables have been sown last month they have to be thinned and cultivated.

Asparagus beds must be dressed, if not already done. Strawberries ought to be set out and old beds lightly cultivated.—Our Home Journal.

AN Irishman, while on his passage to England in search of harvest work, was observed to walk up and down the deck at a brisk pace, occasionally giving a look at the captain whenever he came in sight, as if to attract his observation. On being asked by the steward for his passage-money, when nearing the port of destination, Pat replied: "Arrah, honor, be aisy now; sure the master won't do such a dirty trick as charge a poor shearer who has walked all the way!"

"I SHOULD LIKE," said a French medical charlatan, "to place over the door of my surgery an inscription either in Latin or Greek, borrowed from one of the great authors." "Give Italian the preference," remarked one of his patients; "nothing can equal that verse of Dante's: 'Abandon hope, all ye who enter here.'"

GRACE is a glory militant, and glory is grace triumphant; grace is glory begun, glory is grace made perfect; grace is the first degree of glory; glory is the highest degree of grace.

TREATING THE WRONG DISEASE.

Many times women call upon their family physicians, one with dyspepsia, another with palpitation, another with trouble of the breast, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present, alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent doctors, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assigning them to be such, when in reality they are all symptoms caused by some uterine disorder; and while they are thus only able perhaps to palliate for a time, they are ignorant of the cause, and encourage their practice until large bills are made, when the suffering patients are no better in the end, but probably worse for the delay, treatment and other complications made, and which a proper medicine directed to the cause would have entirely removed, thereby instituting health and comfort, instead of prolonged misery.

From Miss Lorinda E. St. Clair, Shade, Athens county, Ohio, October 14, 1872:

"DR. R. V. PIERCE, BUFFALO, N. Y.: Your Favorite Prescription is working almost like a miracle on me. I am better already than I have been for over two years."

From Ella A. Schafer, Zanesville, Indiana, August 3, 1872:

"DR. PIERCE: I received the medicine you sent me and began using it immediately. As a result of the treatment, I feel better than I have for three years."

From Mrs. John K. Hamilin, Odell, Illinois, March 19, 1872:

"DR. PIERCE: The Favorite Prescription has done me good, which I am very thankful for."

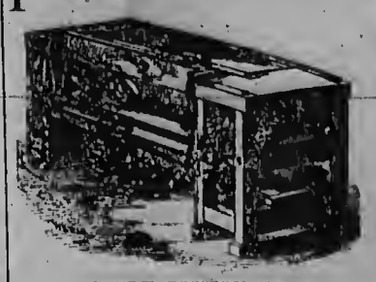
MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

IMPROVED



EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. It has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other-kinded gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

DR. WILLIAM HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS,

THE

GREAT AMERICAN CONSUMPTIVE REMEDY

Consumption is NOT an incurable disease. Physicians know it is of this fact. It is only necessary to have the RIGHT REMEDY, and the terrible malady can be conquered.

HALL'S BALSAM IS THIS REMEDY.

It breaks up the NIGHT SWEATS, relieves the OPPRESSIVE TIGHTNESS ACROSS THE LUNGS, and heals the lacerated and excoriated surfaces which the venom of the disease produces.

While Life Lasts There is Hope.

It may not be too late to effect a cure even after the doctors have given you up.

HALL'S BALSAM is sold everywhere, and may be had at wholesale of the Proprietors, JOHN F. HENRY, CURRAN & CO., at their Great Medicine Warehouse, 8 and 9 College Place, New York. Price, $1 per bottle.

HALL'S BALSAM is also a sure remedy for

COUGHS,
COLDS,
PNEUMONIA,
BRONCHITIS,
ASTHMA,
SPITTING OF BLOOD,
CROUP,
WHOOPING COUGH,

and all other diseases of the respiratory organs.

Also Proprietors of Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup, Carbolic Salve, Edey's Troches, Oxygenated Bitters, Mott's Liver Pills, etc.

Mobile	790
Florida	71
Texas	370
Total	14,780

On Saturday the market was quiet throughout the day, with light offerings, a very poor assortment and a slack demand, and while a large part of the business was at previous rates, the rest was at irregular and easier prices. Ordinary to strict ordinary sold at 11¼c., good ordinary at 12⅝, 13, 13⅛@13¼c., strict good ordinary at 13⅝@14⅛c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 14⅛c., low middling at 14⅝@14⅝c., strict low middling at 15@15¼c., and middling at 15¼, 15⅛@15⅜c. The falling off in the demand, which caused the unsatisfactory character and extent of the offerings. The sales were confined to 4,000 bales. On Monday, under an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool and ⅛c. at New York, the market opened with an active demand, and a fair business was done during the morning, partly at previous rates and partly at an improvement of ⅛c.—in some cases ¼c.—after which the movement continued animated, while factors met the demand more freely, enabling some buyers, who were unable to pay any higher rates, to go on at Saturday's currency. Upon the whole, however, the closing rates indicated a pretty general improvement of ⅛c., to which quotations were confirmed. The business embraced 7,550 bales. On Tuesday the demand subsided and continued slack throughout the day, the sales being confined to 4,400 bales at irregular prices, a small part of the business showing no variation, and the rest at a decline of ⅛c. and in some cases ¼c. from the figures realized on Monday.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 16,750 bales, against 17,100 for the corresponding time last week and 19,950 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,628,911 bales, against 935,448 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 325,467 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 43,481 to Great Britain, of 69,567 to France and of 24,251 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

Special Notices.

NOTICE.—To the Preachers of the Mobile District.—Our District Conference will embrace the third Sabbath in April, the services commencing on Wednesday night previous. It is hoped that there will be a general attendance. Bishop Marvin will be with us. I hope the brethren will have taken their collections for the expenses of the delegates to the General Conference before that time.

J. HAMILTON.

THE PREACHERS' MEETING of Meridian district will be held at Meridian, Mississippi, on the ninth of April, at nine o'clock A. M. Question for general discussion: "Do the Scriptures warrant the conclusion that an adult may pass through the process of regeneration without being conscious of it?" Itinerant and local ministers are requested to attend.

5 WILLIAM B. HINES.

DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—Bishop Marvin has given me notice that he will hold our District Conference, commencing April 10, at Gainesville, Alabama. The preachers in charge will please raise and bring with them the amounts assessed for the support of the Bishops.

WATERS' CONCERTO AND ORCHESTRAL ORGANS are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever made. The Concerto and Orchestral Stops are the best ever placed in any Organs. They are produced by an extra set of reeds, peculiarly voiced, the effect of which is most charming and soul-stirring, while the Imitation of the human voice is superb. These Organs are the best made in the United States.

WATERS' NEW SCALE PIANOS have great power and a fine singing tone, with all modern improvements, and are the best Pianos made. These Organs and Pianos are warranted for 6 years. Prices extremely low for cash, or part cash and balance in monthly or quarterly payments. Second-hand Instruments taken in exchange. Great inducements to the trade. PROSPECTUS

OF THE

General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR,
A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER,

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the Kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the Lives of the Bishops will be published in the DAILY; also a Pen-and-ink Sketch of the Members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the greatest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the master-minds of the church—questions in which every Methodist will feel the liveliest concern.

The DAILY will be a handsome sheet of four pages, of good size, printed on good paper, and in clear type; and neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it all that the church may desire.

The services of a competent reporter have been secured, and the subscribers may rely on receiving the earliest intellig

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1874. NO. 12.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Senator Sumner died at ten minutes before three this afternoon. Disease of the heart was the immediate cause of his death.

MEMPHIS, March 11.—The river came to a stand last night. Weather this morning clear and cool. As the river rose at Cairo yesterday a rapid decline is not looked for. A large portion of the finest cotton lands below here are under water, and owing to the heavy rains breaks are constantly occurring in the levees, especially between here and Helena, on both sides of the river.

NEW YORK, March 11.—Temperance meetings continue in Brooklyn. Another saloon-keeper was visited to-day by ladies. He expressed the determination to leave the business as soon as practicable. A series of mass meetings are to be held in different churches. One dealer in New York is reported to have given his word of honor that no more liquor would be sold by him. The stock on hand has been disposed of and the establishment closed.

VICKSBURG, March 17.—Telegrams just received here report that the Hard Times and Bolivar levees broke on Sunday night.

Bass levee is also broken.

No particulars have been received as to the extent of the breaks or of the measures adopted to avert disaster.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., March 17.—We have no positive information of the volcanic disturbance reported from Raleigh. It is reported from Ashville as being between that place and Old Fort, and not in the Bald mountain. The rumbling sound has been heard and felt frequently during the last two or three weeks for some distance in that vicinity.

RALEIGH, N. C., March 17.—Passengers from the West on this morning's train confirm the reports received of the rumbling noises and a general upheaving of Bald mountain in west Carolina. People living on and near the mountain are moving out, and a volcanic eruption is momentarily expected.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, March 11.—The report that General Jose Concha is to be appointed Captain General of Cuba, in place of General Jovellar, is confirmed.

General Morlones has resigned his command in the army of the north in consequence of illness.

Marshal Serrano has assumed supreme command of the forces operating against the Carlists in the north.

LONDON, March 11.—The Daily News and Telegraph give the following accurate account of the treaty of peace with the Ashantees:

The King agrees to pay to Great Britain a war indemnity of fifty thousand ounces of gold; renounces all claim to Adansi, Assin, Denkera, Akim and Wassaw; withdraws his forces from the parts of the coast belonging to or under the protectorate of Great Britain; undertakes to maintain a good road from Coomassie to the Prah river, and to protect merchandise transported over said road; will prohibit human sacrifices, and swears perpetual peace with England.

General Wolsley does not expect the entire amount of the indemnity will be paid, but regards the other stipulations of vastly greater importance, and more likely to be adhered to. The garrison will be maintained by the British at Prahsua.

VIENNA, March 12.—The Emperor Francis Joseph has authorized his government to assume a strong attitude against Ultramontane opposition to the ecclesiastical laws.

LONDON, March 12.—The Duke and Duchess of Edinburg made their entry into the metropolis to-day. The programme was strictly carried out, although snow fell from the beginning to the end of the ceremonies. The procession moved shortly after noon from Paddington station through Oxford and Regent streets to Buckingham Palace. The streets along the route were crowded with spectators. The houses along the route were liberally decorated, and the roadway was lined with soldiers and marines.

ROME, March 14.—The letter of the Pope to the bishops of Austria, exhorting them to combat the pending ecclesiastical bills in the Reichstadt, is dated the seventh instant. His holiness says: The measures are calculated to place the church in ruinous servitude; and takes occasion to renew his protest against the rupture of concord.

The Pope has also written to the Emperor Francis Joseph, personally adjuring him to protect the church within his dominions.

PARIS, March 15.—The Pays publishes correspondence which shows that the Empress Eugenie and her son have finally broken off relations with Prince Napoleon, because he refused to go to Chiselhurst on Monday next, the day the prince imperial arrives at his majority.

LONDON, March 16.—Sir Garnet Wolsley will go to Malta or Odeon to take the remains of Dr. Livingstone and escort them to England.

There was a great crowd of French people at Chiselhurst to-day to celebrate the eighteenth anniversary of the Prince Louis Napoleon. Over six thousand cards of admission were issued, and those to French people only. In the morning mass and thanksgiving services were held, after which the Duke of Padua addressed the prince in the name of persons present, congratulating him on having attained his majority.

The prince replied, returning thanks to his countrymen for their faithful remembrance of the late Emperor, and in conclusion said: "Despite the confidence inspired by the loyalty of MacMahon, an irresistible current of public opinion has pronounced in favor of a plebiscite. I am ready to accept its verdict." Great enthusiasm was manifested, and Camden House, the residence of the ex-empress and the prince, was gayly decorated.

VIENNA, March 17.—The Roman Catholic bishops in the Reichstadt threaten to withdraw if the passage of the ecclesiastical bill is pressed.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 10, via Havana, March 17.—A fearful outrage was perpetrated by a mob at Alhualulco, in the State of Jallsco, last Sunday. In the morning a priest delivered an incendiary sermon, in the course of which he advocated the extermination of Protestants. This so excited his hearers that a mob gathered in the evening and proceeded to the residence of John Stevens, a Congregational minister, sent out by the Boston Board of Foreign Missions, with cries of "Long live the priests." They broke into his house, and, seizing the clergyman, slashed his head to a jelly and chopped his body into pieces. They afterward sacked the house and carried off everything of value. After much delay the riot was suppressed by the local authorities. The government has sent a detachment of troops to the place. A rigid investigation has been set on foot, and orders have been issued for the arrest of all parties in Alhualulco and the neighboring town, Teshiru.

Holmes' Valley Circuit, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I find a large membership, with some intelligence, on this work, and a prospect for doing good. I am having some good meetings. There is considerable interest manifested in the church. I find the people kind and courteous, and lovers of Methodism. While we have some things to encourage us, we have many disadvantages to labor under. Our nearest express office is seventy-five miles from us. We cannot get postoffice orders in this country; so we are cut off from the Publishing House at Nashville. We have a goodly number of the New Orleans papers. I have some new subscribers. Hope to get more. This country, with its disadvantages, has many blessings. I feel that God is with me, and that is the best of all.

We have just organized a new church at Orange Hill, and expect a nice frame building to worship in. The people seemed encouraged. I write to let the public know that we are not at ease in Zion away down here in east Florida.

J. M. BROWN, P. C.

MARCH 2, 1874.

GRANT PARISH PRISONERS.—After three days' discussion and deliberation, the jury in the case against William Cruikshank and the other Grant parish prisoners failed to agree. At eight o'clock P. M. yesterday they were called into court, when they officially announced to the judge that there was no possibility of their ever coming to an agreement, except as to one, Alfred C. Lewis, whom they declared "not guilty." As to the others, this long case ends in a mistrial.

It is reported, on good authority, that the jury stood as follows with regard to the others: Nine for the acquittal of P. Lemoine, W. D. Irwin, A. P. Gibbon, D. Lemoine and C. Pena; eleven for the acquittal of William Cruikshank, Thomas P. Hickman and J. P. Hadnot.

The prisoners were all remanded to prison, on the motion of District Attorney Beckwith, who announced that there were other indictments pending against them.—Picayune, March 17.

SOUTHWESTERN BURNED.—Boat and Cargo a Total Loss.—As we went to press yesterday afternoon, says the New Orleans Picayune of March 18, the news came that the Southwestern, which left here last Thursday for Red river, took fire at Colfax at three o'clock on Sunday morning and was entirely destroyed, boat and cargo proving a total loss. She had at the time of the accident a heavy freight list, also many passengers, all of whom, together with the officers and crew, escaped unhurt. In the little time allotted for escape hardly any baggage could be saved, so that a number of her passengers failed to save their clothing.

BASS LEVEE BROKEN.—A dispatch was received yesterday by Mr. J. F. Aicklen, at the Cosmopolitan, stating that Bass levee, three miles below Lake Providence, Louisiana, had broken on Saturday last, and was then open for a space of two hundred yards.

Lake Providence is in Carroll parish, next to the Arkansas line, and about four hundred and seventy-five miles distant from New Orleans.

THE Nashville Christian Advocate says: "The Hon. Robert Caruthers has purchased Corona, Lebanon, Tennessee, for the Cumberland University. We understand it is to be so enlarged as to adapt it to all the wants of that institution, which, by the way, has added to its endowment in money and other property during the past year $75,000. We congratulate our Cumberland Presbyterian friends on these omens of prosperity."

OBSERVED duties maintain our credit; but secret duties maintain our life.

The Southern Presbyterian and the Reformed Churches.

The committees of conference recently meeting in New York, instead of organic union, adopted a plan of co-operative alliance. We give the provisions of the plan, as published in the Southwestern Presbyterian:

1. With a view of expressing more emphatically the unity now existing, as well as promoting it still further, instead of the former system of delegates, a delegation, consisting of two ministers and two elders, shall be sent annually from the General Synod to the meeting of the General Assembly, and a similar delegation from the General Assembly to the meeting of the General Synod; which delegations shall be expected to sit and deliberate throughout the sessions of these bodies respectively, endeavoring especially to further all those interests in which the two churches co-operate.

2. A vacant congregation shall be at liberty to call a minister from either of the churches, according to the order established in that church to which he may be called, and he shall conform to the order of the church to which he is transferred.

3. When particular churches of either body are in locations much more convenient for a connection with a classis or presbytery belonging to the other, it is recommended to them to seek a transfer in such a way as shall be in conformity with the regulations of both denominations, and whenever it may be deemed advisable for students of theology of either body to pursue their studies in institutions of the other it will be regarded with hearty approbation by both. And students who have pursued a full course of study in the theological seminaries of either church shall be placed on an equal footing before the presbyteries and classes of the other.

It is believed that a valuable co-operation may be secured in regard to most of those schemes of benevolence in which both churches are engaged. As the extent to which this may be most judiciously carried can be ascertained only by careful conference and experiment, many of the details must be left for future agreement. The following is adopted as indicating what may be initiated at the present time:

(1.) In regard to foreign missions. We express the idea that it will probably most promote the glory of God that there should not be separate denominational interests permanently established where our missions are or may be planted within reach of each other, but that the establishment of one united church should be encouraged. It deserves to be carefully considered whether in the whole work of foreign missions a complete fusion be not advisable. It is therefore agreed that the entire subject shall be referred to the board and committee in the two churches having charge of these interests, with instructions to devise plans, if deemed practicable, in accordance with these suggestions.

(2.) In regard to domestic missions, especially in the aspect of evangelistic work. It is judged expedient to refer this whole subject also to the appropriate board and committee of the two churches for their consideration, as provided for above in the matter of foreign missions. It may be suitable, however, to declare at this time our conviction of the great importance of this work in both churches, and especially of that form of it which presents itself within the bounds of the General Assembly in behalf of the large and needy colored population.

(3.) In regard to publication. It is agreed that each committee or board shall furnish the other with its publications, and the two publishing houses shall act as depositories, each for the other, as far as practicable. But the details of this arrangement, and the commercial terms, shall be left to the board and committee having charge of these interests. This whole matter also is referred by the General Synod and the General Assembly to the appropriate board and committee to consider whether the two agencies may not be fused into one.

It is further agreed that the General Synod and the General Assembly shall continue these negotiations, so happily begun; through a committee of conference appointed by each, who shall be jointly instructed to receive by January 1, 1875, the plans prepared by the boards and committees hereinbefore provided, with a view to modify, as far as necessary, and harmonize them all in one comprehensive scheme of co-operative union, which scheme shall be submitted to the Synod and to the Assembly respectively at their annual session in 1875.

The provisions of this agreement, or any parts thereof, shall be in force from the time of their adoption by both the General Synod and the General Assembly.

THE Richmond Christian Advocate, speaking of the venerable Joseph Carson, says: "We have a note from Rev. H. M. Hope, dated the sixteenth, at Culpepper, in which he says: 'Next Thursday will be the anniversary of Bro. Carson's ninetieth birthday. Last week I spent several days in company with the old veteran, and found him in excellent health and spirits. This year, as you know, is the anniversary of his seventy-second year as a preacher, and of his seventieth in connection with the Conference.'"

> Of silence, and from action springs alone
> The inward knowledge of true love and faith.

All Along the Line.

Orders for books on the one hundred dollar proposition are still coming in from all quarters of the country. Among the names that appear this week we are pleased to notice that of Mrs. C. G. Andrews, the accomplished wife of the Rev. C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College, located at Jackson, Louisiana. Mrs. Andrews has our sincere thanks for setting so noble an example to other Christian women in the interest of the Publishing House. Not only the wives of preachers, but others who love the church, and are anxious to sustain the important interest of which we have charge, can render us efficient aid, and also bless the community in which they live, by disseminating the standard works of the church.

The General Conference is close at hand, and an account of our stewardship must be rendered to that body. We are anxious to reduce the debt of the House as much as possible before we publish our exhibit. Our appeals to the church have been pressing and urgent, because this institution is theirs, and we need their co-operation. Words of cheer reach us every day. We like these, but do not need them unless accompanied by something more substantial. Send us orders—if not large ones, send small ones.

Since last week the following persons have ordered books, whose names have not hitherto appeared:

Louisville Conference.—R. D. Bennett.

Tennessee Conference.—W. T. Gill.

Memphis Conference.—R. R. Nelson, R. H. Mahon.

Holston Conference.—George W. Miles.

South Carolina Conference.—J. C. Russell, A. Coke Smith, W. Bowman, D. Tiller.

North Carolina Conference.—R. M. Brown.

White River Conference.—J. H. Dye, H. T. Gregory.

Little Rock Conference.—H. L. Nabors, W. H. Hogan, T. H. Ware.

Arkansas Conference.—W. J. Stone, I. F. Hall.

Alabama Conference.—Joseph H. James, B. F. Blow.

North Alabama Conference.—J. C. Hungapillar, J. H. Cameron, J. L. Brittain.

North Mississippi Conference.—G. W. Bachman, John Mitchell.

North Georgia Conference.—George R. Kramer.

South Georgia Conference.—T. K. Leonard.

Virginia Conference.—H. C. Bowles.

Northwest Texas Conference.—R. H. R. Burnett, J. H. McLean, J. W. B. Allen.

Western Conference.—John Carton. Mrs. C. G. Andrews, Centenary College, Jackson, Louisiana.

E. Texas Conference.—J. N. Bridges, J. H. McLean.

Among the books the preachers are ordering we are pleased to see that Wesley's Sermons, Watson's Institutes, Watson's Dictionary, History of the Organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Life of Wesley and other standard works are included. Indeed in every order these works form the staple.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

THE St. Louis Christian Advocate of March 11 says:

The revival interest continues—increases. According to the best judgment man can form, it widens and deepens. With the exceptions named last week, all the Protestant ministers are engaged, and all their churches are benefited by the result. For once these ministers seem to know "no North, no South, no East, no West"—that is, their peculiarities are all subordinated to the cross of Christ, and the men are engaged heart and hand in the work of calling sinners to repentance and trying to save souls.

During the past week the popular meetings, conducted by Mr. Hammond and others, were continued without any apparent abatement of interest. The results of the meetings, however, are most clearly seen in the several churches, where the congregations and membership are being largely increased.

Not only in St. Louis, but in various parts of the State, and almost all over the State, and in other States as well, is the revival influence prevailing. It prevails in a large portion of the whole country, and in foreign countries, as England, Ireland, Scotland, Italy and Germany, at the missionary stations in India and other parts of Asia, at various points in the isles of Oceanica. The signs of the times herald a speedy coming of a brighter day, when Christ shall claim the kingdoms of the earth for his own, the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession.

THE New York Observer says that the Rev. Dr. Porteous, an Episcopal clergyman of England, who has been lately occupying several Brooklyn pulpits of different denominations, with great acceptance and popularity, has had his preaching license revoked by the Bishops of New York and Long Island. The offense alleged is the supposed breach of discipline in preaching for Presbyterians and Congregationalists. There is a movement among some of his admirers to organize an Independent church, and he is represented as rather encouraging the idea. He says that the revocation of his license was entirely unexpected, and that if Church and State were united, as in England, he would immediately begin legal proceedings against Bishop Littlejohn.

Greensboro District, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: In my last I gave some account of the work, and glanced at the future of the country and church within my bounds. Let us now take up the subject where we left it, and consider the state of things at other points in the district. My next appointment was at Greensboro, the seat of the Southern University. Here, of course, the church has a large and precious interest involved in the form of the young men who are to be the future ministers and educated laymen, who are to control and guide our future destinies for weal or woe. About one hundred and twenty or thirty young men are congregated here for religious and literary training; and what a power is here, and what destinies are to be wielded by them on future generations! About twenty of these are already ministers, or looking to the ministry as their life-work. In the literary department they are well trained by competent and able professors, and the surroundings all prompt to order and application; and, furthermore, young men here do not take rank and position on account of dress or fortune or family, but deportment and scholarship are the balances in which they are weighed. To meet eighteen or twenty of these young men at the sacrament, and then administer the holy communion to a score or more of the flower of the church, how do a man's hopes rise and tower for the future of Zion and the weal of coming generations! Here, too, the Home Altar and kindred works are read, and the young men are holding special meetings among themselves with an eye to the furtherance of the great doctrine of holiness of heart. Many complained, and some others had fears, that Greensboro could not have a separate pastor, who might give himself wholly to the work. But I am happy to say that under Dr. Andrews' pastoral charge the church has prospered. He visits the sick, and does what pastoral work he can consistent with his college duties, and preaches to the entire satisfaction of the church and community, as far as I know. As proof of his success, the membership has had valuable additions, the congregations have well-nigh doubled, the spirituality of the church has gone up many degrees, and the membership better satisfied and far more decided in their Methodism than has been the case for many years. The revival of religion here last spring, an account of which was given to the public, still lives and glows in the hearts of many people.

The great Vanderbilt University at Nashville is looming up grandly in the future, taking on large dimensions, and filling the mind of the Southern Church with wonder and delight. Well, let it tower—the higher the better—and swell its dimensions ever so wide; we do not suppose for a moment that it is intended to supersede the Conference colleges, nor do its friends and projectors design that it shall ever aspire to meet the educational wants of more than half a million of Southern Methodists. We have no petty jealousies in this section, but hail the Vanderbilt as a grand desideratum in the Southern Church hitherto unmet.

Marion was my next visitation. It was formerly a first-class station, but at my last appointment, last year, the stewards told me with much regret that, owing to their great embarrassments financially, they would be compelled to fall back to the grade of a young man's appointment. But several weeks intervened before the meeting of the Conference, the brethren had time for more mature thought, and several of them met me at the Conference and told me they had modified their views somewhat, and that they would risk the support of a man with a small family. Such a one was found in the person of Bro. Foust, who reached his work in good time, and entered upon it in the spirit of a Methodist preacher, determined to do his whole duty, leaving the matter of support to the stewards, where it properly belongs; and, to the astonishment and delight of all concerned, his wants have all been met, and with an ease and satisfaction heretofore unknown. The stewards have adopted the plan of making weekly collections, and it is understood that every member is expected to pay into the public collection, each Sabbath, at least one-fortieth of his entire yearly assessment. The plan was found to work admirably, for at the quarterly meeting the finances all came up well, the preacher and his family looked cheerful and happy, the people were delighted, and we had a good meeting. Now, if there's anything in a good beginning, we shall have a happy and prosperous time at Marion this year.

Financially we are doing, throughout this section, far better than the most sanguine anticipated. In many places the people have no money; but where they have no money they pay in provisions, and, what astonishes us all, the figures show that up to this time the preachers on the district have received either in money or kind almost as much as was paid in the same time last year.

Bro. Briggs will pardon me if I step over into his bounds a moment, and speak a little of financial matters in Summerfield, for I feel I have some rights in this little place, having been a small part of it for the last thirty years. Here, if I have been correctly informed, there was almost as much paid at the second monthly meeting as was paid during the whole of last year. So we see "where there is a will there is a way." Let these things "strengthen the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees." The church is the Lord's. Though the finances all fail, though the banks are swept us with the besom of destruction, and though floods and drouht and worm all combine to impoverish the land, yet the earth is the Lord's, and he will see to it that "they that walk uprightly shall not want any good thing."

This does not take me quite around the district. Perhaps I may trouble you again. A. H. MITCHELL.

SUMMERFIELD, March 5, 1874.

Baltimore Conference.

STAUNTON, VA., March 4, 1874.

The Baltimore Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South met in the Methodist Episcopal Church South of this place (Rev. S. S. Roszell, D. D., pastor) at nine o'clock this morning, Bishop Doggett presiding. This is the first time that Conference has met here in twelve years.

There are within the limits of the Conference 168 traveling preachers, 106 local preachers, 22,196 white members, 60 colored members, 299 churches, 33 parsonages, 354 Sabbath schools, 17,962 Sabbath school scholars.

Religious services were conducted by the Bishop, after which he briefly addressed the Conference in reference to the great mission of Methodism in the world.

Rev. John S. Martin was re-elected secretary, with J. E. Armstrong, W. G. Coe and G. T. Tyler as assistants.

The hours for meeting and adjourning were fixed at nine A. M. and one P. M.

Rev. Dr. Haygood, of Nashville, was introduced, and briefly addressed the Conference, conveying the fraternal greetings of Rev. Dr. Summers, formerly a member of this body. He also gave a good account of the Sabbath school work.

A circular from the Rev. J. B. McFerrin, secretary of the Board of Missions, was read. It stated that $12,000 would be wanted from the Baltimore Conference, $15,000 from the Virginia Conference and $2,000 from the West Virginia Conference this year. He gives a good account of the work among the Germans, particularly in Texas.

Baltimore district was called and represented by the presiding elder, Rev. J. S. Martin. Seven new churches had been built the past year, and the district was reported as being in an encouraging condition. The character of the ministers of the district were examined and passed.

SUNDAY IN STAUNTON.

STAUNTON, VA., March 8, 1874.

The day dawned clear and bright, and the city was filled with strangers at an early hour, and a number of eminent clergymen were announced to preach. All the churches were all filled, the Methodist and Presbyterian being packed beyond possible comfort.

Bishop Doggett, at the Methodist church, delivered a very fine sermon on the fire-test, in which reference was made to the prayer gauge suggested by certain scientists. The text was First Kings xviii, 24. After the sermon the following were ordained deacons, the services being very impressive: Gottlieb Meyer, J. T. Williams, H. C. Pitzer, Lafayette Fox, O. C. Beall, William E. Titzell and H. W. Leslie. In the afternoon a Conference love-feast was held, conducted by Rev. John Landstreet, which was an occasion of considerable interest.

Rev. Dr. Duncan preached at night from John iv, 34-38, chiefly directed to ministers. The Bishop then ordained as elders James W. Compton, Francis A. Strother, B. S. Highley, B. W. Bond, J. S. Hutchinson, J. W. Duffy, R. S. Shreve and R. S. D. Heironimus.

On Saturday afternoon a very interesting entertainment was given the Conference at the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Asylum, consisting of the Lord's Prayer in signs, etc., music by the blind pupils, vocal and instrumental. At night a soiree was given the Conference by the pupils of the Wesleyan Female Institute.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

Death of the Rev. Elias Jackson.

A brief dispatch from the Rev. D. L. Cogdell, at Holly Springs, Mississippi, March 3, says the Western Methodist, brings the sad news of the death of the Rev. Elias Jackson, of the North Mississippi Conference, and pastor of our church in Water Valley, Mississippi. We had just heard of his extreme illness, through the Rev. P. Tuggle, and were waiting further tidings with mingled emotions of hope and fear. And now it is our mournful duty to announce that, after a violent attack of pneumonia, our beloved brother has passed away from the church on earth and from his dear family—a heavy loss indeed—but he has entered upon his great reward. For twenty-two years in the Memphis Conference, before it was divided, and afterward in the North Mississippi, including one year in the White River, he did the work of a traveling preacher, laboring in circuits and stations with general acceptableness, and frequently with marked success.

Rev. A. B. Fly writes, Water Valley, Mississippi, March 2:

"Our beloved brother, the Rev. Elias Jackson, is no more. He gently passed away this morning, ten minutes after four o'clock, after a painful illness of fifteen days."

STEPS are being taken to organize a Reformed Episcopal church in St. Louis.

"MERCIFUL GOD, MAKE ROOM FOR A LITTLE FELLOW!"

BY R. H. BOONE.

The child violinist, James G. Speight, known as "Young America," who died suddenly in Boston recently, of heart disease, was a musical prodigy. He was not yet seven years of age, and still had successfully led orchestras, and had excited wonder as a violinist. Father and son retired early in the evening, the lad seeming bright and cheerful, and not complaining of illness. But early in the night the father was awakened by the sound of the lad's voice, and he says he distinguished, after waking, some such words as these: "Merciful God, make room for a little fellow!" Supposing the lad was talking in his sleep, he spoke to him with the intention of arousing him, but received no answer. Then he became alarmed, and, shouting to the boy, he discovered with grief and horror that he was dead.

O Faith, full-winged with prayer!
Bend low thine ear, O Father, it is a child that speaks;
Stretch down thy hand, O Savior, it is a child that seeks;
Sweep down thy wings, O Spirit, it is a child that prays;
Unto the bosom infinite the "little fellow" raise!
Securely hold him there!

O Faith, full-winged with prayer!
The voice of trustful childhood emerges from the night;
It cleaves the starry spaces, it cleaves the world of light;
Above the song of angels its touching plea is heard;
The Father on the great white throne with tenderness is stirred.
Mercy is sheltered there!

O Faith, full-winged with prayer!
Fling wide the gates of heaven, and joyful usher in
A fresh young soul, just purified from every touch of sin.
Oh, seraphim and cherubim, pause in your rapturous song,
And greet the child of music within your mighty throng.
And bid him welcome there!

O Faith, full-winged with prayer!
Make room, O shining habitants, along the streets of gold;
Fling down your jeweled coronets; a little child behold;
A child has entered paradise, released from earth's alarms;
Make way, O hosts of heaven, he seeks the Savior's arms.
And now—he nestles there!

Mr. Boone, the writer of the above beautiful lines, is one of the editors of the Daily Journal in this city. They are in sweet harmony with the touching, tender incident that inspired them:—"Merciful God, make room for a little fellow!"—Northern Christian Advocate.

Terms of Membership.—No. III.

BY REV. LOVICK PIERCE, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: I perceive, in my reading of Methodist journals, that the question, What is the law of admission of members into the Methodist Episcopal Church South? is becoming one of exciting interest. In your NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of February 12 my views on this question were assailed as anti-Methodistic, with an earnest prayer that they might be vetoed by every Methodist power in the land. This was all foreign news to me, for I say to you, in good faith, that until this brother warned the Methodists of my dereliction I absolutely thought myself one of the most loyal, law-abiding Methodist preachers in the land; so much so that I thought when a General Conference found it necessary, after using Mr. Wesley's only condition of membership in his societies, for fifty-six years, as the only condition previously required for membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, that its looseness would ruin the church, it being a very different affair from religious societies raised in the bosom of a church that needed nothing but the power of godliness to make it all a mere church organization could be. This was Mr. Wesley's condition. By birth, by education, by choice and by consecration he was in plan and in purpose only a revivalist. He never claimed to be, never sought to be a reformer. All his new converts outside of the Church of England were turned over to it for the holy sacrament; and those that nominally belonged to it, but were converted to God in earnest, in Mr. Wesley's revival associations, were already members of his church. Mr. Wesley, although a priest in his church, never administered the sacrament to his societies all the days of his life, I believe. How could he? He never considered them a church. And the Lord's Supper, as an ordained institute, belongs only, as a matter of course and of right, to a church and a legitimate church membership. But after fifty-six years' use of Mr. Wesley's only condition for admittance into his societies, our General Conference saw that it would not do as an only condition to admit members into the Methodist Episcopal Church upon; and, as I thought, very wisely restricted the law of admission into full communion by a preparatory examination into the religious experience of candidates for admission, and forbid the reception of members into the church until they gave satisfactory assurance of the genuineness of their faith, and of their willingness to be governed by our Book of Discipline.

I did think my loyalty to the church, as one of its ministers and pastors, depended on my maintenance of this church membership law, which I was honestly trying to do in the very paper from which Bro. Looker-On has drawn the proof of my anti-Methodistic heresy. It is now evident that either these interpreters do not understand the meaning of these law phrases, or else I do not; and of course they will say the ignorance is with me. I will therefore ask them a question, seeing they are so sure that my interpretation is so unmethodistic. My question is, as everybody that is well posted in Methodist history knows, that, as from the General Conference in 1784 to the General Conference in 1840 this original condition of Mr. Wesley for admission into his societies was plead and used as the only condition previously required for admission into the Methodist Church, how it came to pass in 1840, after fifty-six years' trial of it, that the General Conference totally abolished the privilege of becoming a legitimate member of the church by term-time—that is, by having served out six months of probationary membership so well as not to be dropped? (I have explained all this in No. 2.) I use the term legitimate member because all the time this old regime was in vogue it was understood that no one was eligible to be appointed leader or steward until after probation was over.

The question is: After General Conference, in full view of the fact that members must not be allowed to float into the church in this careless way, and enacted a law, as it now is (see page 103,) did they still leave this old, open-ended rule of admitting members into the Methodist Episcopal Church in authority? If they actually ordained a new ordeal for the admission of members into the church (although the old phrase was, as I think, very unwisely placed among the requisite tempers of the mind, as a condition, in and of itself, on which a member might be received into the church,) it was actually and absolutely annulled. So that every Bishop in the episcopal college could not legitimatize the membership of one single member on this old Wesleyan condition alone.

To prove that this question—the admission of members into our church, and on what degree of the religious scale they may be ingrafted on the Christ-body stock as legitimate members of his body—is a question of great interest, it is only as a question of divine right that we are involved in it. No other accredited evangelical church—professedly believing in the new birth as indispensable to human salvation—but the Methodist Episcopal Church in America ever pretended to admit mere seekers of religion into the church as members of the church; nor did we, as we understood ourselves; but as I believed then, and know now, we did ourselves great hurt, in as far as any other church felt disposed to use it against us, that we called probationers church members in common parlance, and numerically, for a half century. We returned our probationers as church members, thus authorizing ministers and members of other Christian communions to say that ours was not a Christian communion, because, upon our own showing, our church was largely made up of unconverted members. I say now that I never could see any good sense in furnishing occasion to such as desire occasion to urge discount upon our church for want of Scripture indorsement. There never was, neither will there ever be, a time when any man, following what I call the law of Scripture exegesis, can bring forward a single instance, from the records of the New Testament, where, in apostolic times, any beside what we mean by believers were included as members of Christ's body, which is the root idea of his church. And yet I have recently read in one of our Methodist journals, in which a very zealous defender of Methodism, as he thinks the Methodist Episcopal Church South holds to it, this among other difficulties in the way of a Methodist fraternization between the Methodist Episcopal Church and us—namely, that the Methodist Episcopal Church had so utterly bolted from original Methodism as to require by law the confession of justification by faith before actual reception into the church. This the writer seemed to regard as revolutionary—an utter revolt from original Methodism, and a doctrine which the Methodist Episcopal Church South could never affiliate with. Now, Mr. Editor, how can a man of my age listen to such unmethodistic wailings as this, involving in them the character of my beau ideal of an evangelical church, and say nothing? I cannot acquit myself as a reticent listener. Why, sir, if I intended to hold on to Mr. Wesley's rules for forming religious associations in the bosom of a dead church, in order only to revive religion in the church, as essential to the organization of a church proper, based upon the articles adopted by the original societies, and change the church arising from these original merely religious associations with radical reform every time it found it necessary, as a church, to change from a looser to a more stringent rule of admitting members into the fellowship of the church, I would put an end to it, or try to do it, by praying the next General Conference to free us from any further fears by striking out from our denominational title the title "church," and assuming hereafter the following as our denominational nomenclature: The Methodist Episcopal Societies South. It must be plural. Society would not do, but church would; showing, even in this example, that a church relation is a much higher relation than that of a society. So that brethren must see that we must give up all idea of Wesleyan societyship or of Methodist Episcopal Church South. We cannot belong to Mr. Wesley's original societies, and to a Methodist Episcopal Church in America set up by him, because as members of his mere societies we had no church membership or church immunities of any kind. And every one that looks at things as they are, knows Mr. Wesley never claimed any rights in or over the Methodists in America after they were, by his advice and assistance, erected into a church. We did not have to assume church forms by a self-created ministry, but were regularly endowed with all lawful functions necessary to a complete church outfit.

In the St. Louis Christian Advocate of February 18 I find another article devoted to the denial of what has been the law of church membership in the Methodist Church now for thirty years next May—I suppose, from what the writer referred to in regard to difficulties in the way of any Methodist fellowship between us and our Northern brethren. He says they have, since the division, made this law more specific than it was at the time of its adoption, which, if it is so, only elevates their practical sense in the premises. Nearly all the opposition to this law, at the time of its adoption, was from what is now the core of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Yet, if this writer quotes them correctly, they have only changed its verbiage to make its sense clearer and stronger. Much to their credit, if this is all they have done. We have changed only in the order of words, not in specific meaning. The writer in the St. Louis Advocate, who subscribes his proper name, I guess (Anson West,) makes a very lame and, as I think, very unwise splurge to rescue the Methodist Episcopal Church South from the blame of determining, only when deceived, to take no more unconverted members into the church; and contends that there is no law nor usage in the church to prevent our pastors from baptizing and receiving into full connection, as members of the church, any and all seekers of religion, without any profession of religion at all; that the only semblance of law in the church on this subject, where anybody might hesitate, is in the requirement that the pastor must be satisfied of the genuineness of their faith before he could, under the law, dare offer any one to the church as eligible to membership at all. And this genuineness of faith, Mr. West says, refers only to creeds, and not at all to conversion or justification by faith. All we might want to know would be whether the seeker was a Unitarian or a Trinitarian. Poor greenhorn in church matters.

I will say to Bro. West that he is grossly mistaken; that these chosen words referred to a correct creed only, and not to saving faith in any such sense as to make justification by faith a condition of fitness to receive members into the church upon. This was exactly what was intended. Under the old regime it was manifest that there was a constant accumulation of legalized members in the church that had never experienced justification by saving faith, and that it must be stopped by instituting a court of special inquiries to be made by the pastor in the outer court of the church. This inquiry, mind you, was to enable pastors, as the guardians of the spiritual interests of souls in the church of the living God, which is the pillar and ground of the truth, to understand their spiritual estate. This no one would suppose to be possible without close Christian conversation on experimental issues, always found in every true convert. By inquiring into the spiritual condition of every one offering for church membership, we supposed that what we meant by the pastor's being satisfied of the genuineness of their faith would be apparent to all—namely, saving faith. Nay, verily, I thought—for I offered the original resolution myself—that no one would ever think of genuine faith, when used as a religious qualification, in any other sense than the faith that justifies. And some of our people are growing foolishly sensitive on these open-pointed inquiries whether persons have experienced such and such joys of the Holy Ghost, saying: These are matters between me and my Maker.

Now, while I regard all these mutterings as evil omens, I want it to be especially noted that, while this rule makes it the absolute duty of the pastor to ascertain the spiritual condition of all applicants for membership in the church, it exacts no profession of faith as to degree, but leaves this to be determined by the pastor from the fruits of the Spirit, as they may be made manifest to him in this inquiry into their spiritual condition. In as far as I am concerned, I never intend to demand any extraordinary profession of religion at the door of entrance into our church, but I do intend, in as far as I am concerned, to keep everybody out of our church until competent pastoral judges are satisfied that their spiritual condition is good because of the genuineness of their faith, or else that their faith is genuine because their spiritual condition is good.

But before I dismiss this matter (now so important to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, because some brethren are, as charity requires me to say, unwittingly betraying us into the hands of unfair censors, in that in their blind zeal they say that we, as a church, admit persons into full connection in our church merely as penitent sinners, even though they themselves, if interrogated, would say: I am an unpardoned unbeliever. This would be slander if it was not intended for praise,) I must say in conclusion that these brethren furnish, as I think, resistless proof that no man's opinion is worth a goat in any religious controversy, if there is any proof that he is devoted to any one-idea view, so as to induce him, in his defense of it, to put an unreasonable construction upon anything coming in his way from controlling power in the premises. This is exactly what every one of these writers has done, and especially Mr. Anson West. He refers to the rule in our Discipline on the admission of members, and disposes of our chosen phrase, "the genuineness of their faith," so as to keep it from upsetting his favorite idea of receiving unconverted penitents at once into full connection in the church; for if he had kept himself well posted on Methodism he would have known there never was a time when the Methodist Episcopal Church in America expressly provided for the incorporation of penitent sinners into the true membership of the church. They did take such in as probationary members; but their being probationary members for six months proved they were not members of the church at all. Hence, if they failed to manifest a desire for salvation, according to Mr. Wesley's General Rules, they were not put upon trial as members of the church, but simply struck off as probationers. How, then, can any man with good common sense write to Methodists of good common sense that, although probationary membership is done away with, so that applicants of to-day might be received to-morrow, we may still receive members as if they were probationers?

If any one of these brethren could have been called into court, and upon oath asked what grade in religious experience the General Conference intended by the terms employed by it in laying down the spiritual condition of an applicant for membership in the church, as the lowest at which it could be granted, he would have answered, at the impulse of his common sense: Simple justification by faith in Christ. And that is just what was intended. And whatever was intended then has been the law on admission of members for the last thirty-four years next May. Nor has there been a member admitted since, that was lawfully a member, unless admitted upon this specific foundation. And every pastoral preacher that is admitting members below this standard is not keeping the Discipline, as he promised to do, nor is he trying to mend it. He is just offering it as a sacrifice upon the altar of his obstinacy or his ignorance. And all those writers that are proclaiming to the world our adhesion, as a church, to Mr. Wesley's condition for admission into his societies, as the only condition previously required for reception into our church, can only be excused on the ground of one idealism. I demand of them, as is their duty, to point me to a single instance where, in apostolic example, any but believers were baptized into Christ, which was their admission into the church. I am defiant.

Our Circuit Work on the Union Springs District

IN CONTRAST WITH OUR STATIONS.

MR. EDITOR: We have two stations on this district (Greenville and Union Springs,) with a membership in both stations of 385 members. About 150 members were added the past year. We have ten circuits and 3,664 members. About 900 were added last year. The two stations are located in the midst of the circuits. The preachers on the circuits compare favorably, both in talent and experience, with the station preachers. In the midst of the failure in crops and hard times the stations fare alike with the circuits, being dependent on the circuits for trade and support. Many of the members on the stations came to town from the circuits. But why this great difference in all respects between our circuits and stations?

I give the result financially, and other things are about equal. What a man pays for his religion, his means being equal, is always a fair test of his real character as a Christian. Not the hearer of the word, but the doer, is blessed. The 385 members on the two stations paid the presiding elder within $76 as much as the ten circuits, with their 3,664 members. The 385 members actually paid $109 more missionary money than the whole ten circuits, with their 3,664 members. The Troy circuit, Troy and Brundidge, Pine Level and Olustee circuits, with a membership of 1,373, paid $28 missionary money, and the other assessments in proportion. The crop in that section was the best made on the district, except on the Rutledge circuit, which did only a little better. Troy shipped several thousand bales of cotton more than the year before. On several of these circuits we had extensive revivals, and those who professed to be converted still remain among their brethren. There is not a parsonage on any of the works on the district, and never was but one that I have heard of, and they sold that to pay quarterage. Three of the preachers last year had to make their own bedsteads. The three families had only nine chairs and one bench. These are plain facts, degrading and humiliating as they are. I do hope no preacher will publish this year 150 members added and $2.50 missionary collection—one and two-thirds cents apiece for the world's conversion. May God in mercy save the church from such revivals. It may be said that last year was a hard year; but this part of Alabama has been occupied for the past forty years. The preachers preach, and suffer for want of books and many of the comforts of life. Their children are uneducated. Their wives do the drudgery of life for the church. Some of the preachers try to run a cotton patch to help out a scanty support. The stewards complain bitterly of their office as a burden too intolerable to be borne. The church feels burdened under the number of collections and the support of the presiding elder. They think, many of them, when they have complained and fallen out with the office of presiding elder, they have paid up, and want a change on their circuit. I do not write these things because I want to do it, nor to undervalue the earnest labors of my brethren. Many of them are better men than I am. They did the best they could on the plan they worked. There are many of the members who do all they can, and some do more than they are able in order to keep up the church. There is something wrong, radically defective, in our circuit work. I see that on the Newton circuit 1,080 members paid $38.05 missionary money and $359.37 to pay their pastor—not enough to purchase a horse and buggy, and feed for his horse.

All our circuits want Sunday preaching, and educated preachers to preach to them. Some change must be made, or our circuits will have to be thrown out on the mission work or abandoned. One of my preachers has left. True, he is sick; but starvation is the worst part of his disease. If I were in a new field I would know what to do; but it is more difficult to undo than to do. In our zeal to embrace everybody, we have built shanties, instead of churches, in every little community—by our own acts have given the people a low and degraded idea of God and his worship. But how to break down these little churches and build houses of worship is a most difficult task; and to furnish preachers and their support, to preach at so many places, is still more difficult.

We have 58 churches on the district, and two paid more to the cause of missions than the 56; and the two churches are but little better off financially than many of the single churches on the circuits. I honestly believe 20 churches, properly located, with good academies attached, would do more to save the people and permanently build up the church than the 58 and another hundred added. I do not mean that the preacher should not preach at private houses, and hold prayer and class meetings. The preachers are not able to carry on a free system so extensively; and yet our people have been trained to live off of the preachers and their families so long that it will be difficult to change them. A church ought to be a power—a house of worship that children will respect if they go to it but once a year. What idea can a child have of its Maker in a church dedicated to the great God without an altar, no ceiling, no sash, no backs on the seats, no stoves in winter, a mere sham. But who is to blame? Not the people. I am trying to bring up the finances, and if Union Springs district does not make a better report than last year I will ask for a location or a foreign mission. Some brother may smile, and ask if that was the district that took in 1,200 members last year. But before you smile, brother, remember that you neither got the money nor the members. We have on our circuits an immense power, if some plan could be adopted to make it operative. The General Conference legislates much about our large towns and cities, but our circuits need improvement more than the cities.

S. P. RICHARDSON.

Obituaries.

JOSEPH H. PEACOCK, son of Nathan B. and Martha A. Peacock, was born in Macon county, Georgia, January 6, 1845; moved with his parents to Coffee county, Alabama, February, 1851; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Wesley chapel, Ozark circuit (then Geneva,) during a protracted meeting, conducted by Rev. John W. Solomon, in 1857; was so happy at the time that he shouted the praise of God. From that period he maintained his membership without a blemish.

August 19, 1868, he was united with Miss Fannie A. Barnard in the bonds of wedlock, by Rev. H. P. Waugh. They were truly happy in this "holy estate." God gave them three charming children as pledges of connubial love.

From January, 1863, till the close of the "terrible war" he endured the hardships and perils of camp life as a soldier in the Fifty-seventh Alabama Regiment. During this time he had a severe attack of measles, which, it is believed, laid the foundation of the disease of which he at last died. On the ninth of July, 1873, he was first confined to his bed by nervous prostration and pulmonary affection. From that period he slowly but surely sank in the pathway of death. However, everything that could be done from the promptings of love and constant devotion to relieve him of suffering, and stay his life upon earth, was done; but all finally failed, and it became apparent that he must die. Frequently during his sickness he spoke of the prospect of death and his preparation therefor. But during the last week of his life he spoke more earnestly of this great matter, and gave special and loving advice to parents, brothers and sisters, dear wife and sweet children. He embraced his wife and children and all the family, and bid them a long "good-by," and bid them and friends all meet him in heaven. Thus, in the full assurance of a home in heaven, he sweetly fell asleep upon the bosom of Jesus, at half-past seven on the morning of February 24, 1874. On the twenty-fifth of February his funeral sermon was preached by the writer, to a large audience of loving and sympathizing friends, at Wesley chapel. At the close thereof he was borne to the grave by the Masonic brethren, and buried under solemn and impressive services, there to await the blessed morning of the glorious resurrection.

OZARK, ALA., March 2, 1874.

PETER B. POPE is no longer a sufferer, having, on the sixth of January, 1874, been transferred from this sin-cursed earth to the home of God's people.

Constitutionally he was of a melancholy turn of mind. This natural tendency to depression was very much aggravated; during the last seven or eight years of his life, by the inactivity of his liver. It has seldom fallen to the lot of man to experience more mental suffering than he did during this time.

The deceased was born in South Carolina, I believe, in February, 1805. He was married, in Holmes county, Mississippi, to Miss Sarah G. Taylor. It was most fortunate for him that he succeeded in getting such a woman for a wife. In disposition she was his opposite, being very cheerful. All of the duties incumbent upon her were faithfully discharged. Bro. Pope and his most estimable wife were happily converted at a camp meeting not far from Benton, Yazoo county, in 1842. The same year they both attached themselves to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Previous to Bro. Pope's conversion he had become very much dissipated. The religion of Jesus Christ proved an antidote for the unfortunate habit he had contracted; and I have heard him say that he believed religion was the only thing which would effectually and permanently reach the case of a drunkard.

From the time of his conversion until he was summoned away from earth he was a consistent member of the church. He loved the church. For many years they held their membership in Yazoo City. About the time I became acquainted with him he was by no means satisfied with his spiritual condition. This, however, was owing entirely to the state of his mind. I told him so repeatedly, and used every effort in my power to divert his mind from himself. He very much deplored being unable to assist his family. Several years ago he found relief from this religious depression, which had proven so galling to him. He was made to rejoice, as in former days, a short time before his death. I have now in my possession a letter written by one of his daughters to another, who lived in another portion of the county. From it I quote a few lines:

"The blow we have so long dreaded has fallen upon us. Pa died yesterday morning at two o'clock. Ma gave him laudanum for his cough on Saturday night, and on Sunday morning he waked very much refreshed, and said several times, while at breakfast, that he never spent a more pleasant night, and that he felt so happy that morning that he couldn't keep from laughing, and remarked that he felt that there would soon be a change."

This prediction was realized in a few hours. O what a change indeed! Who can describe it? May this serve to console his sorrowing wife and children.

A. B. STEWART.

MARY FRANCES CUTLIFF, wife of Dr. Cutliff, of Shreveport, Louisiana, died in that city February 24, 1874, in the thirty-eighth year of her age. She was the daughter of the late Judge E. H. Baxter, of Georgia, and was married to Dr. Cutliff in 1859. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at an early age, and continued therein until death. The writer became acquainted with her four years ago, and as her pastor ever since was intimate with her, socially and religiously. She was a woman of great practical sense; she was well read in standard literature; and her conversation always gave evidence that hers was a vigorous intellect, penetrating and polished. In a court she would have taken rank with women of the highest order of culture and power. Sister Cutliff was greatly given to hospitality, and was a fine hostess; she delighted to spread a bountiful board and to entertain guests by the score. Reunions at her house, for children or adults, were always occasions not only of festivity, but of "flow of soul." In the church she was of the active sort; her membership was felt in every department; in money-raising enterprises, for church or parsonage purposes, she was a leading spirit; she could always be relied upon in a strait, and what she did was with alacrity and cheerfulness. From the stated services of the sanctuary, morning or evening, Sabbath or week-day, she was very seldom absent; and in her the preacher had a hearer that strained him to his best, and that appreciated whatever was excellent in his style or matter or spirit. Her religious character did not attain the perfection of completeness until the discipline of suffering came upon her during the painful and protracted sickness which resulted in her death. Her faith in God and his son Jesus Christ was strong; her will to walk conformably to the guidance of the Holy Spirit was strong; her love for the church and its services was strong; but not until she passed through the refiner's fire did she bring forth, in full and sweet maturity, those peaceable fruits of righteousness which make Christian character so lovely and lovable—namely, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness. I never knew a finer illustration of the power of suffering to perfect the beauties of holiness in religious character than her case affords. During her long illness a softer, sweeter, milder, saintlier expression came into her features day by day. Even her voice, which in health was strong enough to be almost masculine, took on, in her sickness, tones almost "sweet as angels use." And then there was so much of heavenly-mindedness in her conversation toward the last, so much sweet submissiveness to the will of God, so much patient endurance of affliction for Christ's sake, so much rejoicing in tribulation from the evidence she had in her own consciousness that God was thereby eliminating all dross of worldliness from her character, and was making her meet to be a partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light, there was so much of these sanctifying effects of suffering visible in her that one could not fail to see that her long-continued sickness was one long-continued triumphing of the spirit over the flesh. The last time I called to see her she was very pale and weak, and almost breathless, from a recent paroxysm of excruciating pain; she rallied a little gradually, and soon she was talking of the goodness of God and the love of the Savior. The rest of heaven would be very, very welcome to her, she said, but she was willing to linger and suffer in the body as long as her heavenly Father thought it needful. As I prayed with her, and bid her good-by, on that occasion, I felt as if translated to the very verge of heaven. I felt that I was shaking hands with a pilgrim just about to "enter in through the gates into the city." The day of her departure came three or four weeks after this. In the morning it was discovered that the time of her change was come—the shadows of death were gathering upon her. She was evidently sinking down into the valley. Her oldest daughter was at her side, weeping; she heard the sobbing, and immediately reaching out her hand she gently patted Julia on the face, saying: "My baby, Jesus can make a dying bed feel soft as downy pillows are." After a few hours of great bodily suffering, suddenly a bright, sweet smile lit up her whole countenance, and with it she fell asleep in Jesus. That smile was the expression, doubtless, of the joy unspeakable and full of glory which she felt in the supreme moment of entering into the rest which remaineth for the people of God. Her husband, five children and several sisters are left weeping her departure. May they so live that their last end may be like hers, so that this present separation may not prove final and eternal.

A POPULAR Anglican Nonconformist minister was residing with a family in Glasgow, while on a visit to that city, whither he had gone on a deputation from the Wesleyan Missionary Society. After dinner, in reply to an invitation to partake of some fine fruit, he mentioned to the family a curious circumstance concerning himself (which he had also mentioned repeatedly to my correspondent,) viz.: that he had never in his life tasted an apple, pear, grape, or indeed any kind of green fruit. The fact seemed to evoke considerable surprise from the company; but a cautious Scotchman, of a practical, matter-of-fact turn of mind, and who had listened with much unconcern, dryly remarked: "It's a peety but ye had been in Paradise, and there micht na hae been ony faa."

THE Archbishop of Santiago declares that female voices in the choir are dangerous to true piety and devotion.

A WILD ROSE.

BY KEITH H. STERLING.

O sweet wild rose, ye bring me dreams
Of blossom-bordered ways,
Of tender skies and low green hills,
Dim with the summer's haze.

I know what dewy dawns have lent
The rosy flush ye wear;
What fragrant showers of cooling rain
Have made ye still more fair.

I know what golden summer noons
O'er you have shed their light;
What scarlet sunsets flamed and paled
To purple dusk of night.

I see the winding paths that lead
Through farmy pastures sweet,
Across the meadows where the flowers
Bloom bright about my feet.

The blue tide glimmers up the creeks,
The wild birds sing and call,
And underneath the wind-stirred trees
The sun-flecked shadows fall.

About me blow the salty winds
From off the tossing sea;
O, little flower, my thoughts are sad
With what ye bring to me.

Your soft-flushed petals, faintly fair,
Will lose their rosy sheen,
But still about my thoughts will shine
The summer light serene.

Missions.

From the lecture recently delivered Max Muller, in Westminster bey, London, on missions, we ke the following extract:

But though the religion of the Par- and Jews might justly seem to ve paid the penalty of their anti- sionary spirit, how, it will be d, can the same be maintained h regard to the religion of the haims? That religion is still pro- d by at least one hundred and millions of human souls, and, to ge from the last census, even that rmous number falls much short he real truth. And yet I do not ink from saying that their relig- is dying or dead. And why? ause it cannot stand the light of . The worship of Siva, of Vishnu the other popular deities is of same, nay, in many cases of a e degraded and savage character n the worship of Jupiter, Apollo Minerva; it belongs to a stratum hought which is long buried be- h our feet; it may live on, like lion and the tiger, but the mere f free thought and civilized life extinguish it. A religion may er on for a long time; it may be ptsel by the large masses of the le, because it is there, and there thing better; but when a relig- has ceased to produce defenders he faith, prophets, champions, yrs, it has ceased to live; and in seuse Brahminism has ceased to for more than a thousand years. is true there are millions of chil- , women and men in India who own before the stone image of nu, with his four arms, riding creature half bird, half man, or ing on the serpent; who wor- Siva, a monster with three eyes, g naked on a bull, with a neck- of skulls for his ornament. are human beings who still e in a god of war, Kartikeya, six faces, riding on a peacock, olding a bow and arrow in his ; and who invoke a god of s, Ganesa, with four hands and phant's head sitting on a rat. it is true that, in the broad ght of the nineteenth century, ure of the goddess Kali is car- through the streets of her own Calcutta, her wild, disheveled reaching to her feet, with a ace of human heads, her tongue ding from her mouth, her gir- ained with blood. All this is but ask any Hindoo, who can and write and think, whether are the gods he believes in, and l smile at your credulity. How this living death of national n in India may last no one ll; for our purposes, however, ining an idea of the issue of reat religious struggle of the , that religion too is dead and then, it may be asked, is the missionaries? Why should millions on foreign mis- en there are children in our o are allowed to grow up in e? Why should we deprive of some of the noblest, most ardent and devoted nd send them into the wil- while so many laborers are n the vineyard at home?

ht to ask these questions; ought not to blame those economists who tell us that vert costs us £200, and that resent rate of progress it e more than two hundred years to evangelize the world. There is nothing at all startling in these figures. Every child born in Europe is as much a heathen as the child of a Melanesian cannibal; and it costs us more than £200 to turn a child into a Christian man. The other calculation is totally erroneous; for an intellectual harvest must not be calculated by adding simply grain to grain, but by counting each grain as a living seed, that will bring forth fruit a hundred and a thousand-fold.

If we want to know what work there is for the missionary to do, what results we may expect from it, we must distinguish between two kinds of work; the one is parental, the other controversial. Among uncivilized races the work of the missionary is the work of a parent; whether his pupils are young in years or old, he has to treat them with a parent's love, to teach them with a parent's authority; he has to win them, not to argue with them.

I know this kind of missionary work is often despised; it is called mere religious kidnapping; and it is said that missionary success obtained by such means proves nothing for the cause of humanity—that the child handed over to a Mohammedan would grow up a Mohammedan, as much as a child taken by a Christian missionary becomes a Christian. All this is true; missionary success obtained by such means proves nothing for the truth of our creeds; but it proves what is far more important—it proves Christian love. Read only the "Life of Patteson," the Bishop of Melanesia; follow him in his vessel, sailing from island to island, begging for children, carrying them off as a mother her new-born child, nursing them, washing and combing them, clothing them, feeding them, teaching them in his episcopal palace, in which he himself is everything, nurse and house-maid, and cook, schoolmaster, physician and bishop—read there how that man, who tore himself away from his aged father, from his friends, from his favorite studies and pursuits, had the most loving of hearts for these children, how indignantly he repelled for them the name of savages, how he trusted them, respected them, honored them, and when they were formed and established took them back to their island homes, there to be a leaven for future ages. Yes, read the life, the work, the death of that man, a death in very truth a ransom for the sins of others, and then say whether you would like to suppress a profession that can call forth such self-denial, such heroism, such sanctity, such love. It has been my privilege to have known some of the finest and noblest spirits which England has produced during this century, but there is none to whose memory I look up with greater reverence, none by whose friendship I feel more deeply humbled, than by that of that true saint, that true martyr, that truly parental missionary.

The work of the parental missionary is clear, and its success undeniable, not only in Polynesia and Melanesia, but in many parts of India (think only of the bright light of Tinnevelly,) in Africa, in China, in America, in Syria, in Turkey, aye, in the very heart of London.

The case is different with the controversial missionary, who has to attack the faith of men brought up in other religions—in religions which contain much truth, though mixed up with much error. Here the difficulties are immense, the results very discouraging. Nor need we wonder at this. We know, each of us, but too well, how little argument avails in theological discussion; how often it produces the very opposite result of what we expected, confirming rather than shaking opinions no less erroneous, no less indefensible than many articles of the Mohammedan or Buddhist faith.

And even when argument proves successful, when it forces a verdict from an unwilling judge, how often has the result been disappointing; because, in tearing up the rotten stem on which the tree rested, its tenderest fibers have been injured, its roots unsettled, its life destroyed.

We have little ground to expect that these controversial weapons will carry the day in the struggle between the three great religions of the world.

But there is a third kind of missionary activity, which has produced the most important results, and through which alone, I believe, the final victory will be gained. Whenever two religions are brought into contact, when members of each live together in peace, abstaining from all direct attempts at conversion, whether by force or by argument, though conscious all the time of the fact that they and their religion are on their trial, that they are being watched, that they are responsible for all they say and do—the effect has always been the greatest blessing to both. It calls out all the best elements in each, and at the same time keeps under all that is felt to be of doubtful value, of uncertain truth. Whenever this has happened in the history of the world, it has generally led either to the reform of both systems, or to the foundation of a new religion.

Curious Wills.

Among the twenty-eight thousand wills annually admitted to probate there are every year some which may fairly be called "curious wills"—curious from the peculiarity and conditions of the bequests or directions. Some of these bequests or directions are simply humorous, and some are the outcomings of the affections or antipathies of the testator. It has happened that a testator has set out in his will his opinion about some one else in so strong a manner that it amounts to a libel, but in these cases the court has ordered the libelous matter to be expunged, so that it appears neither in the probate nor on record. Some wills are curious from their brevity, some from their prodigious length, some from being in rhyme; some testators bequeath property which they have not, in order to enable them to enjoy, while living, the considerate attentions of the expectant legatees. A Welsh gentleman, for the reason, as recited, that he might give way to the unfair importunities of his wife, secretly assigned, subject to his life interest, all his property by deed, and afterward gracefully gave way to his wife's solicitations and made a will in her favor, which, of course, at his death, turned out inoperative. There are testators who think it necessary that posterity should not be in any doubt as to their religious belief, and accordingly occupy a page or two of their wills with an elaborate statement on the subject; some even think it necessary to set out their pedigrees at full length. Some wills are curious only from the method or arrangement of the paper or the document they are written on, and require an inspection to appreciate their peculiarity. The many ingenious ways in which, neglecting the plain way, the requirements of the wills act have been complied with, make up a very interesting body of cases. In writing a few articles on curious wills we shall endeavor to take our illustrations from the records of the last twenty or thirty years, and, as far as possible, to classify them; many, however, defy classification, and will in this have to form a class by themselves. There are few wills made without some directions being given either as to the place or the manner of burial; frequently the testator desires to be buried in the same grave with his wife or some other member of his family. We remember one case where the testator directed that he should be buried in the space left for that purpose between the graves of his first and second wives, so that he should lie with one on his right hand and the other on his left. More frequently still the direction insults the expense of the funeral; in some cases no carriages are to be used, in others the body is to be carried to the grave by persons employed on the deceased's estate; in one instance the persons so to be employed were laborers, and they were required on the occasion to wear clean white smock-frocks, and were to be paid £1 each for their trouble. Mr. Zimmerman, whose will was proved in 1840, accompanied the directions for his funeral, in case they were not carried out, with something like a threat. In his will he says: "No person is to attend my corpse to the grave, nor is any funeral bell to be rung, and my desire is to be buried plainly and in a decent manner; and, if this be not done, I will come again—that is to say, if I can." The Countess Dowager of Sandwich, in her will, written by herself at the age of eighty, proved in November, 1862, expresses her "wish to be buried decently and quietly—no undertaker's frauds or cheating; no scarfs, hat-bands or nonsense." Mrs. Kitty Jenkyn Packe Reading, although evidently possessed of sufficient means, appears by her will, proved in April, 1870, to have been very anxious that one part at least of the expenses attending her funeral should be kept as low as possible. After saying she is to be placed first in a leaden and then in a wooden coffin, she provides that if "I die away from Branksome I wish my remains, after being duly placed in the proper coffins, to be inclosed in a plain deal box, so that no one may know their contents, and conveyed by a goods train to Poole, which will cost no more than any other package of the same weight; from Poole station said box to be conveyed in a cart to Branksome Tower." The contrivance of sending her remains in a plain deal box by a goods train, so that it will cost no more than any other package of the same weight, and "said box" afterward to be conveyed in a cart, sounds rather oddly in connection with the dignified name of its destination, Branksome Tower. Mrs. Reading seems to have considered the details of her funeral with much minuteness; among other things she states "the easiest way to convey my coffin out of the house will be to take the window out of the dining-room." Some people—we do not know whether they would rather not die—certainly would rather not be buried. Mr. J. L. Grellsihe, of Winchester street and Cornhill, merchant, whose will was proved in October, 1867, thus directs as to the disposal of his body: "I do not wish to be buried. I enjoin my nephews to cause my body to be embalmed and placed in a coffin, the top of which shall be glazed and not nailed down, so that the body be not deprived either of air or daylight. Subsequently to cause it to be burned, if that can be legally done." It could not be from a motive of economy, as the personal property in England was sworn under half a million sterling, and he left four hundred thousand francs to be laid out in works of beneficence and charity. Mr. William Kensett, by his will, proved in October, 1855, seems to have been of the same opinion as the members of a recently-formed club, who have pledged themselves for sanitary reasons to have their bodies burned at their deaths; for he recites that "believing in the impolicy of interring the dead amidst the living, and as an example to others, I give my body, four days after death, to the directors of the Imperial Gas Company, London, to be placed in one of their retorts and consumed to ashes, and that they be paid £10 by my executors for the trouble this act will impose on them in so doing. Should a defense of fanaticism and superstition prevent them granting this my request, then my executors must submit to have my remains buried, in the plainest manner possible, in my family grave in St. John's Wood Cemetery, to assist in poisoning the living in that neighborhood." Generally the curious wills are home-made. The will of Mr. Kensett was made by a solicitor.—Illustrated London News.

"MYNHEER, do you know for what we call our boy Hans?" "Do not, really." "Well, I tell you. Der reason dat we call our boy Hans is dat ish his name."

THE Norristown (Penn.) Herald gives this definition of "Christmas greens:" "Editors who give a five-dollar puff for a dollar-and-a-half turkey."

Jocularity Overdone.

I have been much pleased with the following remarks in Ruskin's Modern Painters: "The chief bar, I suppose, to the action of imagination, and stop to all greatness in this present age of ours, is its mean and shallow love of jest; so that if there be in any good and lofty work a flaw, failing or undipped vulnerable part, where sarcasm may stick or stay, it is caught at, and pointed at, and buzzed about, and fixed upon, and stung into, as a recent wound is by flies; and nothing is ever taken seriously or as it was meant, but always, if it may be, turned the wrong way and misunderstood; and while this is so, there is not, nor cannot be, any hope of achievement of high things; men dare not open their hearts to us, if we are to broil them on a thorn-fire."

The above is most true. Banter reigns everywhere, even among the scientific men. I often deplore it, even while I to some extent join in it. It seems to me that the physical prosperity of our age and nation is the principal cause. Another lies in the peculiar religious state of the world; no longer a sincere vital faith in the old, and yet nothing satisfactory in the new. There are earnest people too—earnest in piety, earnest in philanthropic schemes, earnest in politics; but the tendency is to behold them as set aside from the main current—respectable eccentricities at the best. There is a sad want of real satisfaction in all this crackling of thorns under the pot, and I deem it far from unlikely that there was more happiness among the wretched multitude following their leaders in the Holy Land in the twelfth century, or in the poor host of Scottish enthusiasts who met on Dunse Law—nay, even in many men perishing in Dunnottar Castle, or standing under the gallows in the Grass Market—than there is among our prosperous people of the present day, who have everything but a faith, and are fain to make matter of mirth out of every honest emotion that goes beyond the tone of polite society. Since the above was noted, twenty years ago, the practice of treating subjects jocularly has become considerably more common, till at length it amounts to a kind of pollution of literature, particularly the literature of fiction. It cannot be doubted that for this the fashion set by certain popular writers is partly accountable.)—Chambers' Journal.

"HELP THE CHILDREN.—Parents, help the children. Help them in what? To study and learn the Sabbath school lessons. Do not let them go to the school with no lessons. Perhaps the whole family is studying the same subject. Talk it over together, and there will be some things you can tell the little ones, and some ways in which you can help them. There will be sure to be some things you can make them understand.

Older brothers and sisters, help the children. You have no idea, if you have not tried it, how much good you can do in this way. Moreover, you will find your own ideas of a subject much clearer after you have tried to make it plain to your younger brothers and sisters.

Help them about reading their Sunday school books. When they say they have read them, talk with them about what they have read. Ask them questions about it. See if they remember it. See if they understand it. I have known children very desirous of a large book to carry home. Do not encourage them to take any larger book than they can read; but rather decidedly discourage such a desire. Make them feel that to read and understand the book is the thing to be sought, not the carrying to and fro of a book more suitable for their fathers and mothers than for themselves.—Sunday School Times.

ONE of the seven wonders of the world was the wall and hanging gardens of Babylon. This ancient city was built on a square plain, surrounded by walls three hundred and fifty feet high. This wall was eighty-seven feet thick; on the top, at regular distances from each other, were two hundred and fifty towers; outside the wall was a very deep ditch, constantly kept full of water. On the top of the walls was a row of houses on each side, and room for two chariots abreast in the middle. The King of Babylon caused the hanging gardens to be built for his Queen. The gardens were four hundred feet long on each side, and rose by terraces to the height of the walls of the city. This enormous pile was sustained by arches placed one upon the other. On the top of the arches were laid large flat stones, then a layer of reeds mixed with bitumen. On this were laid two rows of brick and plaster, then a layer of sheets of lead, and upon this the mold was passed. This mold was so deep that the largest trees could take firm root. In the upper terrace was a sort of engine or pump, which drew the water from the river below, and thus watered the gardens.

CHICKENS VS. DEUCKS.—Walter Dunlop was much distressed by a schism in his flock, occasioned by an agitation being raised in Dumfries on the subject of adult baptism; a number of Baptists making an attempt to set up a church there, and this being the best means to accomplish their object. One day, in the course of his sermon on the words, "How often would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her chickens," his feelings on the subject broke forth, and with tears he said: "O, ma freens, yo ken hoo I've striven tae gie ye the words o' wisdom; ye ken hoo I've keepit ye year aifter year, as a hen covers her chickens, but I doot aifter a' there's some deucks amoug ye; sae mony are ga'in ati' tae the water!" The effect of these words was electrical; they were passed from lip to lip, and from house to house, and the oddity of the figure somehow so fitted the circumstances of the religious in the town that, for that time at least, the agitation came suddenly to an end; and Mr. Dunlop and the other ministers in Dumfries were no more troubled with secession from their flocks.

Religious Intelligence.

THE Fijian Christian converts number about 100,000.

THE Jewish Messenger is startled at the announcement of one Emanuel Moses Schlamobitz, who proposes to convert all the Jews to Roman Catholicism.

AN EXTRAORDINARY revival, numbering already about one thousand converts, is reported in Derby, England, under the evangelical labors of a young, zealous and devoted Scotch Episcopal rector, a Rev. Mr. Douglass.

THERE has been a recent fearful outburst of cannibalism in one district of Fiji. One Christian village was "saturated with blood," the attack being wholly unexpected; and fourteen or fifteen Christian towns suffered much.

THE Christian press in India is doing an important work. The eight principal societies issued about 850,000 copies of books and tracts during 1872. Over 150,000 copies of Bibles, Testaments and copies of portions of Scripture were issued.

SEVERAL of the Sunday schools belonging to the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia have a membership of over 600 each, and three of them of over 1,000 each. The denomination has in the city 81 schools, 1,864 teachers and 26,458 scholars.

THE American Bible Society has made a grant of $250 to the Methodist mission in Norway for Bible work. This money is to be expended in the supply of Bibles to the poor children in Sunday schools. Under the mission there are 17 Sunday schools, 120 teachers and 1,044 children.

THE English Churchman states that the Old Catholics in German Switzerland will probably soon elect a bishop, after the manner of Bishop Reinkens' election. It states also that the person proposed to be put in nomination for the office is "one of the leaders and chief ornaments of the Old Catholic movement."

LES MISSIONS CATHOLIQUES, the Catholic journal, says the Japanese Christians in actual connection with Catholic missionaries number from 13,000 to 14,000, and are nearly all descendants of the early Christians in that country. During the persecutions, from 1867 to 1873, 3,404 Christians were exiled and imprisoned, 600 died in prison and 1,981 were released in 1873.

A HAMILTON, Canada, telegram, February 3, says: "During last night attempts were made to burn various churches in this city. In the Primitive Methodist, Wesleyan and Centenary churches, books, seats, etc., were piled together and set on fire, but burned out without damage to the buildings. St. Andrew's church was, however, more unfortunate, being almost ruined."

THE number of native ministers in India has largely increased since 1861. In that year there were 319 mission stations and 97 native ministers. In 1871 there were 423 stations and 226 native ministers. During this period the number of foreign missionaries had risen from 478 to 486. There was therefore only an increase of 8 foreign missionaries to an increase of 129 native ministers.

HITHERTO the Waldensian missionary churches throughout Italy have been dependent upon the synod at La Tour. Now they are to be reorganized on a Presbyterian basis, and will practically form the Presbyterian Church of Italy. There are thirty-eight of these churches in Italy and Sicily, supported at an annual cost of $40,000, which is mostly supplied from England. The so-called Free Church of Italy is nearly as large as the Waldensian.

THE California Advocate of January 29 says: "The interests in the Chinese mission are constantly increasing. In addition to the regular services in the mission building, daily services are held in a hired chapel. The congregations are growing. On Sunday last the missionary, Rev. Otis Gibson, baptized four persons, two men and two women. The Lord's Supper was administered, about fifteen natives partaking, some of whom were members of the Presbyterian mission."

THE English Wesleyan Missionary Society is gaining firm foothold in Italy. They have fourteen congregations in various parts of the country. The preachers are Italians, several of them ex-priests and men of marked ability. The churches are developing real working power. At most stations there are well-attended schools. As yet few women attend the services, and the audiences consist mainly of young men. The most important congregations have been gathered at Naples and Rome, at which latter place the congregation has begun its own home mission.

VERY FEW probably in this country know the relative church membership of the principal twelve denominations in England. The following gives the present membership and ratio of increase, since 1851, of one hundred and twelve towns out of the one hundred and twenty-five:

	1851. Membership.	1872-3. Membership.	Increase per ct. in 21 yrs.
Church of England	82,879	1,122,366	35.4
Wesleyan Methodists	201,428	351,448	34.4
Congregationalists	206,431	330,300	58.5
Baptists	150,355	229,471	53.2
Roman Catholics	78,882	140,491	78.1
Primitive Methodists	68,373	137,986	101.8
United Methodists	51,753	108,392	109.4
New Connection	41,219	59,119	34.7
Presbyterians	33,222	78,261	135.6
Unitarians	30,877	40,765	32.0
Society of Friends	28,531	30,911	8.3
Calvinistic Methodists	11,819	32,062	171.3

EXIT the baldacchino; enter the reredos. For the instruction of the unenlightened, we may as well say that this is a structure which High Churchmen wish to erect behind that which in High churches is called the altar and in Low churches the communion table—a screen or partition rising from the back of the table or altar against the wall. In the medieval churches it was ornamented by figures carved in wood, and the Ritualists are seeking to restore the reredos, with its graven images. Against this the Low Churchmen protest; and an archdeacon of the Diocese of Exeter has prosecuted the dean and chapter of Exeter Cathedral for erecting one of these papistical machines in that cathedral. The suit is not yet concluded; but there is no small stir about it in church circles in England.

ACCORDING to Farrington's Church Almanac the Protestant Episcopal communion in the United States comprises 41 dioceses and 9 missionary jurisdictions, 52 bishops, 3,095 priests and deacons, 2,700 parishes and 260,000 communicants. The ascertained number of communicants in 38 dioceses and 8 missionary jurisdictions is 254,827; the total of 260,000 is estimated. There were in the year 23,515 confirmations and 20,859 burials. The most populous diocese is that of New York, which has 26,282 communicants; next is Pennsylvania, with 19,109; next Maryland, with 17,055; and the fourth in numbers is Connecticut, with 15,316. The contributions of all kinds are reported at $7,316,149.

MANY difficulties still embarrass the work of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in the city of Smyrna, but the missionary, Rev. Mr. Baldwin, whose residence is now at Manissa, has very great encouragement in all the surrounding region. Between three and four thousand copies of the word of God have been sold during the year in the district of which Smyrna is the center, and in this increasing circulation of the sacred Scripture lies the hope of all who labor in that hard field. So writes a correspondent of the Intelligencer. Smyrna is the port in Turkey at which all the missionaries of the American Board used to land before starting for other places. Owing to its commercial and heterogeneous character, it has always been an unpromising city for missionary labor.

THE papal bull, signed May 28, 1873, for regulating the next papal election, provides for the suspension of all those laws relating to the place where the election is to be held—that is, in the place where the Roman pontiff may have died—and also those laws regarding the ceremonies, which by no means constitute the character of a canonical election. The cardinals are absolved from their oaths to observe the constitutions with these provisions, and are permitted to fix the day of the future election; but they are forbidden to discuss the subject of the successor as long as the present Pope lives. The reason for these provisions is because "circumstances have so changed that everything is to be feared from crafty men who only call themselves Catholics, as well as from those belonging to the bands of heretics."

THE Mohammedan population in India numbers at least 30,000,000. It is estimated that one-third of the population of Bengal (66,000,000) is Mohammedan. There is, therefore, a larger field of labor among the followers of the false prophet in India than in the Turkish empire itself, where the Mohammedans number only about 16,000,000 or 17,000,000. In India Mohammedanism is full of life, and has recently passed through what may be called a revival, whereby the number of the followers of Islam have been greatly increased, and their adherence to Mohammedan practice has become more rigid. As an instance of their devotion to their faith, it is mentioned that an eloquent Moulvi (doctor of divinity,) who had come from Mecca, raised within a few weeks $50,000 for the erection of a grand mosque in Serampore; and that this was the fifth grand mosque, besides a score of smaller ones, he had caused to be erected since his return from Mecca, five years before.

FATHER HOME or foreign missionaries are needed down in the direction of southern Colorado and New Mexico, if we are to believe what the Chicago Tribune says of a queer religious sect in those parts. The members are known as penitentes, and they act upon the theory that all moral sins, no matter how hideous, can be atoned by physical suffering; and accordingly, at certain seasons of the year, generally in the fall, they castigate themselves into a condition of godliness, and then commence the battle of life anew. They number ten thousand souls, and are all under the control of and yield implicit obedience to the high priest, Romero Miguela, who resides at Taos. Tradition avers that Miguela is a direct descendant of Montezuma; and such is the faith reposed in him, and so strong the conviction of his divine origin, that any one of his ten thousand ignorant subjects would gladly immolate himself upon the altar if told that Miguela desired it. He lives in great state at Taos; is surrounded by a numerous retinue of servants and humble peons, and religiously exacts one-third of whatever is produced by his subjects, no matter whether it be grain, wood, gold or silver.—Christian Union.

PROF. FISHER sets forth these five propositions in a recent article in the New Englander: 1. That the first and second generation of English reformers did not hold the jure divino theory of episcopacy. 2. That the Church of England in the sixteenth century was in full communion with the other Protestant churches of Europe. 3. That the greatest divines of the Church of England in the seventeenth century, including Hooker, Usher, Hall, Stillingfleet and others acknowledged the validity of Presbyterian ordination. 4. That the fellowship with the foreign churches on the part of the English churches was owing not to forbearance, but to a genuine liberality of opinion. 5. That the Church of England has never by law or synodical action discredited the validity of the ordination practiced in other Protestant bodies. Church and State, whose editor is as well qualified as any other Episcopal journalist to pronounce upon a historical question, quotes these statements and remarks: "With these propositions and with the general drift of Prof. Fisher's article we find little occasion to differ." There has been a great deal of dust kicked up by the High Churchmen in this discussion about ordination; but not enough to obscure the fact, which has been plainly brought to light, that the dogma of the apostolical succession in the English Church has the flimsiest historical foundation.

The Temperance Cause.

There is among good and intelligent people but one opinion as to the evil of intemperance. All must concede that it is of fearful magnitude, and that a remedy is needed. What shall we do to be saved from this all-destroying monster? The foundation of all means is the diffusion of light and information, and the awakening of moral convictions. The extent of the evil, the dangers attending any use or indulgence whatever, and the certain damage to society from the public and licensed sale of liquors, must be exhibited. Legislation can go no further than public opinion, and until this is brought over to the side of prohibition, or other legal restraint, the law-makers are not likely to do much for the cause. The moral feelings and the religious conscience must also be educated up to a clearer apprehension of the sin involved in the use and traffic in stimulating drinks. Thousands of upright and good people do not regard the occasional and moderate use of wine as wicked, nor do they look upon the brew and the vintage as unmitigated evils. These people need information, and their consciences must be enlightened. Wholesale condemnation and severe scolding, denouncing them as reprobates, and branding them as sinners who wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction, are not calculated to convince them of their errors. Statistics, chemistry, physiology are all strong witnesses on the side of total abstinence, and where men are not under the dominion of appetite or avarice they may be reached by reasonable appeals.

Appetite and avarice are the greatest enemies to the cause. Those who love drink, and those who are under the bondage of this habit, are not easily reached. Those who manufacture and sell are almost shut out from the appeals of reason and religion by the blinding influences of covetousness. Against these most powerful hinderances the advocates of temperance are ever contending. Thousands are made invulnerable to conviction which, but for these obstacles, would obtain a controlling influence over their minds. They do not yield to right views, and renounce their errors, simply because they have a taste for ardent spirits, or that they make money by dispensing it to others. They do not admit the mischief they are doing, nor do they see it very clearly, because it would be against their interest to do so. The love of money and the love of whisky are the strong props of intemperance. Through these every perversion is reached in politics, society and in the most prevalent vices. Men under the dominion of these propensities and passions are hard to persuade and reform. The largest class of the people, however, has neither the appetite for drink nor an immediate pecuniary profit in the trade. Is not this class powerful enough in numbers and in every element of influence to adopt and carry out right measures for the suppression of intemperance? Habitual drunkards may be reformed now and then, the dealers who are enriching themselves in the traffic may in some instances be persuaded to abandon the business, and moderate drinkers, in considerable numbers, may be gained over to a better practice; but the main hope is in bringing those who are temperate, and who wish to do what is best, to some common ground of conviction and action.

They may at least unite in discarding the social glass, and in banishing the use of wine and other intoxicating liquors from all occasions of social entertainment, and in stamping it as disreputable to display or offer alcoholic beverages in any form to the guests of the family. In reference to political action, society has a right to protect itself against that which threatens its prosperity and existence. To prohibit the open retail of liquors, as now carried on in the country stores and city coffee-houses, is certainly a legitimate subject of legislation. The expediency of the measure being settled, the abstract right, we think, is clear. But here it has always been difficult, if not impossible, for the advocates and friends of temperance to reach practicable results. Whisky is a potent element and factor in elections, and the temperance cause is overslaughed by the exigencies of party, or sacrificed to the paramount demands of partisan measures. Without attempting everything, the better sort of people might at least co-operate in shutting up the public drinking saloons and corner groceries, because they are inimical to the peace and safety of the country. They ought to work to this end, and in time the object may be secured.

Religion deals with intemperance as with all vice. It cannot make a specialty of temperance to the exclusion or comparative neglect of other virtues. There are other great sins and other mammoth forms of iniquity which must be opposed and denounced. Temperance associations are not essentially religious institutions, but their objects and measures, when kept within proper limits, are entitled to the support of religious people. The church is a religious society opposed to every kind of sin, and devoted to the promotion of all goodness, but outside of the church godly men may organize for the advocacy of social and political principles. The church is a temperance society no more than it is a society of honesty, of purity, of truth, of all virtue, and its members are bound to be not only sober, but to have clean hands and pure hearts, and to be free from profanity and covetousness. The aim of the gospel is a new creation in Christ Jesus. It would make the tree good in order to insure good fruit. It strikes at the root of all sin, and when this is reached every vice is killed. About temperance religious men can have but one opinion and but one practice. They may differ on expedients and measures, but they cannot be drunkards, nor can they knowingly favor anything which tends to encourage or produce the vice. So far as the social and political aspects of the question are concerned, they are likely to be on the right side, while they regard the gospel as the only sure and effectual remedy for sin of every description. There are those who choose to confine their efforts in the cause of temperance to the church and its instrumentalities. Herein they work against vice, and they believe this the best way of meeting the great curse. Between them and the temperance specialists there is no quarrel involving principle or end, but there may be a difference of opinion in reference to means.

The late and still continued uprising of the women in the West against the retailers of whisky indicates the fearful extent of the evil, and the demand of extraordinary measures for its suppression. It is a powerful protest against a monstrous wrong by those who suffer most grievously by its toleration. A temporary paroxysm of indignation, and exceptional and temporary in its manifestation, the result may be good by awaking a deeper interest on the subject, and by leading to permanent and effective expedients. What seems to have imperiled the purity and delicacy of womanhood, and to have cast the pearl of religious fervor and devotion before swine, only shows the extremity of the situation. It may not have been the best way, and it may not be long continued, but still the movement is full of significance.

BATHS—SUNSETS—PROTESTANTISM.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

CITY OF MEXICO, February 10, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: It was my good fortune to make the acquaintance of Mr. Baggeily, an English gentleman who for many years presided over the Academy of Arts in this city. He was kind enough to accompany Bro. Daves and myself through the rooms of the academy. The annual art exhibition had just closed, but a number of drawings and paintings, the work of the students for the past year, still hung on the walls. The crayon drawings are of great merit, and three of the paintings are valued at from $800 to $1,000 each. One of them, Galileo and the Monk, is of the highest merit in its execution. The conception is admirable, with the defects of not being any real passage in the history of the astronomer, and the entire absence of his well-known features. He holds in his hand a pair of compasses, with which he is measuring a globe and instructing a Franciscan monk. Another represents the Valley of Mexico, or rather the great plateau; and the third painting is a festal day of the Aztec period—the lake covered with boats, and natives lauding at some island temple. These are large pieces, measuring each six by eight. As usual, I thought of our college halls—what an ornament for the rooms of a debating society! The Mexicans certainly excel in richness and harmony of coloring. The three students who produced these paintings are to be sent to Italy, for one or two years, for the advantage of that school of arts. This academy is free, and presents every facility for students, both of architecture, painting and statuary. The rooms below are filled with all the classic models in plaster of Paris. I was greatly impressed with one—Achilles bearing Patroclus from the field of Troy. The resolute valor of the hero contrasted affectingly with the relaxed form of his slain friend. It tells the story of that great battle in which Homer has mingled gods and Greeks with strange power.

On our way from the academy we passed a large bowlder-like idol, which was accidentally discovered, during the year, just in front of the cathedral. Some pavers first struck it with their picks. It turned out to be one of the Teocalle sculptures, a basaltic block surrounded with a necklace of eye-balls in relief, each one foot in diameter.

The city has improved in many directions during the last twelve months. The Alameda has been beautified; a fine drive and walk now surround it. The road leading to Chapultepec has been finely graded, trees planted and guard-houses built upon it. Some new streets have been opened and paved through old convent grounds. The decay of the Plaza de Toros is an indication of improvement equally as marked, bull-fights being now prohibited. It was near there that I visited a public bathing establishment, gotten up upon the style of the Roman baths. It is a circular reservoir, about one hundred feet in diameter, with a depth of twelve feet, fed from the bottom by an artesian well, which throws up every minute a large volume of tepid water. There are stretching across this cistern ropes, wires and springboards for the divers' and swimmers' convenience. All around the baths are narrow dressing chambers, and on these chambers are seats built in amphitheater for the public. I suppose this to have been at one time a favorite morning resort. The bathers wear a stockinet over a part of the body. But with all its attractiveness, this bath is now falling to pieces, the chambers are rotting, and the seats for visitors look rickety. The whole has given place to the more private style of baños, or else it is in the courts of the law a process more wearing than the tooth of time.

One thing never changes here—it is the circling glory of inaccessible heights which present themselves in rugged, hoary outline upon the horizon at several points. The passenger along the crowded city thoroughfares may cast his eye just down the end of the street and see a scarred snow-peak upon which no human being could live; where cloud and frost and the thin air hold perpetual reign. At evening, just as the sun sets, the clouds which may lie about these grand summits are dissipated—probably by the equalization of the temperature of air and earth—when their white-sheeted domes and crags burst upon the eye; such a sight as one may wait for a full week at Chamouni, under the lofty brow of Mount Blanc. Immediately thereafter the atmosphere becomes purple-tinted, and fills mountain, plane, and the very thoughts of men with its soft haze. So, too, the richly-gemmed night of this altitude is an abiding wonder. The quivering beams of Sirius fairly ripple in their full flow to the eye. Each star pours a flashing tide down through the clear air, and challenges for itself the palm of beauty. Those who have a passion for the study of the geography of the heavens would do well to visit this city, for I suppose there are as many nights for clear observation in this latitude as anywhere else in the world. The house-tops are all flat, well paved, and are a favorite resort for exercise, and might constitute capital observatories.

With all these inspiring glories above and about, what wonder if Zion should here abide in luster and strength! So I found her greatly increased since this time last year. I think full fifty per cent., and may be one hundred per cent., more persons attend Protestant services. Three new congregations have been added, and $30,000 worth of property, if not more. The congregation of the Foreign Christian Union at San Francisco is doing better than ever, though two new ones have been opened within half a square distance. The Circus property, or "Trinity Church," as it is called, of the Methodist Episcopal Church mission has a fine audience-room, both unique and antique in its expression, having been formerly one of the many "halls of the Montezumas," of which we have heard—Dr. Butler thinks the very hall itself. The church of San Jose de Gracia, of the Foreign Christian Union, is still finer, while that of San Francisco is an enormous structure, and when repaired and seated will be the grandest of all. I hope Mr. Riley and the Foreign Christian Union will take heart. Their work is stronger by the emulation of other churches and missions. Then there is the congregation of Mr. Hutchinson, Presbyterian, which meets in the "Beliamite"—old Bethlemite convent—in a good large room, and which on a Sabbath is fairly filled. Besides these the congregation of Palacios, which meets in Cinco del Mayo, as large as any, and then comes our own San Andres.

Bro. Daves is working wisely and steadily. He has already attracted to himself Sorthenes Juarez and Mota, both of whom were of the first original Protestant movement, the one president and the other secretary of the first convention of reformers in Mexico, the proceedings of which (1865) are in print. Also another Mexican who has responded to my circular letter of last year—Jose B. Martinez. He is at work at Zoyatzoulbo, and Bro. Daves will supplement and support his society.

This letter was begun in the City of Mexico. I have written three to the Nashville Christian Advocate, two or three for the Sunday School Magazine, one for the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, one for the Texas Christian Advocate; and as I have spoken of our work in them, lest I should traverse what I have written elsewhere, will close this.

The True Center.

All things in nature have a center, in which they find rest. That center is obedience to the laws of their being. In this they find their normal state. Out of it they are aliens. Water cannot be said to be at rest—not stillness, for activity may indicate rest—until it finds its level. The seed, in dying, germinating and reproducing in kind according to its capacity, may be said to be at rest, having accomplished the design of its creation. The electric needle, perhaps a better example, rests only as it settles, in obedience to the current. Disturbed by any foreign substance or power, it remains restless, quivering, throbbing until it returns to its rest again. So with the things we call gravitation and attraction. Undisturbed, they would remain forever in faithfulness to their nature. Disturbed, with energy they reassert their nature and hasten to their normal state. And so we might continue examples. This self-assertion in inanimate nature, which we call natural, in the animal world is termed instinct. The result is the same. The animal, in obeying his instinct, finds the same rest that is witnessed in the material obeying the law of its being. But enough has been said. Man seems to be the only thing or being in the universe out of harmony with the Creator—out of harmony with himself and his destiny. The prophet bears earnest testimony to this fact: "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth; for the Lord hath spoken. I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know; my people doth not consider." Again, the psalmist says: "Return unto thy rest, O my soul." Jesus says: "Come unto me and I will give you rest." Man is not in harmony with God. The soul has been disturbed. Sin has destroyed its rest. There is a conscious absence of peace and quiet; there are painful throbbings of human hearts that bear testimony to this condition. In nature the removal of the hindering cause is all that is required. If, for instance, the stone or beam of wood lies heavily upon the germinating seed, removed, it springs forth at once. So with the needle. A small object, a slight pressure may throw it off—disturb its rest. But remove the obstacle, and quickly it returns. Now there is no controversy as to the needed rest for man. The heart pants for peace and quiet. Lying heavily upon it, as a stone upon the tender plant, is sin, shutting out the light and sunshine of heaven. Provision has been made for its removal. There is a strong and willing Hand stretched forth to its deliverance: "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." Or happy are all they who put their trust in Jesus. Here the soul finds its center—its rest. There is but one thing for man to do; but one thing to make him peaceful, quiet, happy, lovable. Not to travel, not to be wise, not to be rich, not to be honorable or famous, not to be mighty, not to suffer, not to give, not to withhold. But one thing: put his trust in Christ. Christ is God's gift, God's Messias, God's love, God's peace, God's all and in all. He gave him because he could give no more. He gave him as the last, best and only gift—the only remedy for man's sickness. He came in human form, that he might get near to man as an elder brother. He came to suffer, that he might sympathize with sufferers. In the form of a servant, that he might give an example in service. As a son, that man through him might become a son. As a Savior, because none else could save.

The question is not how sin came into the world, to what extent it prevails or to what end. The question is not how God could or would incarnate himself in human form. It is not to ask why it was not done in some other way, or by some other being. Man has not time to ask these questions. If he has any curiosity on the subject he may make inquiries after he gets to heaven, but not now. His is too urgent a case to lose time. He is a sinner. He is conscious of sin. He is dissatisfied and uneasy. He feels the absence of peace and rest. He is weary. As the earth and things of earth can only feed and clothe his body, which is of the earth earthy, man knows, without argument, that earth has no remedy or satisfaction for the diseased and discontented soul. He is sick. His is a sickness unto death eternal. In his trouble comes the Healer. "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

Now to do this there must be something more than a mere general knowledge of sin. All men have this. For he is the great light that enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world. This "trust" looks upon a different state. There must be such special knowledge of sin that sorrow for sin is produced. The heart softens under its touch. The tear of penitence falls upon the seared conscience, and melts and subdues it. Then can the image of Christ, the hope of glory, be made therein. As wax, warmed, softens, and is thus conditioned to receive the impression, so the man, under the rule of gospel sorrow, softens to the condition of image-work. As it is impossible for the tender plant to come up through the rock, as it is impossible for the needle to obey the electric current with a foreign substance interposing, so it is impossible for the image of Christ to be made upon an impenitent heart. John, the harbinger of Christ, prepared the way by preaching repentance. The same forerunner is required to-day—as necessary now as then. Man is to pray to receive Christ. It is not done for him. There is no coercion. The means to this receptive condition are given, freely given. The power to repent and "trust in him" is the rich bestowment of God. The man using the means repents of sin, puts his trust in Christ, and is "blessed." Here he finds his long-sought rest. Here he finds his center and rests secure. Oh, how blessed the man who knows his sins forgiven! Under all the circumstances of life he is content and happy. J. T. D.

MEXICO, 1874.

The District Conference and Local Preachers.

The Southern Christian Advocate would have the local preachers licensed and recommended for orders by the District Conference. We quote as follows:

Our decided conviction is that the interests of the church would be far more efficiently served than now by transferring from the Quarterly Conference to this body the authority to license local preachers, to renew their licenses, and to recommend them to the Annual Conference for ordination. We published last week, from the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, an article, which we fully indorse, bearing upon the value to the church of this arm of service. No one can read the history of Methodism without being profoundly impressed with the vast indebtedness of the denomination to this class of its workmen. Nor was their usefulness limited to the early days of the church; it continues still, and the local ministry constitutes to-day an element of power to which is due, in no slight degree, its growing prosperity. To devise such measures as will foster this branch of service, and free it from incumbrances that abridge its efficiency, is worthy the patient thought and earnest effort of those into whose custody the care of the church is committed. It is therefore with a very distinct recognition of the value of this class of laborers that we venture to suggest the change we have proposed above. Very limited observation is necessary to satisfy any thoughtful person that the influence and consequent usefulness of the local ministry, as a body, is seriously impaired by the facility with which access to its ranks is had. Every incompetent or otherwise inefficient incumbent of the office is not only worthless in himself, but a positive discount upon the usefulness of his worthy brethren. That this branch of our system is burdened with not a few such is largely due to the fact that in most instances the door-keepers of this department are the friends and neighbors, frequently the near kindred of the applicant for admission. In such cases it is well-nigh impossible to judge dispassionately, and to maintain a single eye to the glory of God and the welfare of his cause. Clear convictions of the unfitness of the candidate, reinforced by the sense of responsibility in the premises, are not strong enough to overcome the repugnance to inflicting a wound upon a neighbor and his friends; and an affirmative vote is delivered against the judgment, though with the hope that "if he does no good he will do no harm." This is a palpable evil, but it is almost inevitable to the present plan of recruiting the local ranks. Transfer the functions of the Quarterly Conference in this particular to the District Conference, and the evil, if not entirely escaped, will be greatly lessened. In the first place the number of applicants will be smaller. And then the great majority of the body will be uninfluenced and unembarrassed with regard to any given application by the considerations which almost invariably beset the members of a Quarterly Conference. Each case, emancipated from the difficulties and delicacies which necessarily environ it in the immediate community where the applicant resides, would be decided upon its own merits; and the church would be far more securely guarded against the intrusion of incompetent and unworthy men into this branch of its ministry.

Corresponding good results would accrue from this change in the matter of renewing licenses, already granted. Many a man, who is a preacher merely in name, seldom or never exercising his office, is recommissioned year after year by the Quarterly Conference for the same reasons which originally secured him the position. Such men disparage the office, are a real damage to the influence and effectiveness of their worthy brethren, and ought to be dropped. The difficulty of effecting this riddance would be greatly diminished, if not wholly obviated, by having the application submitted to the District instead of the Quarterly Conferences.

We can see no reasonable objection to the change we propose, but on the contrary many advantages, and we sincerely hope it will be made. There is not enough of this sort of work to constitute an appreciable feature of interest to any single Quarterly Conference; while its aggregation, from all the charges of the district, would make it an item of considerable importance. The change proposed, therefore, would enhance the dignity of the District Conference without detracting seriously from that of the smaller body.

New Orleans District Notice.

The New Orleans District Conference begins its session, in the basement of the Carondelet Street church, on Thursday, April 2, at ten o'clock A. M. Bishop Keener will preside. On Thursday night there will be a district love-feast, and on Friday night a sacramental meeting. The members of the several churches in the district are urgently invited to attend these meetings, as well as the business sessions of the conference. All the members of the Quarterly Conferences are members of the District Conference. On Sunday, April 5, at three o'clock P. M., the Sunday School Union of the district will hold its anniversary celebration. There will be regular business meetings of the conference probably every morning at ten and every evening at five o'clock. Pastors are requested to notify their congregations of the services and appointments.

L. PARKER, P. E.

Mississippi Conference.

A resolution was passed at the last session of the Mississippi Conference requesting preachers in charge to take up collections, during the months of March and April, to defray the traveling expenses of the delegates to the General Conference, and to send the money to the delegate most convenient to them. It is important that the collection for delegates to this and all of the Conferences should be attended to at once. Every pastor should present the subject to his congregations, and forward the funds immediately.

TWO PROMINENT public men have passed away within the past few days. Millard Fillmore has for years past lived in comparative retirement, respected and honored by his countrymen as a man of stainless character. His career as President and other responsible positions was that of uprightness and integrity. Charles Sumner, unlike Mr. Fillmore, was in active political life, and at his post in the United States Senate up to the time of his death. He was a man of extensive culture, and of sincere and honest purpose, and courageous and independent in the expression and advocacy of his opinions. His public life and political course were sectional and fanatical, and entailed great evils upon the country; but his last acts present him in a more creditable light. His resolution to erase the names of civil battles from the flags of the army exhibited a magnanimous and noble spirit. His last speech was against a motion to appropriate $3,000,000 for the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition.

MRS. VAN COTT, the celebrated evangelist of the Methodist Episcopal Church, opened her ministry in this city, at Ames chapel, on Sunday last, March 15. She is preaching every night during the present week.

A Chapter of Statistical Horrors.

The New York Evening Post recently published the communication of a correspondent, giving the statistics of the liquor traffic and consumption in this country during 1870, as taken from official records. The exhibit, accompanied by some calculations based upon it, presents a frightful chapter of statistical horrors. The aggregate of imported and domestic distilled and spirituous liquors, brewed and fermented liquors, and imported and domestic wines, for that year, amounted in valuation to the enormous sum of $1,483,491,865. To this $90,000,000 must be added for the cost of litigations, crimes and imprisonments, etc., caused mainly by the use of intoxicating liquors—swelling the expenditure to $1,573,491,865 for a single year. The liquor saloons in the United States were 140,000, each having by estimate forty daily customers, making in all 5,600,000 drum-drinkers, spending for this purpose during the year $1,575,000,000.

The quantity of liquors of all kinds drank was sufficient to fill a canal four feet deep, fourteen feet wide, and eighty miles in length. The drinkers, if standing in a procession, five abreast, would make an army 100 miles long. The destruction of life by the use of intoxicating liquors was at the rate of 550 persons per day. The places where liquors were sold, if arranged in rows, in direct lines, would make a street 100 miles in length. The total number of persons engaged in the liquor business was 560,000, of whom 56,663 were employed in manufacturing and selling 4,685,633 barrels of beer. This number exceeds by more than 400,000 the whole number of all the persons in the United States devoted to preaching the gospel and school teaching. The effects we have in 100,000 drunkards imprisoned annually for crime, 50,000 more consigned to a drunkard's grave, and 200,000 helpless children reduced to beggary and want.

The amount spent for intoxicating liquors in the single State of New York in 1870 was $246,617,520; that in Pennsylvania was $152,663,495; that in Ohio was $151,734,875; and that in Illinois was $119,933,945. These four States were the banner States in the liquor traffic and consumption.

New York city was also the banner city of the country. Its 7,000 licensed saloons, if placed in rows in direct lines, would have made a street thirteen miles long. The expenditure for liquors during the year was $60,000,000, giving employment to 35,000 persons; while its churches, chapels, and public and private schools cost but $4,500,000. The consumption of beer per day was 40,000 kegs. The persons arrested for intoxication were 56,000. The capital invested in the liquor business of all kinds amounted to $140,000,000, of which $60,000,000 were invested in the business of manufacture.

These figures may be only approximately accurate; yet they are sufficiently so to make a table of the most horrible statistics. While the total expense in the United States during 1870 for flour and meal, cotton goods, boots and shoes, clothing, woolen goods, newspapers and job printing was $905,000,000, the single item of liquor consumption cost $1,575,000,000, paid by 5,600,000 drinkers. Can there be any doubt whether the liquor business is a public nuisance, acting as the most deadly enemy of human society, that ought to be crushed by the strong arm of law? The way to regulate this nuisance is not to license it on the theory of restraining it, but to prohibit it altogether under severe penalties. Far the most expensive and destructive evil of the whole land is liquor drinking, and nothing can be clearer than that law should strike at the sources of this stupendous evil.

We are glad to observe that, in response to numerous petitions, there is a movement in Congress to authorize the President to appoint a commission of five persons, charged with the duty of investigating the alcoholic liquor traffic of this country, and making a report to Congress on the subject, setting forth "its economic, criminal, moral and scientific aspects, in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health and general welfare of the people;" and also "the practical results of license and restrictive legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States." Such a commission, consisting of the proper persons to make the investigation, would in a year's time gather a vast array of facts that would be of immense service in instructing and awakening the people. Though Congress has no power directly to legislate on the subject in the several States, yet, under its taxing power and its power to regulate foreign commerce, it may and should impose the heaviest burdens upon the liquor traffic. The producers, traders and consumers ought to be so heavily taxed by the general government as to furnish a practical discouragement to the whole business. Congress fixed the circulation of the notes of state banks into non-existence; and were it to tax the liquor traffic into non-existence the country would be richer by thousands of millions.—Independent.

LAY DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.—I have important documents to send to the lay delegates to the General Conference, but I know the address of only a few of them. Will each one please send me his address?

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

PERHAPS there has never been a more thorough-going utilitarian than Brindley, who, when asked by a committee of the House of Commons for what object rivers were created, is said to have replied: "To feed navigable canals."

REV. WILLIAM NAST, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, German, is on a visit to New Orleans.

THE fashionable exodus to Europe will begin this year as early as April. The number of visitors is expected to be very large.

MARRIED.

WAKELIN—WISEMAN.—March 5, 1874, at the residence of Mrs. Hanly, in Hot Springs, Arkansas, by Rev. I. Z. T. Morris, Mr. Bluleford Wakelin, of Hot Springs, Arkansas, and Miss Marin E. Wiseman, of Cleveland, Ohio.

ARMSTRONG—COOPER.—March 11, 1874, at the residence of the bride's father, by the Rev. T. V. Armstrong, Mr. R. C. Armstrong to Miss Sarah J. Cooper, all of Newton county, Mississippi.

WILLIAMS—BURT.—By Rev. Robert S. Isbell, at the residence of the bride's father, March 5, 1874, Mr. James N. Williams to Miss Alice S. Burt, all of Vermillion parish, Louisiana.

DRUGGIST AND APOTHECARY.—We invite attention to the advertisement of F. O. Greve, corner of Annunciation and Galeuble streets who offers to the public his complete assortment of English, German and French drugs, patent medicines and fancy articles, and assures them that prescriptions shall be carefully compounded. Mr. Greve is indorsed by Messrs. Ball & Lyons in the following card:

"Mr. F. O. Greve, having been in our employ for the past six years, we can conscientiously indorse him as a competent pharmacist and druggist, reliable and trustworthy, and as such recommend him to the public. Respectfully,

BALL & LYONS,
Wholesale and Retail Druggists,
Corner Camp and Gravier streets.
NEW ORLEANS, January 1, 1874."

THE NEW ORLEANS, MOBILE AND TEXAS RAILROAD.—The advertisement of the above railroad appears this week. This is one of the smoothest and best built roads over which we have ever traveled. The passenger and sleeping cars are all that could be desired. Liberal arrangements are made for excursions and for season and family tickets. For further information see advertisement or call on the public agent, E. P. Shute, Esq., corner Common and Camp streets.

CHINA, GLASS, CROCKERY AND CUTLERY.—The splendid assortment of wares, as above classified, together with an extensive assortment of useful articles ingeniously contrived for household use and economy, are to be found in the stock of Paul J. Christian, successor to McCandlish, Christian & Co., No. 36 Camp street. Our country and city readers are advised to call and examine the stock of our neighbor, and judge for themselves.

COW PEAS.—No farmer who knows the advantages of peas as an economical article of food for stock, and fertilizer of the soil on which they grow, will undervalue the great importance of cow peas, which he can obtain from Messrs. George Heck & Co., of our city, whose establishment is located at No. 34 Tchoupitoulas street. Their advertisement appears in our columns.

ATTENTION, SUGAR PLANTERS.—Hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, kegs, hoop-poles, etc., are faithfully put up at the large cooperage establishment of P. A. LeBlanc, No. 22 Front street. Orders are promised prompt attention. See his advertisement.

READ the advertisement of John P. Magee, who keeps on hand and manufactures to order hogsheads, molasses barrels and half barrels and every kind of cooperage. Country orders solicited. His establishment is at No. 80 Lafayette street.

CHEAP JOHN.—As will be observed in her advertisement, Mrs. D. J. Loewenstein, the lady cheap John, at No. 549 Magazine street, has sold out her stock of damaged boots, shoes and hats, and is now receiving a large stock of new goods.

THE GREAT CHINA AND JAPAN TEA WAREHOUSE, No. 49 DRYADES STREET.—The proprietor of the establishment above mentioned proposes to sell the finest quality of Oolong (black) tea at $1 per pound. See advertisement.

THE opening of spring goods at Messrs. Levy Bros.', No. 580 Magazine street, continues. The Messrs. Levy invite all to call and examine their stock of dry goods, etc., before purchasing elsewhere.

THE Four Seasons Restaurant, kept by J. Bosio, at No. 155 Chartres street, between St. Peter and Toulouse, is prepared to furnish the lover man with all the substantials and delicacies of the season.

V. OEHMICHEN, successor to Oehmichen & Pothier, dealer in hardware and cutlery, corner Bienville and Old Levee streets.

THE OLD RED SHOE STORE.—Our attention has been often attracted to the progress and rising importance of the establishment of Mr. John George Wagner, and we have felt that his faithful and honest efforts merited success. Instead of standing on the corners of the streets, and lamenting the hardness of the times, Mr. Wagner drives prosperity with his shoe-hammer. He depends on his own industry and faithful application to the last. Such men as Mr. Wagner (upon whom you may rely for last fidelity in the execution of their work) will never call for quarters in the contest with opposing fortune. Being the sole architects of their own fortunes, they may commence in the lower walks of business life, but will bind themselves to the upper, stitch by stitch. Mr. Wagner's establishment is located at the corner of Dauphine and Ursulines streets. Look for his advertisement elsewhere.

THE CROMWELL LINE OF STEAMSHIPS.—The mercantile public, as well as travelers who can appreciate a trip to New York on an elegant steamer, with all the comforts of a well-furnished and sumptuous cabin, are interested in the valuable line of staunch and fast-sailing steamers above named. It would be difficult to estimate the importance of this line of steamers to our community. Careful in the management and handling of freight, prompt in protecting shippers from losses by damaged goods, fair and honorable in the settlement of any just claims for the same, and prompt in delivering goods when vessels reach port, they are entitled to confidence and patronage. See their advertisement in our columns.

DRUGGIST AND APOTHECARY.—We commend to the special attention of our readers in the Fourth District, and in the vicinity of the junction of Magnolia and Felicity streets, the advertisement of Mr. F. Jorger, who has a drug store at the corner of the streets named, and another at the corner of Dryades and Second. He advertises a fresh stock of drugs and a general assortment of fancy articles. He carefully compounds prescriptions. Open night and day.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.—B. J. West, at 115 and 117 Magazine street, New Orleans, has one of the most extensive assortments of agricultural implements, plantation hardware, steam engines, saw and grist mills, improved plows, pumps, shafting, etc., that is to be found in the Southern country. If we were engaged in farming we think we should never come to the city without looking through this depot. Keep his advertisement in mind, which you will find elsewhere.

PARTIES desiring the position of solicitor are invited, in another column, to address Messrs. J. H. Ford & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

FOR FAMILY USE.—Meats of all descriptions are made much more palatable by the use of the famous Halford Leicestershire Table Sauce, which is not fiery, like many foreign sauces but has more body of the choicest materials than they have. All grocers sell it. mh5 lt

THE NAME "CASHMERE BOUQUET," as applied to toilet soaps and perfumery, is registered and patented as a trade-mark by COLGATE & CO., New York, and can be used legitimately only by them. Purchasers of the Cashmere Bouquet Soap and Handkerchief Extract will secure the genuine only when bearing the name of COLGATE & CO., New York. je12 1y

BUSINESS NOTICES.

GET THE GENUINE ARTICLE.—The great popularity of Wilbor's Compound of Cod Liver Oil and Lime has induced some unprincipled persons to attempt to palm off a simple article of their own manufacture; but any person who is suffering from Coughs, Colds or Consumption should be careful where they purchase this article. It requires no puffing; the results following its use are its best recommendation and the proprietor has ample evidence on file of its extraordinary success in pulmonary complaints. The Phosphate of Lime possesses a most marvelous healing power, as combined with the pure Cod Liver Oil by Dr. Wilbor. This medicine is regularly prescribed by the medical faculty. Sold by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston. mh19 lt

SIMPLY because a soap makes good "suds," it does not follow that it is the best soap to use. It should do more—it should not waste away, but wear well and not rot the clothes. Procter & Gamble's Extra Olive Soap washes well, wears well; in fact it has no equal. mh19 1t

SOLE PROPRIETOR OF
ABRAMS' CHILL TONIC,
a most effectual, reliable and entirely safe remedy for Chills and Fever, etc. Sold under full guarantee.

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.
THIS MEDICINE, FOR THE CURE OF
DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA
and all diseases of the Bowels, is without exception the most valuable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most acute attacks. For infants its use is recommended in preference to the death-dealing "Soothing Syrups," etc. No household should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.
A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis,
and all Pulmonary affections. It is specially adapted to the relief of Hoarseness, and all diseases of the Throat caused by excessive use of the voice. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Ball & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION,
Scrofulous and Tubercolous affections, Rickets and all complaints characterized by deficient nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.
This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is Unrivaled as a Rubefacient,
and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the extremities should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
FROM
The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunderhumor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps, to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the Intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is

Raw and Inflamed,

your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful. As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,

au1 1y DONALD KENNEDY.

Price, $1.60 per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

DR. TUTT'S
VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE BEST ADVICE THAT CAN BE given to persons suffering from

DYSPEPSIA, BILIOUS COMPLAINTS,

CONSTIPATION, COLIC, SICK HEADACHE,

Fever and Ague, Nervous Debility,

or of any disorder of the Stomach, Liver or Kidneys, is to tone, cleanse and regulate them by the use of

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills.

They act very mildly, yet thoroughly restore the functional action of the Digestive Organs and the Intestines, and renovate the whole system, imparting a good appetite and healthy assimilation of food. They produce neither Nausea, Griping nor Debility, and may be taken at any time, without change of diet or occupation.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye

possesses qualities that no other dye does. Its effect is instantaneous, and is so natural that it cannot be detected by the closest observer. Being harmless and easily applied, it is in general use among the fashionable Hair-Dressers in every large city in the United States

THE SUNBEAM.

BY M. D. RAINE.

Mabel was tired and cross one day;
She could not work and she would not play.
A cloud passed over the little face,
Leaving its mournful, dreary trace.
And Mabel grew sullen and ready to cry,
While the strange part was that she knew not why.

But out in the garden at last she went,
Still holding fast to her discontent,
And under a tree ere long sat down,
Her face all puckered with many a frown.
When—all of a sudden, her eyes shut tight,
And Mabel was off to dreamland bright.

Then a golden sunbeam slipped between
The arch above with its network green,
And tumbling down to our Mabel's side,
Into her heart crept close to hide.
And, hiding there, the beautiful ray
Influenced all in its own sweet way.

Presently opened two blue eyes—
Blue and soft as the summer skies,
Bright as the sunshine hiding there,
Making the childish face so fair—
And two little lips gave liberty
To a song all full of a glad heart's glee.

Then up she sprang from her grassy bed,
And merrily tossed her curly head.
While many a ray of the golden light
Peeped out of her eyes so softly bright.
And Mabel was tired and cross no more
When she hastened home to her mother's door.

Seeing God.

"I don't think our Sunday school teacher was right to-day," said a little boy as he and a companion walked home from Sunday school together; "the Bible says differently, any way, for I learned the verse about it the other day."

"Let us hear what the verse is," said a pleasant voice behind him. Pleasant as it was, however, the boy started at hearing it, and there was not much triumph in the tone with which he repeated: "No man hath seen God at any time."

"And you think," said his teacher, for it was he, "that I have contradicted that verse this afternoon."

"Why, yes, sir; you said: 'Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.'"

"And yet this is a Bible verse too; God said both of these things; he cannot contradict himself. Let us see if there never was a man pure in heart—that means, you know, sincere in loving and serving God—who saw him.

"You know we were studying about old Simeon to-day. He was a good man, just and devout—that is, worshiping God and doing his duty to other people. The Holy Ghost dwelt in his heart, and taught him to watch and wait for the Messiah or Deliverer whom God had long ago promised to his nation. One day a young mother brought her little baby into the temple where he was to offer a sacrifice for him, according to the law of the country.

"Simeon had seen a great many such babies—they were brought there every day for the same purpose—but the moment he saw this one he seized him with delight and said: 'Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.' You see he was pure in heart, and so, where the temple priests and the multitude of spectators saw only a weak little baby, he saw God!

"It was so all through the life of Jesus. Wherever he went sinful, selfish men saw only another man like themselves, and reviled, persecuted and crucified him; but the few here and there who were watching for him, and sincerely desirous of doing the will of God, saw besides the patient, loving teacher and benevolent man what St. Paul calls 'the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.' And it has been so ever since. But people, careless people, selfish people, people wise in their own conceit, hear and read about Jesus, and think about him as they would about Napoleon or Washington, and don't care much about him. But to those who feel that they have sinned against God, and who are sincerely desirous to serve and love him—in other words, who are 'pure in heart'—the Holy Spirit reveals Jesus as 'precious' as the very Savior they need—as 'God manifest in the flesh.'"

Johnnie's companion had been rather restless during the long talk, and just then he knocked off the head of a flower with his cane.

"What is that?" said his teacher.

"Only a dandelion; I don't like flowers."

"But what do you see in it?"

Both boys guessed leaves, petals, color, smell, etc.

"Ah, yes," said the teacher; "but, more than all these, I see God!"

"Why, how can you see him?" said they both at once.

"When your school teacher explained to you that difficult example which you had tried so long to understand, what did you mean by saying, 'Now I see it,' Johnnie?"

"Why, I meant that I understood the rule, and knew all about it."

"Just so I look at this flower and know that God made it, and in all I learn about it I see him. So in the clouds and in the stars, in the mountains and the trees, in the rivers and the fields, everywhere I see God, who made them all, and still lives reflected in them."

"I never thought of that before," said the companion. "Is there any other way in which we can see God, sir?"

"What did you see when you went with me to carry food and medicine to that poor man who was crushed in the factory last week?"

"I saw a poor, miserable room, with no fire, no light, and, oh! I never shall forget the poor, agonized face. I felt sorry I had gone. How can you go to such places, Mr. Bell?"

"Because," said the teacher in a low, reverent voice, "in every such scene of suffering I see God, and hear his sweet voice saying, 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

Something in the teacher's manner awed the boys, and they did not speak till Johnnie said: "There's our house, and you have not yet told us how both the verses are true, Mr. Bell?"

"Because in all the ways I have spoken of, in the things that he has made and sustains, in the sorrowful and suffering to whom we minister, even in our dear Lord Jesus himself, we see only manifestations of God. He shows us, as it were, a little of himself, as he did to Moses; but God in his terrible majesty, before whom the angels vail their faces, we can never see till we stand, without fault, before the throne of God.

"Boys, let me ask you a solemn question before we part. Do you see God? When you look at all the beautiful things of which the world is full, do you love them better because God made them and is still in them. Do you like to do kind and helpful things for those who are in need, because you feel that you are doing them for God? Do you see Jesus to be your own Savior, who died for you, who forgives your sins, who hears your prayers, who stays with you and takes care of you and makes you happy all day?"

The boys did not answer, but they went quietly to their homes, resolved to pray that very day for that "pure heart," without which neither in this world nor the next could they "see God."—M. E. W., in New York Observer.

TELLING A LIE WITH A FINGER. A little boy, for a trick, pointed with his finger to the wrong road when a man asked him which way the doctor went. As a result the man missed the doctor and his little boy died, because the doctor came too late to take a fish-bone from his throat. At the funeral the minister said that the boy was killed by a lie, which another boy told with his finger.

"I suppose," says Uncle John, "that the boy did not know the mischief he did. Of course nobody thinks he meant to kill a little boy when he pointed the wrong way. He only wanted to have a little fun, but it was fun that cost somebody a great deal, and if he ever heard the result of it he must have felt guilty of doing a mean and wicked thing. We ought never to trifle with the truth." Congregationalist.

Grafting the Vine.

DOVE-TAIL METHOD.

The following method is copied from an English periodical, and is recommended as one of the best modes for changing valueless sorts, and, as with some varieties in this country, for improving the fruit by giving the vines a more vigorous set of roots:

There is not much difficulty in grafting the vine by any of the ordinary methods, but one of the best we have seen is that practiced by Mr. Johnston, of Terreagles Gardens, near Dumfries. Mr. Johnston has been a zealous and successful cultivator of the vine for more than thirty years, and has experimented a great deal upon it. He has tried every method of grafting known, and has come to the conclusion that for vines there is no better method than that which he practiced for a number of years with every success, and which he has very properly termed "dove-tail graftlug." It is simple, as well as sure, and fruit can be obtained from the graft the first year after its insertion. The grafting is performed in the following manner, and before the sap is in motion. The stock may be of one year's growth or more; but young wood from one to four years old is preferable. The places selected for inserting the graft should be opposite a bud or spur, with one or more buds to draw the flow of sap to the scion, which also prevents bleeding. Having selected the stock, the wood should be cut out of it from two to two and a half inches in length, to a depth corresponding to the thickness of the scion, in the same manner as dove-tailing in carpentry is performed. The scion is then prepared by being cut into the pith, leaving the bud in the middle, and made to fit neatly into the stock, after which it is firmly tied with matting and clayed over, leaving a small hole opposite the bud, so as not to obstruct its growth. A little moss is then tied over all, and kept moist for some time till the bud begins to grow. After it has grown some length the opposite shoots are shortened, and eventually taken off altogether. Mr. Johnston informed us that he had grafted old stunted wood in the above way where the wood was bare; but in cases of grafting young wood is to be preferred.

COOKING GREEN PEAS.—Cook them as soon after picking as possible. Marion Harland says: "Shell and lay them in cold water until they are ready for cooking." I say: Never wet them until you cook them, if you can avoid it. To secure this, shell them as clean as possible. Pour boiling water over them, and boil half an hour, or a little less if they are very tender. Do not salt them until they are soft, and then but lightly, their own flavor is so delicious. Add a little cream or milk if you have it, but never add any butter except the very best, and not that if you have cream.

SCIENTIFIC AND SAFE TREATMENT.

When applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche and accompanied with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery as constitutional treatment, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy produces perfect cures of the worst cases of Catarrh and Ozena of many years' standing. This thorough course of medication constitutes the only scientific, rational, safe and successful manner of treating this odious disease that has ever been offered to the afflicted. So successful has it proven that the proprietor has long offered a standing reward of $500 for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure.

INDISPUTABLE EVIDENCE.

Thomas J. Bishop, of South Brooklyn, New York, writes that his wife had suffered since a child with Catarrh, until it had resulted in what eminent physicians pronounced Consumption; that she has used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and they have worked wonders with her case.

STEALING OUR THUNDER.

People should beware of those impostors who not only try to imitate Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, but also copy his original style of advertising by offering various-sized rewards for cases of Catarrh and other diseases which they cannot cure. Those who do not possess sufficient intelligence to enable them to write original advertisements of their own, but have to steal those of others, are not likely to have made great and valuable discoveries in medicine. Look out for them.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase the Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

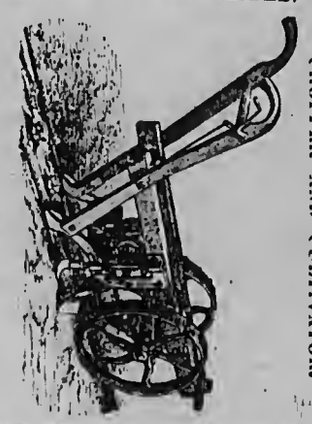
JUSTLY CELEBRATED.

THE DIAMOND COTTON CHOPPER AND CULTIVATOR.



THE GREATEST LABOR-SAVER OF the AGE; with ONE MAN and ONE HORSE does the work of from SIX to TWELVE men and from TWO to FOUR horses. It CHOPS and BARS both sides, WEEDS and HURTS the cotton at one operation. After which it is converted into a most excellent CULTIVATOR, for use between the rows throughout the season. This machine has been tested upon a growing crop, and proved a thorough, practical SUCCESS. It bears the highest TESTIMONIALS from our best cotton planters. It will soon become as indispensable to the cotton planter as the cotton gin or press. It has taken the grand sweepstakes prize, the GOLD MEDAL, at the Georgia State Fair as the latest and most valuable improvement in agricultural implements, and the first premium wherever it has been exhibited. Active and reliable AGENTS are wanted in every town and county, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Applications for agencies should be made without delay. Retail price of machine, with attachments, $35 and freight. A most excellent COTTON PLANTER and GUANO DISTRIBUTOR has been added to the machine. Price, $12 50 extra. MEDICAL.

DR. WILLIAM HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS,

THE

GREAT AMERICAN CONSUMPTIVE REMEDY

Consumption is NOT an incurable disease. Physicians assure us of this fact. It is only necessary to have the RIGHT REMEDY, and the terrible malady can be conquered.

HALL'S BALSAM IS THIS REMEDY.

It breaks up the NIGHT SWEATS, relieves the OPPRESSIVE TIGHTNESS ACROSS THE LUNGS, and heals the lacerated and excoriated surfaces which the venom of the disease produces.

While Life Lasts There is Hope.

It may not be too late to effect a cure even after the doctors have given you up.

HALL'S BALSAM is sold everywhere, and may be had at wholesale of the Proprietors, JOHN F. HENRY, CURRAN & CO., at their Great Medicine Warehouse, 8 and 9 College Place, New York. Price, $1 per bottle.

HALL'S BALSAM is also a sure remedy for

COUGHS,
COLDS,
PNEUMONIA,
BRONCHITIS,
ASTHMA,
SPITTING OF BLOOD,
CROUP,
WHOOPING COUGH,

and all other diseases of the respiratory organs.

Also Proprietors of Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup, Carbolic Salve, Edey's Troches, Oxygenated Bitters, Moll's Liver Pills, etc.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales...	8,860
Lake		16
Arkansas		2,872
Mobile		540
Florida		6
Texas		393
Total		12,707

On Saturday the movement was checked, and to some extent suspended, by an inclement rain-storm of unusual severity. Notwithstanding, several buyers came forward, twelve brokerage houses participating in the business, and took 4,850 bales. Low ordinary sold at 9@9 5-16c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 12¾c., good ordinary at 13⅜c., low middling at 14⅛@14⅜c., and strict low middling at 15⅛c. We heard reiterated complaints of the assortment on sale. On Monday the market opened with a more general demand, and the sales during the morning exceeded 2,000 bales, partly at previous rates, and partly at figures showing some improvement, but hardly a quotable advance, after which the movement became more animated, and prices hardened in most cases to the extent of ⅛c., and in some to ¼c. The sales embraced 9,900 bales. On Tuesday, under the falling off in the receipts this week, and an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool, factors raised their pretensions ⅛@¼c., which checked the movement, but the business, nevertheless, embraced 5,750 bales, partly at previous rates, but mostly at an advance of ⅛@¼c. The demand appeared to run especially on strict good ordinary, which commanded ⅛@¼c. over Monday's figures, but all grades, excepting good middling, for which there was little or no inquiry, participated in the improvement.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 20,800 bales, against 18,150 for the corresponding time last week, and 17,100 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,056,115 bales, against 977,371 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 317,510 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 65,872 to Great Britain, of 77,056 to France and of 32,124 to other foreign ports. BACON.—On Tuesday there was a marked improvement in the demand, and the market was decidedly firmer; 100 casks sold, in lots, at 9¼, 9⅝@9¾c. Subsequently offers of 9¾c. were refused for clear sides, with none to be had below 9¾c. Shoulders were quoted at 7@7¼c., as in quality and condition; clear rib sides 9¼c., clear sides 9¼@9¾c. ℔ lb.

HAMS.—On Saturday 15 tierces sold at 12¼c. ℔ lb., and on Monday 25 tierces at 12c., and 25 tierces on private terms.

LARD.—On Tuesday 50 kegs refined sold, in two equal lots, at 10c. ℔ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Monday 25 casks shoulders sold on the landing at 8¾c. ℔ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON.—Very little here, and Western commands 11¾@12c. ℔ lb. No New York in market.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 111⅞@112⅛ (against 111⅞ at New York,) and closed at 111⅜@112 (against 112 in that market.)

Nothing has been reported in silver. It is quoted at 106⅝@107⅜ for American half dollars and 106@106⅜ for Mexican dollars.

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

WATERS' CONCERTO AND ORCHESTRAL ORGANS are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever made. The Concerto and Orchestral Stops are the best ever placed in any Organs. They are produced by an extra set of reeds, peculiarly voiced. The effect of which is most charming and soul-stirring, while the imitation of the human voice is superb. These Organs are the best made in the United States.

WATERS' NEW SCALE PIANOS have great power and a fine singing tone, with all modern improvements, and are the best Pianos made. These Organs and Pianos are warranted for 6 years. Prices extremely low for cash, or part cash and balance in monthly or quarterly payments. Second-hand instruments taken in exchange. Great inducements to the trade. Agents wanted in every city and county in the United States and Canada. A large discount to Teachers, Ministers, Churches, Schools, Lodges, etc., etc. ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES MAILED.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR.
A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the Kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the Lives of the Bishops will be published in the DAILY; also a Pen-and-Ink Sketch of the Members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the greatest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the masterminds of the church—questions in which every Methodist will feel the liveliest concern.

The DAILY will be a handsome sheet of four pages, of good size, printed on good paper, and in clear type; and neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it all that the church may desire.

The services of a competent reporter have been secured, and the subscribers may rely on receiving the earliest intelligence of the deliberations of the Conference through the Daily.

Many persons desire to preserve the Proceedings and Debates of the General Conference in a permanent form. To all such we take pleasure in saying that the numbers of the DAILY ADVOCATE when bound will make a handsome volume that may be read with interest in years to come.

Address A. H. REDFORD, Agent,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Subscriptions will be received by ROBERT J. HARP, Agent, New Orleans. fe7 tf

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1874. NO. 13.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

CINCINNATI, March 18.—The Germans held an immense meeting last night, at Turner Hall, to take measures to resist the temperance movement. The hall was crowded, and hundreds had to leave. Speeches were made denouncing the woman movement.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 18.—The steamship Mikado brings intelligence from Honolulu that Prince Kalakao had been elected King of the Sandwich Islands, to succeed Kamalie. Elections quiet.

Commercial news unimportant.

A serious riot occurred at Honolulu upon the election of Kalakao as King. When the announcement of Emma's defeat was made a mob of the adherents attacked the House of the Assembly, beat several of the members (one of whom afterward died) tore up the seats and desks, and set fire to the house. The United States and British marines landed and dispersed the rioters. W. Greer, Minister for foreign affairs, tendered the thanks of the government for the timely interference of the marines. The King is still threatened with assassination.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., March 20.—Bald mountain is between Crooked Creek and Brend river, in McDowell county. The mountain extends into Rutherford county, and is usually called Stone mountain. The people within twenty-five miles have been terrified for twenty days by a quivering of the earth, and rumbling sounds, like artillery. All attribute the phenomena to Bald mountain. Some fifty dwellers upon its slopes say it seemed as though the mountain was giving way. The cattle, being alarmed, have left their usual ranges. People gathered in one locality, and were frightened into prayers. Preachers of various denominations present stated that the top of the rock sunk and smoke issued.

NEW YORK, March 21.—To-morrow will be a temperance field-day for the evangelical churches here. Ministers have pledged themselves to preach on the subject.

Charley Myers has capitulated to the crusaders, and his saloon in Brooklyn is closed. The women had three or four meetings there.

SHREVEPORT, March 21.—The railroad bridge over Red river, at Fulton, was finished yesterday. Trains on the Cairo and Fulton railroad will run after run to Texarkana without change. The river is nearly bank full from this place to the mouth, and is rising steadily. Raining every day. Heavy rise is reported from above, and an overflow is apprehended.

NEW YORK, March 22.—The temperance crusade was marked to-day by meetings in many of the churches throughout the city. At the Church of the Strangers there was a large attendance, and much enthusiasm was exhibited.

FOREIGN.

YOKOHAMA, Feb. 24.—The Japan Gazette of February 23 contains the following: On the twenty-fifth of January the Empress received the ladies and families of English, United States and Belgian ministers. The Mikado has ordered that his own income shall pay tax equally with his subjects. He will pay about $25,000.

When the government undertook to put down the rebellion of the Satsuma many of the military threw down their arms and refused to fight against their countrymen. The Gazette says people need have no fears for the safety of their friends in Japan, nor for the financial condition of the country. Imakura has nearly recovered. The census shows the population of the empire to be thirty-three million one hundred thousand.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 15.—A Catholic mob, on the night of March 9th attacked the Protestant chapel in Puebla, smashing the windows and furniture.

They destroyed the Bibles and hurled the pastor, Rev. Antonio Cebrian.

The State of Yucatan is utterly disorganized by the revolution.

The Tepic Indians continue their depredations. They have lately become mere daring, having defeated the government troops sent against them. Reinforcements have been dispatched.

THE OLDEST TIMBER IN THE WORLD.—Probably the oldest timber in the world, which has been subjected to the use of man, is that which is found in the ancient temples of Egypt. It is found in connection with stone-work which is known to be at least four thousand years old. The wood, and the only wood used in the construction of the temple, is the fern of ties holding the end of one stone to another in its upper surface. When two blocks were laid in place, then it appears that an excavation about an inch deep was made in each block, into which an hour-glass-shaped tie was driven. It is therefore very difficult to force any stone from its position. The ties appear to have been the tamerisk, or shittim wood, of which the ark was constructed, a sacred tree in ancient Egypt, and now very rarely found in the valley of the Nile. Those dovetied ties are just as sound now as the day of their insertion. Although fuel is extremely scarce in that country, these bits of wood are large enough to make it an object with the Arabs to heave off layer after layer of heavy stone for so small a prize. Had they been of bronze, the old temples would have been destroyed years ago, so precious would they have been for various purposes.

THE ORANGER'S SERENADE.

Oh, come, love, come, the moon is fair,
I'll celebrate the day with thee;
I'll merrily dig the Bartlett pear,
And shake the rutabaga-tree.

My sweetest! I am fond of mush,
And then will plant some oil for me;
We'll early sow the currant-bush,
And tap the cranberry jelly-tree.

We'll pull the wool from off the calf,
The cottonwood its fleece shall shed,
So at the winter we will laugh,
And gayly wear the oyster-bed.

We'll diligently hoe the winter wheat,
We'll rinse for eggs the squirrels lay,
And when the bantam hog shall bleat,
We'll feed him with some clover hay!

Dancing.

Dr. F. Hodson, an eminent divine, recently preached a sermon on dancing that has created quite a sensation in some sections.

As the doctor has voiced the general sentiment of the Christian Church, and is sustained in his views by leading clergymen of all denominations, even Roman Catholic bishops, his opinions are worthy of very careful consideration.

We admire the doctor's boldness in thus dealing with one of the most fashionable sins that ever tried to force itself upon the church. And we heartily agree with him when he says:

"I do not mean to say that all dances are equally objectionable, or that all who dance are upon the same level as to moral character. They, the dancers, range in descending grades, from the innocent and even the religious, down to the most degraded of society. Dancing is perhaps the most favorite amusement of the most vicious.

"The dancing circle sweeps nearer the verge of hell than any other. There is no room to stand between its nearest approach and the pit itself.

"But while I am free to admit that some who dance are truly religious and sincere in their aims and intentions, though misled, I am certain that above these there is a class which cannot be induced to dance.

"The best Christians do not dance."

After discussing the subject in its relation to Bible teaching, he gives the exegesis of the most important passages of Scripture, showing how, unlike the ball-room performances, were the religious movements of the ancient worshipers. There was no promiscuous dancing. The women and men worshiped separately.

The doctor discussed the evil at length under the following heads:

1. The danger and detriment to health which this practice involves.

2. The criminal waste of precious time.

3. It interferes with the education of youth in other respects. He quotes from Bishop Hopkins (Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the diocese of Vermont:) "It absorbs the chief attention of the pupils, and draws the thought to dress, to vanity and to premature flirtations. It is this, in fact, which invests it with such powerful influence, and it is this which makes it the active foe of all that should occupy the mind of youth at that delicate and important period. For it is a fact well known to experienced teachers that every other study loses its interest, except in the few who are happily destitute of personal attractions.

"The lessons drag through their former course, but the scholar's brains are filled with more interesting cogitations, and the efforts of the instructor are spent in vain. The improvement of the feet gains victory over the head. The practicing for a call inspires more enthusiasm than the day of examination. And that most unwise and mischievous indulgence, called children's party, concentrates all the solicitude of these young hearts in feelings of rival vanity and feverish impatience, which are not only not suited to their age, but perfectly hostile to the real work of education." We cannot give even the headings in full, but under the ninth objection he strikes at the root of the popular dances by quoting Dr. Brooks and Rev. Albert Barnes: "Dancing, balls and parties lead to forgetfulness of God. They nourish passion and sensual desires."

Dr. Palmer, a Presbyterian minister, speaking of the waltz, says: "The liberties, too, taken in the dance are such as can hardly be safe even when sanctioned by the sacred laws of kindred and tender friendship, and it seems strange to us that a freedom which, if indulged in ordinary intercourse, would be chastised as an impertinence, should be allowed in the public assembly, and even to perfect strangers."

The Baptist Quarterly Review is also quoted: "Passion, and nothing else, is the true basis of the popular dance. It mingles the sexes in such closeness of personal approach and contact as outside of the dance is not tolerated in respectable society." After a thorough canvass on the subject Dr. Hodson winds up with quotations from a published work of a professor of dancing. The arguments used by him in defense of the waltz and the polka, which he (the dancing master) says "arrives at that sort of giddiness which I may venture to call intoxication," fully justifies the position taken by Dr. Hodson and others. We are glad to learn that it is likely to be published in pamphlet form by the Methodist Book Concern of Philadelphia.—The Christian Woman.

SIR BARTLE FRERE recommends the British government to send another expedition to explore the Arctic seas.

LET NOT the stream of your life be always a murmuring stream.

Routes to General Conference.

The excellent committee on transportation, appointed by the Louisville Preachers' Meeting, consisting of Rev. E. W. Schou, D. D., Captain B. C. Levi and George R. Simpson, Esq., have been actively at work, as may be gathered from the following items indicating arrangements with the railroad and steamboat companies mentioned:

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.—From Baltimore or Washington to Louisville and return, $22. This is the regular rate. No reduction, on account of present low rate, which is less than two cents per mile.

Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad.—For members of the General Conference and visitors, the rates will be as follows: From Richmond to Louisville, $22.50, and from Charlottesville to Louisville, $20.50, and return free. Ticket good until used.

Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway.—"Will most cordially extend such facilities and terms to delegates to the General Conference as are accorded to the body by the Louisville and Nashville and Great Southern railroad, over which their tickets will have to read in order to reach Louisville."

Atlanta and New Orleans Short Line.—Will return all delegates and visitors free who pay full first-class fare going, upon the production of a certificate from the officers of the Conference stating that they attended the General Conference.

Georgia Railroad.—Will pass delegates and visitors to the General Conference at usual rates, and give them return tickets free. "Parties going must purchase tickets from our agents, who will furnish return tickets to them when they purchase their tickets. Return tickets good for thirty days." So writes the general ticket agent.

Macon and Brunswick Railroad.—Members, delegates and visitors will be charged full fare going, and be returned free upon the production of the "customary certificate."

Mobile and Montgomery Railroad. "Ticket agent of the road will be instructed to sell excursion tickets to delegates at the rate of six cents per mile going, and there will be attached to said ticket a coupon on which said parties can return free. Good for twenty-five days."

Houston and Texas Central Railway.—"Reduced rates for a reasonable time will be given to Red River City, the northern terminus of this line." So writes the general ticket agent.

The Lone Star Route—International and Great Northern Railroad. S. M. Miller, Esq., general ticket agent, thinks he can arrange a round-trip ticket to Louisville and return, and agrees to communicate with the lines forming the route from Houston, Texas, to Louisville. Such tickets will be placed at stations where it is known that delegates will start from.

Morgan's Lines U. S. M. Steamers and Louisiana and Texas Railroad. Charles A. Whitney & Co., agents at New Orleans, write: "Will with pleasure agree to your request, and pass at half rates parties holding properly authenticated papers, certifying that the object of their trip is to attend the Conference mentioned. Have referred copy of your letter to passenger agents of railroads here, with requests (if they agree to make concessions) that they correspond with passenger agents of Texas roads, so that through tickets can be had from points in the interior.

Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad.—Pass ministers of the gospel along their line at half fare.

Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, and also the Vandalia Route from St. Louis to Louisville, reserve their answer. It is very certain that they will extend reasonable accommodations.

St. Louis, Kansas and Northern Railway.—Whole fare going, one-fifth fare returning. Tickets, good for thirty days. Whether such tickets will be sold from Omaha to St. Louis, or from Kansas City to St. Louis, I am not advised. This is the route by which all delegates west of Missouri will come.

Elizabethtown and Paducah Railroad.—Will sell to all persons attending the General Conference excursion tickets at a discount of forty per cent. Return tickets to be certified by the secretary of the Conference. Good for twenty-four days.

Louisville and Nashville and Great Southern Railroad.—Will sell round-trip tickets at six cents per mile. Such tickets may be had at stations from April 25 to May 5, and will be good at any time during the session of the Conference or within five days after its adjournment. They also say: "We will also receive tickets of foreign roads coming to us at Montgomery, Nashville, Decatur and Memphis, or at any of our junction points, at one and one-fifth of the then existing through rate between the point from whence the party started and Louisville." As the General Conference is to be held in Louisville; as it will be composed of picked men—ministers and laymen—who will very greatly influence public opinion at home; as the character of Louisville, the headquarters of that railroad and the home of its chief officers, will be affected for or against, according to the impression made; as the business men of Louisville look with great interest to the General Conference as attracting the attention of the whole Southern Methodist Church—six hundred thousand communicants—to this city; as these things are true, and many more of equal force and equal truth, it does seem that the Louisville and Nashville and Great Southern railroad ought to be the most liberal, both in the accommodations afforded and rate charged. The reputation of the road will be at stake in both particulars. Nearly all the roads in the South charge only half rates. It does seem reasonable that the Louisville and Nashville and Great Southern railroad should be as accommodating as those roads which are remote from Louisville.

New Orleans and Jackson Road decline to confer any favors. So of the Memphis and Little Rock, Cairo and Fulton, and Atlantic and Pacific.

The Louisville, Evansville and Henderson Mail Company will charge full fare on their elegant steamers going, and return free; and the Evansville, Cairo and Memphis Steam Packet Company will act in connection with it at the same rate. That would be a lovely trip from Memphis to Louisville in May. The Ohio river scenery especially is beautiful, and the packets well appointed in every respect.

The Louisville and Cincinnati Mail Boats will carry passengers the round trip for $5, and "sleep 'em and eat 'em." This is about all that can be said on transportation at present.

I think it would be well for each delegate to send his postoffice address to some one of the stationed preachers here, as it may be important for several reasons; one is that the transportation companies may know at what points to furnish tickets. I make this suggestion upon my own responsibility, and as no one has been appointed to receive such communications, they may be addressed to the undersigned, at No. 350 Eighteenth street, Louisville, Kentucky. It will also be observed that several companies require evidence that the party is a delegate to the General Conference. I suppose the certificate of the secretary of the Annual Conference by which he was elected will be the best evidence.

General Conference Notice.

Delegates and brethren, having business with the General Conference, who, by reason of age or ill-health, or for any other reason, need any peculiar or special accommodation, and all who have made any private arrangements in answer to invitations, and those who have relatives or friends in the city with whom they expect to stay during session of General Conference, will please give such information by the fifteenth of April to

Our Catechisms.

Our catechisms, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, are eight in number, and are published separately and in one volume, which ought to be in the hands of every minister. In addition to the three Wesleyan catechisms prepared by Richard Watson, we have two by the late Bishop Capers (one of them being revised for the youngest children;) another of the same sort, "The Infant Manual," by S. F. Farr, and two Scripture catechisms adapted to young children, written by the editor, to give a general view of all parts of the Old Testament and the New—a volume being devoted to each. Appended to the second Wesleyan catechism—which we think is the best catechism in the world—is A Short Catechism of Scripture History, by Dr. Watts—prayers and graces—and questions and answers in rhyme. These are as simple as simplicity itself. We respectfully suggest that catechisms will be of no service unless they are taught and learned. Those which require no effort on the part of the child are of no value. The cry for something more simple is vain—it is like calling for royal roads to grammar, arithmetic, etc., over which a man may run without using his muscles. What we want is not more catechisms, but an honest and faithful use of those we have. It is not so easy a thing as some imagine to write or compile a catechism. Those who have children to train in religion should be careful to use a good form of sound words; and such we have set forth, authorized and recommended by the highest authorities of the church—the Bishops and General Conference.

Resolutions on Dress.

MR. EDITOR: The following resolutions were adopted, March 20, by the young ladies of Whitworth College. You will confer a favor upon us by publishing them in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Very respectfully,

ANNIE C. CRUTCHER,
LEONA E. HOLMES,
AUBIE V. MARSHALL
And others.

BROOKHAVEN, Miss., March 21, 1874.

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the article on dress in the last catalogue of Whitworth College.

Resolved, That in view of the sacrifices our parents are making to give us an education, we regard any display of dress during the commencement exercises as both unreasonable and in bad taste, and that we will neither practice nor countenance it.

Resolved, That during the closing exercises we will wear our usual dresses, and that only the senior class be expected to dress in white on commencement day.

IT IS a great mercy to enjoy the gospel of peace, but a greater to enjoy the peace of the gospel.

Letter from Bishop Keener.

PROTESTANTISM IN MEXICO—OUR CHAPEL—ORDINATION OF REV. A. HERNANDEZ.

CITY OF MEXICO, February 9, 1874.

EDITORS ADVOCATE: I find a very considerable improvement in our prospects in Mexico upon what they were twelve months ago. First, the amount of travel between this city and the English-speaking part of the world has largely increased. There are now the English mail-packets which ply every month between Vera Cruz and England, via Havana; the French steamer between here and France, and the New York steamer, both touching at Cuba; then a line of Liverpool freight steamers which touch at Galveston and New Orleans going, but not on their return trips.

The number of persons at the hotels at Vera Cruz and on the Mexican railroad—travelers who are prospecting for business or pleasure, from England, the West Indies, Germany and the United States—has largely increased. Could there be a semi-monthly packet from Galveston or Brashear City direct to Vera Cruz, it would take all the travel from Europe, as twelve days of the present sea voyage would be escaped, and travelers would have the relief and additional interest of a railroad trip from New York to New Orleans between the two sea trips of the whole route. This travel would be largely increased because of the cheapness and facility afforded our people to view the grandest scenery in the world—that of the Cordillera range and the plain of Mexico. To go from this point to New Orleans at present costs full twice as much as it would in the event of such direct communication. Think of it—Vera Cruz is only two and a half days from Galveston in a first-class steamer; no other should be put on if to compete with the present English and French lines.

Protestantism has now six churches, with good congregations listening every Sabbath to the word of God and preaching in the Spanish tongue. Three of these churches are very large audience-rooms. Last year there were but three large congregations at work. I suppose that from one thousand to fourteen hundred are regularly seated in these houses during service; half as many more, after the Catholic rabble, come in and stay for a season and then go out.

Bro. Daves is drawing to himself a good share of Mexican laborers; besides Bro. Hernandez, and Juarez, of whom I spoke last year as one of the first Protestants who, as early as 1866, had public service, and who presided once at a Protestant convention, the proceedings of which were published, and a young man by the name of Mota, who was secretary of that convention. Besides these, two others, one in the city and one at Zoyatzoulbe, are likely to be in his employ.

On yesterday I ordained Bro. Hernandez an elder. We had an excellent audience of Americans, English people and Mexicans in the house. The little chapel really looked grand with its high arches, pleasant light, painted walls and antique expression. Then, too, we had, not the organ, which is bought and waiting shipment at New Orleans, but a first-class piano, with a very fine performer—a blind Mexican—to aid in the hymns. The altar, which is a platform raised one foot from the floor and neatly carpeted, is separated from the body of the house by a balustrade railing, and is of the whole width of the church. In this altar were seated Bros. Daves, Hernandez, Dr. Romirez, formerly superintendent of Roman Catholic missions in California, now preaching for the Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. Dr. Cooper, formerly of Chicago, a good Spanish scholar, recently in charge of a mission at Orizaba; Rev. William Parks, agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society; Rev. W. Carter, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and Rev. Sosthenes Juarez. Spanish lessons were read by Mr. Carter. I preached a sermon in English (Acts v, 32.) The prayers and hymns were in Spanish; the ordination service part in English and part in Spanish. On the whole, it was the brightest day the little chapel had ever seen, may be, in all its history. Though I doubt not, some one or two hundred years ago, when it was probably built and dedicated, there might have been a grander display of stoled priests, of acolytes, of aromatic incense from swinging censers, and a richer melody from well-trained choristers; yet there was not there the shekinah of the Holy Spirit in richer glow, nor hearts swelling with purer love or more glorious hope.

We have everything in readiness to enlarge this house, which can be done at a small cost. It will then be worthy of the Methodist Episcopal Church, outside as well as in. The last payment on the purchase will be paid before this reaches you. For some days we have been looking for another suitable room in this city, in which to begin another congregation, to be served by Juarez and Mota. Several have been found, but the owners are loath to rent them for Protestant service. Though Catholicism here has been wounded to the death, the influential classes do not come forward to our services. They turn away from all churches. The excuse which the human heart seeks for as an apology for its temper toward God is easily found in the barefaced imposture of the Romish Church in Mexico. The process of appealing, not to men, but to God's word and to his Son Jesus Christ as the true pattern for whatever is true or noble or lovely or virtuous implies time and a general diffusion of the Holy Scriptures. A few men who could preach correctly and fluently in the Spanish tongue—men of faith and the Holy Ghost—could do a work here scarcely second to that of the apostles in the days of the Pentecost next after the death of our Lord. As yet we have no such men. But we have some who are rude in speech, and we trust and hope that the Spirit of all power will show that his treasures are entrusted still to earthen vessels to the praise of the glory of his grace.—Galveston Christian Advocate.

Our Work at the South.

MR. EDITOR: We had a notion of going to the North or West for the purpose of preaching the gospel, when, to our great surprise, we noticed in the ADVOCATE of the nineteenth ultimo an article entitled "Our Work at the South," containing some quotations from an article, bearing the same title, in the Methodist Quarterly Review, giving, somewhat, a history of the great work being carried on at the South by the Northern Methodist Church, the great work needed, etc.; also the failure of the Methodist Church South to accomplish this work, confining their labors chiefly to cities and large towns. Now, Mr. Editor, we live in the backwoods—in the pine hills. When we go to town we are called "boosiers." There are churches all around us. We have preaching in our immediate neighborhood; at one church five times each month—Methodist preaching three times, Hard-shell Baptist once, and missionary once. We think we could easily spare our Northern friends a preacher, if they need one, and a much better one than they send to the South. Our neighborhood is no exception. We have been traveling for some time as a colporteur; have never as yet found a neighborhood without preaching of some kind, and but few without Southern Methodist preaching. The negroes are no less destitute. They have plenty of preaching, such as it is. But the poorest preachers they have among them—the most superstitious and ignorant beings, without either character or brains—are those claiming to be sent by the Methodist Episcopal Church [illegible] as our knowledge extends, without exception, sent by the Northern Methodist Church to evangelize the South. The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America is doing more good and less harm than any other among the negroes. If the good people North, who give their millions to send missionaries to the South, knew what we do—and we wish they did—we give them credit for too much sense to give more. Better keep their money and missionaries at home, and evangelize themselves, if they can be evangelized by such toels. We can't. COLPORTEUR.

Scandinavian Sailors.

MR. EDITOR: Mrs. Browning in one line describes a large class:

"Kind—when they think of it."

We have many Christians in New Orleans who are kind and benevolent when worthy objects are pressed on their attention.

Our purpose in this note is simply to invite attention to an unpretending but important project in behalf of Scandinavian sailors. During the winter a meeting was held for the purpose of organizing a society for the spiritual profit of these sailors. This society appointed a number of citizens, representing different churches, as trustees. A few weeks ago the board met, organized, secured a charter, and elected a very worthy and useful man as chaplain.

The Scandinavian sailors are delighted, and hope to have a bethel of their own, where they can hear the gospel in their own tongue. They have subscribed liberally, and the chaplain is daily adding to the list. One of our own citizens is treasurer, and has mortgaged real estate as security for the funds placed in his care. On Monday, March 30, at half-past seven P. M., a public meeting will be held in the Congregational church, corner of Calliope and Prytania streets. The object of the meeting is to awaken a deeper interest in behalf of this organization. Several prominent speakers will deliver very brief addresses on the aims and usefulness of such societies. It is probable many persons would attend such a meeting if they could "think of it" at the time. Has the sailor any friends in New Orleans? We will see. JOHN MATHEWS.

Sunday School Union Anniversary.

The twenty-eighth anniversary of the New Orleans District Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will be celebrated on Sunday, April 5, 1874, in the Carondelet Street church, exercises commencing at half-past three o'clock P. M., in which all the schools will take part.

The schools will all meet for rehearsal at the same place on Saturday previous, April 4, at half-past three P. M.

By order of the president.

IF WE KNEW.

BY MRS. VIRGINIA PRANTZ.

Oh! if we knew the tears of sorrow
That so oft 'neath smiles abide,
We would forget our cold upbraidings,
And, methinks, forbear to chide.

Oh! if we knew each other better,
And the motives we conceal,
How our hearts would melt within us,
And what pity we would feel!

I doubt not that we all have crosses
Other hearts could hardly bear;
And every life has had its losses,
Which no human aid may share.

But when we see a fainting brother,
Shall we pass him by with scorn?
Should we thus follow Christ's example,
Or our Christian faith adorn?

Oh! could we hear the spirit-yearning
Of some brother in despair,
We'd think, perhaps, our troubles lighter,
And less burdensome our care.

Oh! could we hear the sigh that mingles
Oft with laughter seeming gay,
We'd leave the taunting word unspoken,
And something in kindness say.

If we could know the coldly seeming
Is to hide a breaking heart,
Would we by silence or reproaches
Add another painful dart?

How have we trampled on the wounded
In the battle-field of life!
By not uplifting erring comrades
Who have fall'n in the strife.

Let us not pass the golden moments,
When we might the wretched cheer;
For opportunities neglected
Will against us all appear.

To a Young Pastor.

MR. EDITOR: Not long since I received a letter from a young minister, who had just entered our Conference after graduating at one of our institutions of learning. He had been appointed by the Bishop to an important charge, and he desired to profit by my experience in promoting the interests of religion among the people of his charge. In answer I gave him the following suggestions, which, he afterward told me, he found profitable. Thinking that they might be of service to some other one in like circumstances, I have thought proper to forward them to you for publication, if you think them worthy.

1. I should say the first duty, on entering a pastoral charge, should be to acquaint yourself fully as to the character and standing of each member; try to know all about them; this you can do largely by conferring with your leaders and other official members. If you find any cases of immorality, call them up promptly, and do not suffer any to remain in the church who are an injury to it. As our Discipline says: "Be very mild, but very strict." In short, the Discipline gives the very best advice on that subject, and where it is properly administered the church will be vitalized, and exercise an influence that will be felt by the community. It is vain to attempt to reach sinners over a backslidden church.

2. In the next place, the church should be instructed with regard to her duty in promoting the work of Christ. Aim to enlist every member in this work; make them feel that they are God's witnesses, God's examples, God's laborers, God's soldiers. "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." God has endowed his people with various gifts, all of which are to be improved for his glory and used to advance his kingdom. Paul says: "For we are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." It is a great mistake to suppose that the entire responsibility of propagating the gospel and winning souls to Christ is laid upon the ministry. They are the leaders, while the laity are the warriors to fight, the workmen to build, and the examples to influence in putting down sin and saving men from eternal death. It is very important to get every member deeply impressed with a sense of his obligations to the world; to realize the worth of souls, and become deeply engaged for their salvation. "For as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children." Labor to get a spirit of prayer—earnest, importunate, believing, persevering prayer—in the church. God is a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God. No revival can be expected without prayer. God says: "Without me ye can do nothing." But, on the other hand, Paul says: "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me." We have every encouragement to come to God in prayer for revivals of religion; but it must be believing prayer; that is the only kind that God has promised to answer. Get the church to pray for particular objects, such as a deeper work of grace in their own hearts, a blessing upon the preaching of the word, the conversion of particular friends, etc. It would be well to invite members to solicit the prayers of the church, in unison with their own, for those objects in which they feel more especially interested. There is a special promise to united prayer.

3. The preaching should be plain and practical, abounding in illustrations drawn from the word of God, from every-day life, from observation and experience; but avoid everything like egotism or self-seeking, which is offensive to God. He is a jealous God, and will not give his glory to another. Aim to produce immediate results; preach a full, free and present salvation by faith in Jesus Christ. Ministers should not make the impression that their hearers can defer acceptance of salvation to a future period. The Bible gives no sanction to such a course. Its language is: "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Let every sermon be baptized with earnest, fervent prayer for the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit, without whose influences no saving or sanctifying effect will be accomplished. The sermon may be learned, eloquent, instructive and every way interesting, but the soul will not be truly convicted and converted to God unless the Holy Spirit make it the power of God unto salvation. The minister cannot be too deeply convinced of this fact. No doubt this is the reason why we see able, intellectual men often unsuccessful in winning souls, while quite ordinary men are famous for their success. The one relies on his intellectual powers, while the other relies exclusively on divine influence. Not that the cultivation of the intellect and thorough preparation should be condemned; the preacher should know everything, if possible, but trust in God's Holy Spirit for a blessing on his labors, and give him all the glory for the good that may be accomplished.

4. Pastoral visiting has a powerful influence in promoting the prosperity of the church. The pastor should strive to gain the affections and confidence of his people by showing a lively interest in their welfare, both temporal and spiritual. He should be in sympathy with them, especially in times of affliction; he should encourage their faith and trust in God, point them to the precious promises of the gospel, and pray with and for them that their afflictions may be sanctified. He should pay particular attention to the children and youth; speak kindly and pleasantly to them, and call their attention to religion, and make them feel that they have a personal interest in that subject, and caution them against procrastination. He should not have a somber look, nor austerity of manner, which would drive the young from him; but be cheerful and winning in his manner, and yet not wink at sinful, worldly amusements, which draw off the heart from God and religion, nor make any compromise of Christian and ministerial consistency. He should never be light and trifling, or indulge in "foolish talking," as Paul says, "and jesting, which are not convenient." Notice the children when you meet them, and endeavor to make them love you. This will not only have a good effect upon them, but upon their parents also.

The pastor should pay especial attention to the poor, not only in a religious sense, but also in aiding them temporally, or influencing the church to do so. It is a serious reflection upon a church that their poor members are neglected and left to the charities of the world. They should be regarded as our relatives, and more—as the representatives of Jesus. He says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." And, on the other hand, "inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me."

5. Aim to have a constant revival. Properly speaking, there should not be a necessity for a revival in the church, for the term implies a state of declension, langnor or indifference to the spiritual interests of ourselves or others, preceding. But such is our unbelief and tendency to evil that it is a rare thing to find an individual, much more an entire church, that lives up to his high prerogatives in Christ Jesus. But it should be the aim of the pastor to stimulate the faith of his people, and urge them forward in all their duties and the use of the means of grace, that they may be as the salt of their neighborhood, that their influence may be felt both by God and man—by God in the exercise of believing and prevailing prayer, and by men in their earnest and perseveriug efforts to lead them to reflection and repentance. A living, healthy church will as certainly be blessed with growth in numbers and grace as a healthy vine will produce its fruit in its season.

6. It is very important to get one or more of our religious papers into every family. They are like the weekly visits of a pious, intelligent minister; instructing the young people, stimulating the zeal of the older members of the household, defending our doctrines and usages when assailed, and giving information with regard to the operations of the church in the world. The pastor is vitally interested in circulating our organs among the people where he labors, and he will always find the most zealous co-operation among that class who take the church papers.*

7. When there appears to be an interest awakened among the people, appoint a protracted meeting. Labor to awaken an interest among your members for its success. Get them to covenant publicly to pray for it. Invite them to present their friends as special subjects of prayer. They need not call their names, but say: "A son or daughter or wife or husband solicits the prayers of the church for the conversion of their friends at that time." Appoint fasting in reference to the meeting; this is a very important means of grace, too much neglected by the people of God; it has a happy influence in promoting humility and faith.

When the meeting commences let every sermon offer present salvation by faith in Jesus. Do not leave the impression on the minds of sinners that they may wait till another time. No minister is authorized to offer salvation to any one to-morrow. The emphatic language of the Bible is: "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Therefore urge upon them immediate submission to Christ—immediate and unconditional surrender of their hearts to him. Impress the members that God requires their co-operation, and will hold them responsible for the influence they can exert.

I think it a good plan to enlist the co-operation of other denominations—make a common cause against a common enemy. Avoid controversial themes, only as circumstances may require. Erroneous doctrinal views, which may be in the way of the sinner's salvation, may be corrected; but all should be done in love and Christian meekness and kindness.

The preaching and praying should not be too long. Short prayers, short sermons, short exhortations should be the rule. Let there be much closet prayer—earnest, and for particular individuals, expecting an answer through Jesus Christ—and active, believing personal effort on the part of God's people. Get them to feel that it is their meeting, and not the preacher's alone, and urge every one to use his or her talent for the glory of God and the good of souls.

Education.

MR. EDITOR: We are aware that a great deal has been said and written upon the subject of education recently, and that, too, by those who are capable of handling the subject in its most comprehensive bearings.

It is not because we hope to offer anything new upon this subject that we pen this article, but because we consider this a subject that should be constantly recurring, in order to stimulate thought and suggest improvement. A subject so vitally important to society and the happiness of man cannot be too frequently discussed or thoroughly ventilated in order to give a healthy tone to public sentiment in this direction. "All legislation, whether human or divine, recognizes alike the reciprocal obligations existing between parent and child." One of the most important and binding obligations on the parents' side is the manifest duty to give their children all the mental and moral discipline in their power.

Heaven has constituted the parent the sole guardian of his child's temporal and spiritual interests; and woe to that parent who endeavors to shun the responsibility, or proves recreant to the sacred trust imposed. There are a number of reasons just now for recognizing the importance of the parents' moral obligation to educate their offspring. Prominent among these is the evident neglect, I might say utter indifference, of parents to the advantages that are now being afforded them for the liberal education of their children. Pure and strong as the parents' natural fondness for and desire to promote the best interests of their children, we doubt not, in almost every instance enables them safely to determine the best course to be pursued in the education of their offspring. We must, however, remember that sometimes, and frequently too is it the case, the fountain stream of parental affection is obstructed in its natural course, and inclinations as natural, and too often stronger, determine the father to pursue a course detrimental to the growth and symmetrical development of his child's mental capacities. Is not the parent too often influenced by the selfish consideration of gain in discussing the annual question: "Shall my boy go to school this year?" We imagine such obstruction has occasioned the evident decrease in interest in our schools at this juncture. We are aware that there are some who are not prepared to admit that this is strictly true. We appeal to facts. Take the country schools, academies and colleges in this State, and compare their numbers at present with the statistics of last year, and you will readily perceive a considerable diminution, without any cause to be alleged save the stringency of the times, low price of cotton, etc. We are reminded, just here, of a remark we heard an able educator in this State make several years ago. He said "an experience of many years justified him in saying that a depression in the cotton market was felt much sooner in the school-room than in the kitchen or parlor." In other words, that the butcher's and milliner's bill can be permitted to run on, while the school account must be stopped. The children can be permitted to grow up in ignorance more readily than the selfish father can forego his tobacco, the extravagant mother her fine new hat, or the petted elder sister shorten her usual extravagant allowance of artificials.

Thus it is that parents, both in the city and country, are pleading hard times and limited means as excuses for not sending their children to school, when really an honest examination of the causes would show that a little sacrifice and self-denial at home would enable them to send their children where they would receive such training as would qualify them to take a position in society of which their parents might be justly proud. As it is, they are growing rapidly, their physical education outstripping their mental and moral growth, and doomed for the rest of their days to be "hewers of wood and drawers of water," for lack not of natural capacity to be anything else, but for opportunities which their parents will be held responsible for not affording them. That there are those who form an exception to this rule or policy we doubt not, who, after economizing and sacrificing to the extent of their ability, despair of affording their offspring such advantages as they would desire to have them enjoy. The self-denial and sacrifices of such parents should be honored by industry in study and economy of time on the part of the child. But, alas! there are thousands of parents with whom the education of their children is the last instead of the first consideration; who care but very little for mental training, and still less for moral discipline; who regard boarding schools as a grand imposition upon the parent, and the Sabbath school as the greatest humbug of modern times. Such can conceive of nothing better in store for their child than to be simply what they have been—a cipher in society making, it is true, a sufficiency to supply their temporal wants, with an economy commendable, other things, dispensing with the need of anything like mental or moral improvement.

If I were ever tempted to believe in Darwinism it would be when I met with such specimens of the genus homo. In ante-bellum times things were different to what they are now. Education was not then, as it has become now with many, a necessity. Wealth and affluence enabled us to exercise an independence and indifference that we are no longer able to do, were we so disposed. The young man could then dictate to his father what course he would be pleased for him to pursue, and too often the indulgent parent would yield to these suggestions, and spend money freely to gratify the whims and extravagance of his son. Who is not aware that many of our large plantations in the holiday season were only pleasant resorts, where the youth spent their days in hunting and their nights in the wildest dissipation; who cared more for their hounds than for their books, and shared their love equally between their parents and their horses? Confident of temporal prosperity at least, and never dreaming of toiling with their own hands for a livelihood, the blow fell severely upon many who, to tell the truth, by education were neither prepared for the responsibilities of wealth, on the one hand, nor for the exigencies and difficulties to be overcome when it was finally wrenched from them. If the war did no other good, it at least taught the youth of this country to place a proper estimate upon the advantages of a sound education.

But who can fail to lament, in looking over the past history of their lives, that so many golden opportunities have been lost, so much talent doubtless wasted, by taking away the flower of their youth from books and study, and devoting it to idleness and pleasure? In retrospecting the history of such we are reminded of the lines of Gray:

"Hands that the rod of empire might have swayed,
Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre."

Many of these very young men are now doubtless thirsting for the opportunities they once slighted. But was not the fault the parents'? Was it not their indulgence then that caused their children to slight these advantages? And is it not their selfishness now, in many instances, that prevents their doing more for the education of their children? Parents, think of your fearful obligation and responsibility in this matter ere you decide to keep your boy or girl from school. See if there are no retrenchments in the domestic circle that could be made; no sacrifices too great to be yielded by which the education of your child could be secured, that his usefulness here and happiness hereafter might be promoted.

We are glad to see that our schools within the bounds of this Conference, appreciating the position of parents in these stringent times, are doing all they can to aid them in schooling their children by the reduction of board and tuition. The Rev. A. J. Briggs, agent for Centenary, at Summerfield, Alabama, announces that a considerable reduction in this respect has been made in both the male and female schools.

We trust that this measure will succeed in eliciting a large patronage for these excellent institutions, and that other schools may speedily follow their example in making a similar reduction.

W. A. RICE.

Temptations.

The nature of temptations, and their bearing upon Christian character and experience, is a subject that should interest every one. In its discussion we use the term in its most frequent New Testament sense—the presentation of motives to the will to influence it to the choice of wrong-doing. Such motives are not irresistible. If they were they would not make out a case of temptation, but of controlling force, depriving the person upon whom they act of the essential condition of responsibility. When one yields to such motives he is responsible, because he either has or may possess himself of the power to resist them. If he yields, it is an abuse of language to say he was overcome. The truth in such case is, he struck his colors and needlessly surrendered when the assault was made. Neither the Bible nor philosophy will sustain the plea, so frequently entered at the bar of conscience for wrong-doing, that it was under stress of temptation. Whoever else may share in the crime, there will be no parceling out of the retribution between the tempter and the tempted. Each will stand alone for his own act and its consequences.

The scriptural statement of the origin of temptations is that they are from an invisible, malignant spirit, called, by way of emphasis, "the tempter." Not that all motives to evil-doing are presented by one and the same malignant spirit; for to hold that they are would be to predicate ubiquity of satan, and ubiquity is an attribute of Deity alone. From various intimations in the Scriptures we learn that there are myriads of evil spirits employed in this work, all under the government of one who is "the prince of the devils." He also wins to his party many human beings, who no doubt learn and love to do his work with very little prompting on his part; yet he is responsible for and is the original source of all the temptations that afflict mankind. Hence we attribute to him what is done by his faithful proxies.

Whatever may be God's purpose in permitting us to be tempted, the object of satan, in following with persistence and skill his unholy calling, is to destroy. Filled with hatred to God, whom his malice cannot reach, he lets fly his shafts at those who are the objects of God's love. Miserable himself, the only solace he finds is in involving others in misery. His envious nature cannot bear to see this beautiful province of God's empire repose in peace and happiness. If he cannot destroy, he aims, at least, to mar it. From the ranks of God's children, made for eternal felicity, he is recruiting the empire of death. This is what he means when he places before us "the baits of pleasing ill." However desirable the momentary advantage or gratification, to yield is to die.

It is comforting to know that our temptations awaken special interest in heaven, comforting in proportion to the intensity of our anxiety concerning personal salvation. "For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." How appropriate to the Hebrew Christians was this apostolic assurance! Already hated and persecuted, a severer ordeal, if they held to their profession of faith, awaited them. Had they not better yield something of principle? Is it certain that God in Christ Jesus will make a full indemnification for all this suffering and loss? May not, at last, the foundations be insecure? Doubtless many were vibrating between the present advantages of apostasy and the ultimate advantages of steadfastness. No language can describe the sufferings of such a state of suspense. In such an hour we gather strength from human sympathy, especially when offered by one whose experience is parallel with ours. Elevate the thought to our "High Priest," and the resource is all-sufficient.

Every one who starts heavenward is made to know, in his essential nature, this bitter experience. It is natural to wish exemption from the ordeal; but that was denied even the Son of God. We are hedged in on every side by conditions which are made the occasions or instruments of temptation. How apt are we, when in the furnace, to conclude that ours is an isolated case. Not so. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man." The history of every one is embraced in one of two general statements—it is either a life-struggle against temptations or a life of captivity to them. Suffering "through manifold temptations!" Often the natural and social elements seem all under the control of the tempter, who lets them loose upon the Christian with remorseless fury. Losses come, and the fruits of a life of toil are swept away in an hour; a chair at the hearthstone is vacated forever; friends are treacherous, and love is unrequited; affliction prostrates—these and a thousand other vicissitudes are seized upon and polluted with the most plausible arguments to turn us from our trust in and fealty to God. To doubt now is to plunge into a spiritual Sahara, to be lost in the shifting sands of infidelity.

Happy he who has a clear perception of God's purpose in permitting us to be tempted. God hath declared it in his written word. It is for the "trial of" our "faith, being much more precious than of gold that perishes." In struggling with them spiritual force is developed. They make our Christian character stalwart—we come forth, when we play our part well, stronger, purer. What spheres of activity await us in the future, reaching even beyond time, we know not. We are under just the discipline that infinite wisdom sees to be necessary to prepare us for the demands of the future. The drill is laborious and irksome to the soldier, but it is necessary to prepare him to act his part on the field of conflict. The oak is shaken by the storm—every fiber is put under a strain; limb after limb is wrenched from its trunk; but it grasps the earth with a firmer hold in consequence. "My brethren, count it all joy when you fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."

"In that he (Christ) himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." He felt the enemy's position, drew his fire and stormed his stronghold. There are no depths of an experience of suffering that he hath not sounded. Tempted saint, when your sufferings seemed more than you could bear, the eyes that dropped tears at the grave of Lazarus were upon you. "Able to succor." This is the pledge of comfort to sustain, strength to overcome, and seasonable deliverance. "'Tis enough!

"Thou dost conduct thy people
Through torrents of temptation;
Nor will we fear, while thou art near,
The fire of tribulation.
The world, with sin and satan,
In vain our march opposes:
By thee we shall break through them all,
And sing the song of Moses."

Superannuated Preachers.

WHAT OUGHT TO BE DONE WITH THEM—DR. HAMILTON—PRESIDING ELDERS, ETC.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking as to the best method of disposing of the old men of the Conferences. They seem to be much in the way. Cut off, as I know some of them to be, from all the resources of the Conference, and from every field of labor, from year to year, I suggest that the next General Conference provide some decent way to get rid of them; and if nothing better can be done, I insist that they be killed publicly and in open daylight, rather than be hid out by presiding elders to starve to death by inches. In your paper of January 8 Dr. Hamilton takes Dr. Carpenter and Prof. Tyndall to task about the use of prayer-books, in which Dr. Hamilton says: "But what better could any set of prayer-books do? Who will answer? Can any man cite one single case, one indubitable case, of special answer to printed or read prayers? If so, let it be given." Now I agree with Dr. Hamilton perfectly, but will push his argument a step further. Prayer is prayer, and if God will not hear read or printed prayers, what becomes of such in the Methodist Ritual? Are they not as objectionable there as anywhere else? Most assuredly. And I for one would be glad if the last syllable of formal ritualism was stricken from the Methodist Discipline. I have long been satisfied that the nearer we live to the simple and naked teachings of the Bible, without any addition or emendation, the better. What has ritualism done for popery and the Episcopal Church?

Did Christ leave a perfect form of religious worship to his church, or was the subject left open for the improvement of the church, according to taste, in all succeeding ages? And if the subject is thus open, who is to say enough, either as to quality or quantity? Away, then, with all these additions to infinite wisdom. As the General Conference is soon to meet to overhaul the "Methodist machine," it is a question as to what improvement, if any, can be made. We think there is decided room. The presiding elder wheel must be remodeled and readjusted to the wants and demands of the church, or thrust out. A certain brother in the Nashville Advocate of January 24, 1874, has made some good suggestions on the subject. There is no church in Protestant Christendom so burdened with non-pastorates as the Methodist Church. Look at its Bishops, presiding elders, superannuates, supernumeraries, missionaries and local preachers all supported out of the pastorate, except one. The pastors have long felt this burden, and the laity also. The Wesleyans have them not. They are not essential to the itinerancy. What do they that the regular pastor cannot do? It is, as it now stands, a dangerous office, because it is well-nigh irresponsible, and in this direction there lies against it the heaviest objections. It has ever been looked upon by many of the brightest lights in the church with distrust and suspicion, and among these several bishops. If retained in the church, it must be reconstructed and readjusted so as to harmonize with the whole system, and so checked as to prevent abuse. I believe it can be and ought to be dispensed with. Is it right, is it just, is it safe for a certain class of men to sit in judgment on my character from year to year, and injure, stab and murder my influence and usefulness as a minister with perfect impunity, and where no redress is possible?

CHARLEY HARMAN, son of Job F. and Matilda Carter, died, in Jackson county, Mississippi, February 5, 1874, aged one year and ten days.

B. JONES.

DIED, of congestion, on Monday, January 12, 1874, SAMUEL PENNY FAULKNER, eldest child of Samuel Faulkner and Augusta J. Penny, aged seven years and two months.

It is said a better child was never known. Nothing could induce him to disobedience or untruthfulness in the smallest degree. Such natural sweetness of disposition was his that his parents depended much on his example for the molding of the characters of the other children of the household. May the affliction be sanctified to the bereaved parents.

S. H. S.

THE undersigned, appointed by the last Quarterly Conference of Durant circuit to draft suitable preamble and resolutions in reference to the death of J. M. WEEMS and A. J. ARNOLD, present the following:

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to remove from the church militant to the church triumphant two of our beloved brethren, J. M. Weems and A. J. Arnold, who were devoted and consistent Christians, exemplifying in their daily walk the truth and power of our holy religion, and who proved their love and devotion to the church by an active and prompt performance of their official duties; therefore,

Resolved, That we do fully realize the fact that the church has lost two of her faithful members and efficient stewards.

Resolved, That we tender the bereaved families of the deceased our sincere condolence and fervent prayers, and that we furnish them a copy of these resolutions.

Resolved, That the above be published in the Western Methodist and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MARCH 2, 1874.

DIED, in Washington county, Texas, November 6, 1873, Mrs. MARGARET A. MORRIS, sister of Mrs. Dr. G. W. Stewart, of Madison, Mississippi, who is so good, so careful, as an older sister. Mine was a sister and a mother to the younger children. And then so pious; at the age of sixteen, and in the stilly night, she was converted to God. She joined the Methodist Church, and was persecuted; but amid it all she ever adorned the profession she had made. Being early taught dancing, and a most excellent dancer, she was most earnestly solicited to again join the circle of her irreligious friends, and "trip the light fantastic toe;" but her reply was always: "No, no." When I visited our native land, six years ago, I looked for the dear old tree where she had oft led me in my childhood, and kneeled with and taught me to pray, but the ruthless hand of war had cut it away; but in my memory it stands fresh and green as then, and the seeds there sown will ripen in eternity. I loved and looked up to her as I did to my mother. After awhile a minister came from the West, joined the Holston Conference, and was sent to our village. Soon it was rumored that he was going to take my sister from us. I scarcely knew what it meant; but there came the white Canton crepe dress, cousins and friends, an abundance of cake, etc.; the young minister, and another with him, and before him they stood and breathed their nuptial vows. Then I realized that she was going from us. Oh, how we wept—such bitter, bitter tears! But she soon visited us. Then we wept tears of joy. Could her life be written, it would fill volumes; but amid all the changes, afflictions, disappointments and adverse circumstances to which we are subject here, she held fast her profession, ever adorning it, as in her youth. After living to the advanced age of seventy-six years in the bosom of her surviving children (her husband having died, with his armor on, several years ago) her son writes me: "My faithful Christian mother, in great peace, resignation, contentment and Christian triumph, has passed from us and is at rest. Oh, she was the best and most devoted of mothers, her life as unexceptional as any; and with the sweet memories of my dear mother my heart is filled." Sweet, gentle sister, shall I never more behold thee, never hear thy winning voice again? My heart grows sad at the thought; but faith whispers: "Over the river, where so many loved ones rest, I will meet thee, meet them, meet Jesus—the great Interpreter of all the mysteries of this life." Farewell, dearest and best of sisters, till then; and that thy mantle may fall on thy children is the prayer of their aunt,

THE LILY.

FROM THE GERMAN.

The water lieth as still as night
Beneath the flush of the sunset sky;
The wild deer drink of the crystal bright,
And swans come sailing silently by.

The fair child looseth his little bark,
His white oar plasheth the water through;
It is all so quiet, dreamy and dark;
"Perhaps," he whispers, "I'm dreaming too?"

The ripples laugh as they answer him,
The soft waves sing in his 'wildered ear;
From shore the voices come faint and dim,
And the distant mountains look large and near.

The dancing breezes of evening hours
Play through the gold of his tresses fair,
And bring him the perfumes of sleepy flowers
That hang their heads with a languid air.

But the water-lilies are still awake!
And they nod to him as the boat glides by;
They lift up their heads from the drowsy lake,
And he thinks he hears one whisper and sigh.

So he dreams no longer! With sudden joy
He bends from the boat o'er the water dim,
And with trembling fingers the darling boy
Gathers the Lily that whispered to him!

But hark! in the forest a voice of wrath!
The lake heaves up from an angry bed,
And suddenly down from the mountain path
Sweeps the Lady Moon, all in lurid red.

The water cries: "Dost thou steal my child?"
The forest roars: "Give me back my bride!"
And the moon is glaring so fierce and wild!
The boy flies back to his mother's side.

"O mother! storms o'er the lake have spread!
The forest roars and the mountains lower;
And the Lady Moon is so fierce and red
Because I gathered a Lily flower."

The Great Revival Preachers.

It has been remarked upon as an interesting fact that three such men as Jonathan Edwards, George Whitefield and Samuel Davies should have been cotemporary. They differed widely in their characteristics, but they were all "sons of thunder." Davies was less logical than Edwards, and had less extemporaneous fluency than Whitefield, but exceeded them both in true eloquence. Edwards acted upon men through their understanding; Whitefield through their imagination and passions; Davies through all the soul's avenues. He had such command of every faculty and affection that he swept the whole field of intellect and feeling. By fact, by argument, by description, by appeal, by entreaty, by expostulation he addressed man's entire spiritual nature, and roused it from its lowest depths. Edwards caused men to think deeply, and Whitefield made them feel strongly. But Davies accomplished both—awakening at once thought and emotion.

The successful preachers in later revivals pressed the consciences of men with the same truths and terrible earnestness as did their predecessors. Dr. Lyman Beecher, speaking of his preaching before a work of grace, says: "My object was to cut and thrust, hip and thigh, and not to ease off. I had been working a good part of a year with my heart burning, and my people feeling nothing. Now I took hold without mittens."

Says one, speaking from experience concerning the preaching of that day: "Oh, how we smarted under it. I remember it well in my own case. We complained of some of Paul's hard sayings, and wondered why our minister dwelt so much upon them. We wanted to get to heaven in some easier way. But instead of abating one jot or tittle to relieve us, they pressed harder and harder, driving us from one refuge to another, till there was no hiding-place left. The law which we had broken times without number we were made to feel was just; its penalty hung over our heads, and we must submit or die."

Dr. Griffin's statement on this point is worthy of careful study—the more so as he was a prince in pulpit oratory, and greatly blessed in revivals. He says: "Sinners have been constantly urged to immediate repentance, and every excuse has been taken away. At the same time we have not denied or concealed their dependence for the sake of convincing them of their obligations. On the contrary, we have esteemed it vital to urge their dependence in order to drive them from all reliance on their own strength, and to make them die to every hope from themselves. All that you can possibly gain by flattering their independence is to extort a confession of their obligations; for, as a matter of fact, they will not submit until they are made willing in the day of God's power. And if you can fasten upon them their obligations without that falsehood which robs God of his glory, let it be done. This we have found it possible to do. We have shown them that their obligations rest on their faculties, and as reasonable and complete as though the thing required was merely to walk across the floor; that their faculties constitute a natural ability—that is, a full power to love and serve God, if their hearts are well disposed, leaving nothing in the way but a bad heart, for which they are wholly to blame, if there is any blame in the universe; that sin can rest nowhere but in the heart, and that if you drive it beyond the heart you drive it out of existence; that they alone create the necessity for God to conquer them, and to decide whether he will conquer them or not; that it is an everlasting blot on creation that God has to speak a second time to induce creatures to love him, much more that he has to constrain them by his conquering power; and yet, after all his provisions and invitations—after he has sent his Son and Spirit to save them—after he has opened the door wide, and stands with open arms to receive them—they will break their way to perdition, if his almighty power do not prevent; that by their own fatal obstinacy they are cast entirely upon his will; that they are wholly in his hands; that if he frowns they die, if he smiles they live forever. This is the grandest of all means to press them out of themselves, to cast them dead and helpless upon God, to make them die that they may be made alive."

At a later day came Nettleton. He was solemn, affectionate and remarkably plain. His style was simple, perspicuous and energetic. His illustrations were familiar and striking; such as rendered his discourse intelligible to persons of the weakest capacity, and at the same time interesting to persons of the most cultivated intellect. He always commanded the attention of the audience. There was an earnestness in his manner which carried conviction to the minds of his hearers that he believed what he spoke, and that he believed it to be truth of everlasting moment; and there was also a directness in his preaching, which made the hearers feel that they were the persons addressed.

While on a visit to Scotland Dr. Nettleton preached in Edinburg; and during the sermon, while pressing home the claims of the Almighty, a woman who sat in a remote part of the house was so affected that, leaving her seat and walking up in front of the pulpit, she spoke aloud: "Dear sir, don't forget that 'God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life.'"—Dr. Fish's Hand-Book of Revivals.

The Lesson of Mill's Life.

We cannot regret that his autobiography should reveal the man in his weakness as well as in his strength. It cannot fail to move our sympathy for the tone of sadness which pervades its narrative from the beginning to the end. Why should this be so? Mr. Mill's life was in most respects eminently fortunate. The discipline of his childhood was severe and exacting, but he bore it with a cheerful spirit, for he was animated by the consciousness of growing intellectual power. Though his companions were few, yet their sympathy was complete, and they hailed his promise with inspiriting delight. His public career was one of constant progress in the consciousness of increasing power and increasing reputation. The publicists of Great Britain who had treated him with contemptuous neglect, first honored him with criticism and then with deference, and finally with sympathy. The universities, which in his youth had no words too biting for their jeers and their scorn, furnished many devoted adherents not merely to his measures of reform, but to his speculative principles, in spite of their alleged and real incompatibility with any form of theism. His labors at the pen and in self-discipline were constant; yet he knew no pleasure so exhilarating as studies and labors like these. But he was not satisfied. Sentimental benevolence and imaginative self-culture widened his mind, and softened and elevated his sensibilities. Human affection then took him up. He loved a woman who more than satisfied his ideal in her intellect, her temper and her enthusiastic sympathy with his aims and labors and studies. But he gives no evidence that either his mind or his heart ever attained to peace. He was without God by his own ostentatious confession. That he was without hope in the eminent sense of the word is confessed in every line of this life. After the removal of her who impersonated the best, if not all, of love that he ever enjoyed, he dwelt as near to her tomb as he could, that he might feel that she was near to him. Her memory was his religion, not the belief in her immortal existence. Her approbation was the only standard in the actual and ideal universe by which he sought to regulate his life, and yet her approbation was only a sentimental fiction.

We have already adverted to the saying of Mr. Mill that many atheists of his acquaintance were the most religious of persons, having the advantage, as he contends, of forming for themselves a perfect ideal of goodness, to which they could accord the profoundest reverence and the most devout affection. We do not care to dispute this opinion. We might concede that what he says is possible in certain exceptional cases. But it should never be forgotten that these persons have been trained in a community that is full of Christian theism, and have breathed from their infancy an atmosphere that is fragrant with the elements of faith and love for a personal and loving God. It may not be surprising that persons of brooding, speculative habits, or morbid sensitiveness to all dogmatic propositions or doubtful arguments concerning a personal God, and especially that persons who are oppressed with the awful weight of evil in the universe should flee to the sanctuary of their own idealizations, instead of committing themselves to the acknowledgment of an infinite Person, because they cannot grasp all the relations of existence by their limited powers, or explain everything that happens in consistency with his infinite love.

This may be so, but Mr. Mill's experience testifies in many ways that the universe is darker rather than brighter to any soul that does not attach his ideal of perfect purity to a living person. Mr. Mill, sitting by the grave of the wife who was his only animating ideal of perfection when she was alive, and now mourning that she is no longer a living presence, is a representative of all those religious idealists who think to content themselves with ideal objects of worship, to whom they strive "to feel that they are near." There are many such, as we believe, who mournfully, if unconsciously, cry out for the living God, in the aspiration if not in the words: "Oh! that I knew where I might find him!"—Scribner's for March.

Luther's Burial.

The body of Luther, encased in a leaden coffin, was placed in St. Andrew's church, at Eisleben, on the nineteenth of February, 1546. On the following morning, after appropriate funeral services conducted by pastor Coelius, it was placed upon a hearse and taken to Wittenberg for burial. The following description of the funeral cortege and of the burial of Luther is given by Dr. Stowe:

"As the mournful procession began to move from Eisleben, the whole city and surrounding country were emptied of their inhabitants, who crowded after the hearse, and by their tears and sobs and loud weeping testified how deeply they felt their loss. At five o'clock in the evening the train arrived before the walls of Halle, and here the crowd became so dense that they were two hours in forcing the hearse along from the gate to St. Mary's church, a distance of about fifteen or twenty rods. As the hearse was slowly making its way along through the mass of human beings, a voice in the crowd began to sing the first hymn which Luther published:

'Aus tiefer Noth schrei ich zu dir,
Mein Gott erhor mein Rufen.'
('In deep distress I call to thee,
My God regard my crying—') and the whole multitude joined in the singing, but could scarcely complete a single line before their voices were choked by their sobs, and they all wept aloud. Then they began to sing again; and thus, alternately singing and weeping, they at length deposited the body in St. Mary's church; and even then they could not be persuaded to disperse, but stood around the church the whole night.

"At six o'clock in the morning of the twenty-first the hearse started again, followed by the same weeping throng, and meeting everywhere on the way the same demonstrations of grief; and at midday on the twenty-second it arrived before the outer gate at Wittenberg, where it was met with all the honors which could be conferred on a sovereign prince. The mayor's carriage stood just outside of the gate, and in it were the bereaved wife and her younger children, awaiting the arrival of her elder sons with the dead body of their father. There were many affecting scenes connected with Luther's death, but none more thrilling, more heart-rending than the meeting of that mother and her sons.

"After some interruption the procession went on to the castle church, which was immediately crowded in every part; every door and window was filled, and every street and avenue leading to it was thronged with mourners intently weeping. Bugenhagen and Melanchthon were in the pulpit. The first arose, and with tolerable composure pronounced his text, First Thessalonians iv, 13-15; but the moment he commenced his sermon he broke out into an uncontrollable fit of weeping, in which all the congregation joined; and the infection spreading through the streets and avenues without, the whole city resounded with one loud and bitter wail.

"At length they were hushed to silence, and the sermon was resumed. After the sermon by Bugenhagen, Melanchthon addressed the members of the university in Latin, and the coffin was lowered into the vault, under the broad aisle beneath the pulpit. The vast assembly broke up, and each man returned to his home, pondering within himself and intently wondering whether it could be really so that never again would they see Luther's noble form in their streets, and never again hear his thrilling voice in their churches. He had lived and taught and preached in Wittenberg thirty-eight years, and from the time of his first arrival had been the central point of interest to all who inhabited or visited the city, and is so to this day.

"After the lapse of three centuries the city of Wittenberg, though one of the strongest fortresses and most important military stations in Europe—and though it has been the scene of battles and sieges which might have immortalized any other town—is seldom thought of or visited except as the place where Luther labored, and where his bones are buried. * * * The grave of Luther is secured by an iron grating, and covered with a thick, heavy plate of bronze, on which is the following simple inscription: 'Martini Lutheri S. Theologiæ doctoris corpus h. l. s. e., qui anno Christi MDLVVI. XII. Cal. Martii Eyslebii in patria S. M. O. C. V. ann. LXIIIMIIDX.'"

What Prayer Has Done.

Abraham's servant prays—Rebekah appears. Jacob wrestles and prays—the angel is conquered, and Esau's mind is wonderfully turned from the revengeful purpose he had harbored for twenty years. Moses cries to God—the sea is divided. Moses prays—Amalek is discomfited. Joshua prays—Achan is discovered. Hannah prays—Samuel is born. David prays—Ahithopel hangs himself. Asa prays—a victory is gained. Jehoshaphat prays—the lions are muzzled. Daniel prays—the seventy weeks are revealed. Mordecai bade Esther fast—Haman is hanged on his own gallows in three days. Ezra prays at Ahara—God answers. Nehemiah darts a prayer—the king's heart is softened in a minute. Elijah prays—rain descends apace. Elisha prays—Jordan is divided. Elisha prays—a child's soul comes back. The church prays ardently—Peter is delivered by an angel. Peter and Silas prayed and sang praises—the doors of the prison were opened and every man's bands were loosed. Prayer has a thousand commands and promises. Prayer has a thousand examples of rich success. Prayer has divided seas, rolled up flowing rivers, made flinty rocks gush into fountains, quenched flames of fire, muzzled lions, disarmed vipers and poisons, marshaled the stars against the wicked, stopped the course of the moon, arrested the rapid sun in its giant's race, burst open iron gates, recalled souls from eternity, conquered the strongest devils, commanded legions of angels down from heaven, conquered Christ himself, the mighty God. Prayer has bridled and chained the raging passions of men, has routed and destroyed vast armies of proud, daring and blustering atheists; witness one hundred and eighty-six thousand dead in a single night. Prayer has fetched one man from the bottom of the sea, and carried another man in a chariot of fire to heaven. Prayer has shut heaven for three years, and then opened it.—Dr. Ryland.

THE Memphis Avalanche thinks that the candidate for governor ought "to be a man who is visible to the naked eye." That does seem a fair requirement.

The Preaching that Saves.

The following description of the preaching blessed of God in saving souls is given in Dr. Fish's Hand-Book of Revivals:

"Intense yearning for souls is a condition of powerful preaching. Whitefield was remarkable for this. It spoke in his manner, his looks, his words. 'I love those who thunder out the word,' he said; 'the Christian world is in a deep sleep, and nothing but a loud voice can awaken them out of it.' A certain baronet said to a friend: 'Mr. B., this Whitefield is truly a great man—he is the founder of a new religion.'

"'A new religion, sir?' exclaimed Mr. B.

"'Yes,' said the baronet; 'what do you call it?'

"'Nothing,' rejoined the other, 'but the old religion revived with energy, and heated as if the minister really meant what he said.'

"It is said that Whitefield would sometimes rise in the pulpit, and for a minute or two, looking in silence around his vast audience, as if salvation or perdition teemed in every cast of his eye, would burst into tears, while the swift contagion reached every heart that could feel and dimmed every eye that could weep. There was pleading for souls in his very looks. And it was the gushing of a full heart.

"In Vincent's little book, God's Terrible Voice in the City, is a description of the preaching of the few faithful ministers who stayed at their posts during the great plague and fire in London. These men lifted up their voices like a trumpet, and spared not. Every sermon might be their last. Graves were lying open around them; life seemed now not merely a handbreadth, but a hairbreadth; death was nearer now than ever; eternity stood out in all its vast reality; souls were felt to be precious; opportunities were no longer to be trifled away; every hour possessed a value beyond the wealth of kingdoms; the world was now a passing, vanishing shadow, and man's days on earth had been cut down from threescore years and ten into the twinkling of an eye. 'Oh, how they preached! No polished periods, no learned arguments, no labored paragraphs chilled their appeals or rendered their discourses unintelligible. No fear of man, no love of popular applause, no overscrupulous dread of strong expressions, no fear of excitement or enthusiasm prevented them from pouring out the whole fervor of their hearts, that yearned with tenderness unutterable over dying souls.'"

HIGH RAILWAY POINTS.—The altitude of the highest point in the world where railways are now in operation is at Apizaco, on the Vera Cruz and Mexico railway, 7,478 feet above the level of the sea. The next highest is on the Central Pacific, in the Nevada range, 7,111 feet above the level of the sea. The third is at Arequipa, an important city in Peru, 7,000 feet above the level of the sea, and, under the Peruvian railway system, the work is to be continued, and is expected to reach double that altitude. It sets out upon an ascent, to pass to the west of the Eastern Cordilleras, and puts itself thus in connection with the famous lake of Titicaca and the entire Andine Bolivia, also with the great historic realm of the Incas, the ancient capital of Cuzco, and must reach a point at the breath-taking height of 14,000 feet above the level of the sea—less than 4,000 feet lower than the crater of Popocatepetl, and over 6,000 feet higher than the City of Mexico. The inspirations of our Peruvian neighbors are shown by these vast undertakings to be as grand as the traditional empire of their Incas, and as lofty as the sublime heights of their magnificent Cordilleras.

NO MUSTACHES!—In the London Illustrated News collection of "curious wills" it appears that in one Mr. Henry Budd declared by his will, proved in 1862, that: "In case my son Edward shall wear mustaches, then the devise hereinbefore contained in favor of him, his appointees, heirs and assigns of my said estate called Pepper Park, shall be void; and I devise the same estate to my son William, his appointees, heirs and assigns. And in case my said son William shall wear mustaches, then the devise hereinbefore contained in favor of him, his appointees, heirs and assigns of my said estate called Twickenham Park, shall be void; and I devise the said estate to my said son Edward, his appointees, heirs and assigns." Mr. Budd's example was followed in April, 1869, by Mr. Fleming, an appraiser and upholsterer of Pimlico, who by his will gave to the different men in his employ £10 each; but to those who persist in wearing the mustache, £5 only.

WHAT WE DO IN FIFTY YEARS.—Some of our readers, says the Christian Intelligencer, who have lived fifty years may be glad to know what they have accomplished in that time. According to a French statistician the average man has at that age slept 6,000 days, worked 19,500 days, walked 800 days, amused himself 4,000 days, spent 1,200 days in eating, and been sick 500 days. He has eaten 17,000 pounds of bread, 16,000 pounds of meat, 4,000 pounds of vegetables, fish, etc., and drank 7,000 gallons of liquids. There are 18,250 days in half a century, and from the above statement it would seem that a man slept just one-third of the time.

A LADY who had received a severe bite on her arm from a dog went to Dr. Abernethy, but, hearing of his aversion to hear the statement of particulars, she merely uncovered the injured part and held it before him in silence. After examining it, he said in an inquiring tone: "Scratch?" "Bite," said the lady. "Cat?" inquired the doctor. "Dog," rejoined the lady. So delighted was the doctor with the brevity and promptness of the lady's answers that he exclaimed: "Zounds, madam, you are the most sensible woman I have met with in all my life!"

Religious Intelligence.

THE Old Catholics have now 100 parochial charges in Germany, and 60,000 enrolled members.

THE presbytery of Halifax have unanimously approved of the proposed union of the Kirk of Scotland with the Canada Presbyterian Church.

THE American Bible Society has appointed Bishop W. L. Harris, who is now abroad, a delegate to the British and Foreign Bible Society, at their anniversary to be held in May.

THE Rev. Mr. Kirkley, of the Wesleyan Kaffir mission, reports a revival growing out of a temperance movement. His congregation had been much afflicted with drunkenness. As a last resource, all who drank were excluded, until the society was reduced to ten. Then a revival commenced, by which the attendants on class meeting were increased to two hundred, and the rule was established that no member of the society be allowed to make or drink Kaffir beer.

IT WAS pretty strong testimony in favor of the much criticised Sunday school singing of our day which was given by a member of the Friends Conference at Lynn, when he said that "five out of seven pupils of a school under his knowledge, who died triumphantly, on their deathbeds acknowledged that they had been brought to Jesus through the instrumentality of hymns sung in the mission school." Would any claim that children have no right to be won to the Savior through this agency?

REV. MR. GREENE, of the American Board, writing to the Missionary Herald from Kobe, Japan, reports much interest in the hearing of the gospel, and the prospect of the speedy organization of a native church at Kobe, with a nucleus of five young men. The converts to Christianity in Japan have thus far, in marked contrast with the work in China, consisted almost exclusively of persons from the intelligent class of the community. The poor are as yet too timid to be reached. Mr. Greene strongly objects to the plan of supporting Japanese students for the ministry at the present time, believing that such a step would degrade Christianity in the sight of the people. "If this be the true religion its teachers should propagate it from the love of it" seems to be the present feeling.

THE London Missionary Society last year sent a deputation to Madagascar, headed by Dr. Mullens, its secretary. It was felt, in view of the wonderful increase of adherents from 37,000 in 1868 to 280,000 in 1872, and of church members from 2,000 to 67,000, that the subject of Madagascar Christianity should be studied on the spot, with especial reference to the training of native pastors and teachers, to the extension of sound education, and to the increase of a native literature. The deputation, having left London July 2, reached Tamatave, Madagascar, August 14, via Mauritius. The remarkable and often-described journey of 200 miles from the seashore to the interior highlands was made in 12 days. The reception of Mr. Mullens and his friends at the capital, Antananarivo, was in striking contrast with the visit of the missionary Ellis, nearly twenty years ago. Their Christianity dared only be mentioned in the strictest confidence; and Mr. Ellis did not publish the names of any of the Christians with whom he had conversed, for fear of involving them in persecutions at home. Now the London deputation was greeted at some distance from the capital by several bands of missionaries, and a little outside of the city by the whole mission, including native ministers and students. Arrived in the city, their first duty was to visit the numerous church buildings, the central school and the theological class, and to address crowded meetings in various places. The Queen received them cordially, and frankly expressed her love for Christ. The results of their examination into Madagascar church affairs have not yet been published. Independent.

OLD CATHOLIC MOVEMENT IN THE JURA.—The Abbe Deramey was installed in the important cure of Porrentruy, on Sunday, the nineteenth of November. The ceremony was attended by more than seven hundred persons, including several local dignitaries, with the Abbe Herzog, now Cure of Olten, and several other Old Catholic ecclesiastics. Two counselors of State from Berne were also in attendance. Several other installations were soon to follow in the same district. The Paris correspondent of the Guardian says: "There seems no longer to exist any doubt that the whole or nearly the whole of the Swiss Jura has gone over en masse to the Old Catholic movement, expelled the Ultramontane clergy, and thrown off its spiritual subjection to Rome. The greater portion of the newly-installed clergy will be French, giving considerable color to the assertion, which has always been made by some of its members, that a great many more are ready to "speak out," if only a new career and means of existence could be open to them. Some of the names are also of Swiss or German Roman Catholic origin, and one even from the diocese of Luzerne." The Abbe Deramey is a very well-known theological writer, a doctor of the Sorbonne, and author, among other things, of a Defense du Quatrieme Evangile, and L'Apotre St. Paul et sa Doctrine, a second edition of the latter being now just published. We are also indebted to him for a careful revision of the French text of a translation of the Rev. J. J. Blunt's Sketch of the Reformation in England, which has lately been published here by the Anglo-Continental Society. He is a man of great personal activity and energy, as well as learning, and very well fitted on that account for conducting the movement of which he has put himself at the head, and for the sake of which he sacrifices both prospects and country.—Methodist.

A SPECIAL correspondent of the London Times, writing from Cuba, informs that journal that the State religion there, "such as it is" (it is, of course, Roman Catholic,) has no hold whatever on the masses. He goes on to say: "In towns like Cienfuegos or Manzanillo, numbering from 12,000 to 15,000 inhabitants, there is only one church with three priests. Those who are acquainted with the rites of the Roman Catholic Church well know that three priests could not, even by superhuman efforts, administer the sacraments to the one hundredth part of their flock. In an Italian town of the same size and population there would be a bishop, one or more chapters of fat canons, a seminary, at least 300 priests, and half a dozen religious communities of both sexes. I do not know that Cienfuegos and Manzanillo complain of this scanty allowance of religious instructors, or that they are much the worse off for it. Here at Santiago we have an archbishop and a whole hierarchy, and an incessant ringing of bells; yet I hear nothing but evil reports of priests, who, like the lay officials, are mostly Spaniards, bent on making money and enjoying life, and anxious to go back to the mother country with the spoils of the colony. A planter near Cienfuegos, the other day, visited with some misgivings as to his duties, wished to have the small fry of his negroes baptized. It was time, he thought, that the poor Africans should cease to be brought up like dumb cattle, and it was well that they should be made Christians before they aspired to be freemen. The priest who performed the ceremony claimed the fee of one ounce ($17, or 3*l.* 8*s.*) for each of the christened children, and he enforced payment; but the result was to deter other slave owners from bringing their cria or negro nursery to the font, so that the little Africans will grow up as unmitigated heathens as their fathers were before them. It is easy to say that so venal and debased a religion is no better than no religion at all; but no religion in Cuba is tantamount to no morality and no instruction. There is absolutely no reading in this country, and even at Santiago, a town of 40,000 inhabitants, so far as I can see, no book shop."

AT THE well-known Allahabad Missionary Conference of last year Dr. Wilson, the veteran missionary of the Free Church at Bombay, read a paper on "Preaching to the Hindoos." In this paper he gives a striking account of the inventive and accommodative character of Hindooism, which we quote: "The lower classes Hindooism leaves in the depths of ignorance and darkness, without making any attempt to promote their elevation. The indolent and inane, succumbing to its trying climate, it leaves in undisturbed repose. To the curious and inquisitive it furnishes, in its remarkable schools of philosophy, systems of combined physics and metaphysics, at once empirical and deductive, and which exercise and yet weaken and pervert the intellectual faculties, and that without any clear recognition of moral obligation and duty to God or man. To the lovers of excitement and amusement it furnishes a boundless store of myths, fables and fictions. To the active and superstitious it affords a never-ending round of foolish and frivolous ceremonies, which engross most of their time and energies. To the rich, wealthy and powerful it liberally promises and sells pleasure in this world, with the expectancy of its continuance in those which are hoped will come. Those who love to rove it sends away on distant journeys and pilgrimages. Those who are morbid and melancholy it settles on the hill of ashes. Those who are disgusted with the world it points to the wilderness. Those who are tired of life it directs to the funeral pile, the Idol' ear or the lofty precipice. To those who are afraid of sin it prescribes easy and frivolous penances, or directs to the sacred lake or river in which they may be cleansed from all pollution. Those who need a mediator it commends to the Guru, who will supply all deficiencies and answer all demands. To those who are afraid of death it gives the hope of future births, which may either be in a rising or in a descending scale. Those who shrink from the view of these repeated births in human and infra-human forms it directs to the absorption of the Vedantish or the Nirvana, the totally unconscious existence or absolute existence or absolute extinction of the soul of the Buddhist or the Jaina. Need we wonder that Hindooism has its millions of votaries, and that, with some conspicuous losses, it has retained them for thousands of years, up to the present day?" The Hindoos, like other Eastern peoples, are very fond of parables. Dr. Wilson gives a number of interesting instances of the manner in which he has secured an audience, when on his preaching tours, by means of a parable. Here is one of them: "On one occasion I observed a large number of people belonging to a village which I was passing engaged in carrying a heavy tree, with the branches cut off. They put it down to draw breath for a little. Approaching them I said: 'I see a heavier burden still on your backs than that which you have now put down.' 'What!' said they. 'You must be speaking parabolically to us.' 'Well, what is the burden?' 'It is the wife and children,' cried one, evidently expecting my assent. 'Oh! no,' I replied; 'don't say that. Your wife performs more than half of the work of the family; and as for the children, you may have been asking them for years from the idols, who could not give them to you, before you got them from God, in the exercise of his own good pleasure.' 'It is,' cried another, 'the Sirkar or government, which imposes on us heavy taxes.' 'Oh! don't,' I said, 'complain of the Sirkar. With the taxes it levies from you it furnishes you with roads and bridges and such like conveniences, pays for a police and army to protect your property and your lives, and maintains a judicial establishment to settle your quarrels and disputes.' 'What, then, can you possibly mean?' they asked. 'I mean,' I said, 'the burden of sin.' And thus I had at once found my text and an attentive audience."

Out of Season.

So urgent is the gospel message that it must be proclaimed not only at the most favored times, but also when it might seem out of place and useless. There is danger of depending too much upon opportunity, and of limiting our efforts to stated methods and periods. What is popularly out of season may prove to be the most fruitful in results; and that which crosses the line of habit, usage and convenience may for this very reason turn out wonderfully well. "In season, out of season," is the admonition to Christian workers. Regularly and irregularly, in the appointed means and services, and at the hours of worship, but also going beyond and overflowing the banks and dikes of stated ordinances and organized labors. We are strongly tempted to follow our personal ease and convenience, and to lapse into grooves from which no departure is allowed. The good must be done at certain times and in certain ways, and apart from these the sense of responsibility, and alertness to snatch the brand from the burning, are relaxed or altogether suspended. Our methods should have something of elasticity, and not be rigidly confined within the worn and recognized track.

In reference to our personal accountability there is a disposition to rest in the perfunctory performance, and to suppose that we are clear in the sight of him "who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing," when we have gone through with the usual routine of Sunday, and have delivered our testimony as witnesses for Christ in the church. The work that is in season according to common consent, does not need particular care so much as that which lies outside of the prescribed forms and times. It is vastly important that the regular preaching should be done, that the weekly meetings should be kept up, that the teaching and exercises of the Sunday school should be faithfully attended to, that family devotions and secret prayer should be systematically observed. There is a round of duties which is to be carefully and vigilantly pursued, and which none would think of omitting. To be instant out of season, in labors and crosses, beyond this line of recognized religious duty, is the more difficult and the more likely to be neglected.

It is a subject that merits a distinct and prayerful consideration—this out of season work to which Christians are called. It might take the direction chiefly of examination into the nature and extent of our personal efforts, what we are doing for Christ, for the relief of the suffering, for the conversion of sinners. Or it might be an inquiry into the faithfulness with which we carry our religious zeal and activity to the place of business, to the companies in which we mingle, and the chance associations of the passing day. The preaching of the pulpit, and the formal profession of faith in Christ, are in season, but to warn sinners by the wayside, and to comfort the mourners elsewhere than at the altar of prayer, are blessed works out of season. The religion of the week-day, of the roadside, of the domestic circle, and the informal but vigilant study of usefulness everywhere, are perhaps some of the aspects of being out of season. Christ is our best example in this special aspect of fidelity, as in every other form of devotedness to God. He went about doing good, and everywhere and at all times he contributed something toward the happiness and salvation of the people. Not alone in the synagogue and in the temple, on the Sabbath and other religious days, but in the private house, in talk with the woman at the well, by the seaside, in the thronged streets, he preached the gospel of the kingdom. Paul at Athens, in the prison at Philippi, and in the trying ordeal of shipwreck, wrought in this out of season but effectual manner. In his words to Timothy it might have been his purpose to distinguish these aspects and classes of Christian work—in season, out of season—and the latter as most liable to be overlooked, and by some to be condemned.

Ecclesiastically it would be a grave offense to preach otherwise than in gowns and consecrated places. There must be no departure from established order, and no methods which were not in strict conformity with the ancient ordinances and usages. So some would think. Then there was the tendency to fall into the undue observance of religious days, of fast days and holy festivals. Christian freedom breaks away from these constraining and narrowing bigotries, and throws off the deadening and hampering restrictions of all these frigid and effete superstitions. In season and out of season, as becomes the earnest work the Christian has to do, and as becomes the liberty of the Spirit, and the power of a dispensation of truth and love to the world. "Out of season" is against ecclesiastical narrowness, a protest against the limitations of ministerial labor to prescribed liturgies and orders, and also an admonition to all Christians to get out of the ruts and tracks of mere church and religious forms. It is an awakening call to a special and much-neglected department of consecrated labor—to be instant out of season, to be attentive and zealous in the everyday opportunities, and by any means and by all godly expedients to save some. Luther and Wesley, as judged by the methods and standards of their day, were out of season because they were living, active reformers and preachers. Paul was in the same class—working out of season—scandalizing the Jew and offending the Greek.

The Prayer Test.

Good in the end comes out of the opposition of infidels. The discussion elicited by Tyndall's proposed test, as we then suggested, has led praying people to greater earnestness, and the prayerless in many instances to call upon God. A thoughtful writer in the United Brethren Tribune has, we believe, given a true exposition of the cause and effect. Whatever may be the cause and tendency of the woman's movement against whisky, the prevailing revivals in Europe and America go far to confirm the writer's views. He says:

Again, may we not consider that the new era of prayer upon which we seem to have entered is a result, in large part, of the discussion excited by the Tyndall prayer test? On every hand the voice of supplication is heard. Nor is it necessary to wait five years for satisfactory proof that God is a hearer of prayer. The fact is attested by the glowing love and regnant grace in the hearts of tens of thousands; it is demonstrated in the conviction and conversion of vast numbers in behalf of whom earnest prayers have ascended to Heaven. Both in this country and in Europe the earnest prayers of God's people have been followed by the abundant outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the triumph of the Redeemer's cause has been marvelous.

And now the power of prayer is being tested against one of the giant iniquities of the age. Thousands of devout women are praying to God for and with the most hardened and abandoned class of sinners to be found. Whatever irregularities and improprieties may be incidental to the wonderful crusade against the rum traffic, the evidence that God hears these earnest supplicants is most palpable. In no other way can we satisfactorily account for the fact that men, who have long hardened themselves in sin, who have defied all laws and who seemingly were lost to all shame, should bow meekly before the majesty of this movement, pour their liquors into the streets, and pledge themselves to a better life. Years of temperance agitation and temperance legislation have not done so much to check the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a few weeks of prayer, accompanied by appropriate effort. Of course it is not possible, with absolute certainty, to connect this new era of prayer and its wonderful effects with the discussion of the Tyndall prayer test as a result, but we do not regard it at all fanciful or unwarranted thus to connect them. If we are correct, the publication of this prayer test affords a notable instance of God making the wrath of man to praise him.

Won't Mix.

Dr. Curry, of the New York Christian Advocate, in his travels in the South spends a Sabbath in Atlanta, Georgia. He writes of his impressions and observations as follows:

Sabbath, the twenty-second of February, we were with our friends at the Loyd Street church. The nominal policy of this church is for the two colors to worship in the same congregation; but here, as elsewhere, that policy has proved a failure—in most cases a disastrous one. If the blacks predominate, or are allowed fair play, the whites absent themselves; and if the whites predominate, the colored people do not find themselves at home among them. About one-third of the Atlanta church, extending along the entire length of the edifice, and as good as any part of it, is informally recognized as the colored people's seats, and while the other two-thirds were comfortably filled, this part was entirely empty, except that about a dozen very well-dressed colored men came in and took seats near the door, evidently strangers, attracted thither by the announcement in the papers of the name of the expected preacher. Our experiment of entirely disregarding "race, color or former condition of slavery," made in good faith and prosecuted with commendable tenacity of purpose, is sufficiently demonstrated to be a failure. The two races will continue to form separate churches and schools during the present generation. It is wise for us to recognize that fact, and to order our actions accordingly; but these things argue nothing against a common ecclesiastical or denominational organization, but rather much in favor of it.

The Plague Spot in Popular Novels.

For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt. Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there?—Jeremiah viii, 21, 22.

We do not come forward to testify to the grosser abuses of the press—the loathsome smallpox literature, with its illustrations, now arresting attention by its wide diffusion. This fearful epidemic is no new thing. More than twenty years ago it was described as "satanic literature," in the very terms used at this day and then; strenuous efforts were also demanded for its suppression. This is the natural outgrowth of depraved humanity, and peculiar to no era. The demands of a corrupt taste will always be supplied with a corrupt literature. We know nothing of this except what is said of it in its condemnation, but would suppose its grossness would repel minds refined by a higher training. But we have met with another form of evil, so subtle and insidious as to excite no alarm even when the infection has been received. This is provided in the popular novel of some talented writer, or in the pages of periodicals bearing a good name, hidden under the guise of fictitious narratives, rendered attractive by the brilliancy of genius. It belongs to the present day to introduce this mingling of good and evil in the same vehicle. One article may be worthy of all the commendation given by reviewers to the work itself, but the next may happen to be so interspersed with erroneous doctrines, carefully covered over with apparently good sentiments, that the moral sense of the reader may be unconsciously led into acquiescence. In many of our modern fictions there is found an indistinctness of outline between truth and falsehood—the right and the wrong—in thoughts, feelings and actions, that it is difficult for the young and the unwary to see where one ends and the other begins. This very indistinctness is made available for the plot to be revealed, as where there is mystery there is usually a dubious morality.

There are fatal miasms floating in the atmosphere of American society—disorganizing doctrines, weakening the force of moral obligation in the social relations, and destroying the vitality of Christianity. These find lodgment where they are least suspected, and are doing a deadly work in the hearts and minds of many wives, mothers and daughters. The last hope of a nation is left in the family. Where this is lost all is lost.

But, thanks be to God, there are true Christian households left in our land; there are true Christian people among us, who can be called on to labor and to pray in their endeavors to provide a safeguard for those still untouched, and a remedy for those already stricken. The name of "Christian" has been made a taunt and a by-word, because many have falsely assumed it to carry out their own selfish schemes. There are nominal Christians as members of churches, while their conformity to the world in its fashions and maxims has left no difference between them and avowed worldlings. But there is a Christianity which is mighty through Christ Jesus, and this is the antagonist of every form of evil.

The grosser abuses of the press may be externally reached by legal enactments, but these cannot crush out the diabolism that made them. The insidious poison administered to the young and the thoughtless in the fascinating story may paralyze the conscience and deaden the heart, but those who love them are unconscious of the evil within, until it comes into outward action, and then it may be too late.

But no law of human enactment can be brought to bear against this modern popular literature, with its false and dangerous teachings. It is painful to acknowledge that many of these books are written by women, who bear untarnished names and have lost no caste in "good society." They are popular with publishers and the reading public, because their works are in demand. But shall no effort be made to counteract their influence? Can Christian parents and Christian teachers hold their peace and give no warning? They cannot fetter the press, but they can fearlessly expose the lurking evil. It is in the power of Christian reviewers to have these books brought to their tribunal, to be examined and judged according to a higher law than that made by man. It is the duty of all Christian workers to come to the front and take their stand, determined to do all that can be done to arrest the progress of evil and disorganizing works of fiction by fostering and encouraging every effort that is made to provide a sound, pure and invigorating literature. "Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why, then, is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" A. G.

Mr. Hammond's Work in St. Louis.

On Thursday of last week Mr. Hammond and some sixty Christian workers, clergymen, laymen and ladies, left the city for Jefferson City, to spend a couple of days and nights in holding religious meetings at the capitol. This pilgrimage was made in response to an invitation from the clergy of Jefferson, and a desire expressed by a vote of the Legislature to see and hear the distinguished revivalist. The wonders God has wrought by the instrumentality of Mr. Hammond in St. Louis amaze and bewilder us all. He is a religious enigma, but evidently chosen and blessed of God, in a remarkable measure, as his instrument in awakening the churches and in the conversion of sinners. Most strikingly in this work is illustrated that Scripture, viz.: "For, after that, in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to love them that believe;" "that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of men." At present there can probably be no correct estimate or even an approximate estimate of the number of genuine conversions which will likely be the result of the meetings here. Already between two and three hundred have been admitted into the various evangelical churches, and still they come! Last Sabbath, the first instant, the session of Providence Presbyterian church (Declaration and Testimony,) in North St. Louis, Rev. Mr. George, pastor, formally invited the North Presbyterian church, Dr. Foote, pastor, to unite with them in celebrating the Lord's Supper, and it was a communion season long to be remembered by those two churches. Rev. Dr. Farris, having been the pastor of Providence church for a number of years preceding Mr. George, was also present, and participated in that love-feast. There has been manifest this characteristic of a genuine revival, viz.: caste has been ignored. All ranks and conditions and colors have been in attendance, and all have been alike welcome. At present meetings are being held every night in various parts of the city, and the morning prayer and inquiry meeting for two weeks past has been held regularly and continues at the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In its length and depth this revival has perhaps not been surpassed in this century. God has worked and is still working marvelously in St. Louis. And her suburban towns and churches have been sharing with her a similar work of grace. The delegation to Jefferson City was cordially received, and the work done there, it is hoped, will not be in vain. Mr. Hammond was the guest of Governor Woodson, and the Governor and his wife were in attendance upon the services in the Representatives' Hall, conducted by Mr. Hammond and packed with people.—Interior, March 12.

Abandoned.

We have seldom read anything in the confessions of modern or ancient unbelievers more appalling than these two sentences from the last work of the late David Friedrich Strauss, on "The Old Faith and the New." After announcing his utter loss of faith in God, he says:

"In the enormous machine of the universe, amid the incessant whirl and hiss of its jagged iron wheels, amid the deafening crash of its ponderous stamps and hammers, in the midst of this terrific commotion, man, a helpless and defenseless creature, finds himself placed, not secure for a moment that on an imprudent motion a wheel may not seize and rend him, or a hammer crush him to a powder. This sense of abandonment is at first something awful!"

And this is all that atheism has to offer a man who deliberately gives up his belief in a personal God, and believes only in a machine which he can neither control nor escape.—"Without God and without hope in the world," poor John Stuart Mill worshiped his dead wife's "memory," while he wept over her grave, from which he saw no gleam of a resurrection, and beyond it no dawn of the better life. And the German Strauss found himself "a new faith" only in that blank materialism which filled him with an awful sense of abandonment. The "old faith" of David and of Martin Luther, as expressed in the forty-sixth Psalm, and the "old faith" of Paul, in the closing verses of the eighth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, and in that splendid argument for the resurrection of the dead in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, leaves no place for such horrible experiences as these apostles of the "new faith" have voluntarily confessed.—Christian Intelligencer.

ADMIRERS of John Stuart Mill in London propose to place a statue to his memory on the Thames embankment.

Presbyterian Union.

The negotiations between the committees of conference of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (North) and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church have issued in a plan of organic union, embracing the following points, which is from a letter in the Tribune:

"1. That both confessions of faith shall be regarded as of equal authority, and in the licensure of candidates or the ordination of ministers or other officers of the church the individual may choose which of these he shall adopt.

"2. That the form of government and discipline of the Presbyterian Church shall be that of the United Church.

"3. That the United Church shall be known as the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.

"4. That all the publications of the respective churches shall be recognized as part of the literature of the United Church.

"5. That ministers, licentiates and candidates shall stand in the same relation to the United Church that they now sustain to their respective churches.

"6. That all property belonging to each church shall become the property of the United Church.

"The seventh and eighth articles are in relation to boundaries and official records. In additional papers which passed between the respective committees it is acknowledged, on the part of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, that they have understood the confession of faith of the Presbyterian Church to 'set forth the sovereignty and decrees of God in terms inconsistent with his holiness and benevolence, and with the freedom and accountability of man,' and ask whether there is not occasion, 'for such slight changes in the language of these time-honored standards as will fully adapt them to the common faith of both churches.'

"The joint committee finally recommended that further conferences should be had before submitting a plan for union to the assemblies. The Cumberland Presbyterians, according to the best statistics obtainable, have about one thousand ministers and one hundred and thirty thousand members. They seceded from the General Assembly in 1810, on account of their holding anti-Calvinistic doctrines to a large extent, engaging in revivals, and ordaining laymen to work as itinerate exhorters."

Baltimore Conference.

This Conference adjourned March 12, after a very harmonious and profitable session. We glean the following statistics from the Episcopal Methodist:

The statistics were read, showing local preachers, 105; white members, 24,071; colored members, 98; children baptized, 1,270; adults baptized, 1,130; churches, 324—value, $704,110; parsonages, 54—value, $84,100; Sunday schools, 378; superintendents, 459; teachers, 2,977; scholars, 20,179; conversions in Sunday schools, 1,215; volumes, 51,121; expenses, $8,680.

The report of the joint board of finance was received and adopted. The following are the receipts from the districts, as reported:

	Bishops' Fund.	Sup. Fund.	Educa. Fund.
Baltimore	$255	$979	$278
East Baltimore	184	908	370
Washington	261	834	410
Winchester	121	368	112
Rockingham	142	490	102
Lewisburg	87	114	34
Roanoke	120	155	75
Lexington	86	199	80
Moorefield	100	137	67
Total	$1,356	4,100	$1,428

The expenses of the delegates to General Conference were reported at $518.

The deficiency in the educational fund was $637, and that in the Bishops' fund was $125.

Mr. Charles Shipley, treasurer of the Board of Missions, submitted his report, which showed the following assessments and collections:

Districts.	Amount assessed.	Amount collected.
Baltimore	$1,200	$1,000
East Baltimore	1,200	1,000
Washington	1,200	1,085
Winchester	1,000	510
Rockingham	800	800
Roanoke	400	500
Lewisburg	400	102
Lexington	400	275
Moorefield	400	325
Total	$7,000	$5,577

The increase of collections this year over that of last is $952.36. The report was adopted.

BRAZIL.—We have had a call, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, from the Rev. R. T. Henington, formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference, but now a resident in Brazil. He has located his family on the Amazon, five hundred miles from its mouth—near Santarem, at the junction of the Tapajoes with the Amazon. There the climate is fine, the soil rich, and the people, white, red and black, are civil and friendly. The colonists are doing well. Bro. Henington has coffee and orange orchards which give good promise. The communication is regular with New York by steamers. The fare from New York to Para, at the mouth of the Amazon, is $150; thence to Santarem is $25. The cost of living there is reasonable. Bro. Henington is very desirous that our church should establish a mission there, and we hope it will soon be able to do so. There is a nucleus at that point of fifteen members and a local preacher, and they would hail the advent of a missionary. Bro. Henington returns to Brazil, carrying with him machinery, books, etc. This means business, and we hope that the church will soon be able to respond to his call, and that of Bro. Newman in St. Paul's, near Rio Janeiro. We must have a mission in Brazil.

MEETING OF THE ASSEMBLY.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States will meet in the Presbyterian church at Columbus, Mississippi, on the third Thursday (twenty-first day) of May, at eleven o'clock A. M. The opening sermon by the Rev. H. M. Smith, D. D., moderator of the last Assembly.

New Orleans District Notice.

The New Orleans District Conference begins its session, in the basement of the Carondolet Street church, on Thursday, April 2, at ten o'clock A. M. Bishop Keener will preside. On Thursday night there will be a district love-feast, and on Friday night a sacramental meeting. The members of the several churches of the district are urgently invited to attend these meetings, as well as the business sessions of the conference. All the members of the Quarterly Conferences are members of the District Conference. On Sunday, April 5, at three o'clock P. M., the Sunday School Union of the district will hold its anniversary celebration. There will be regular business meetings of the conference probably every morning at ten and every evening at five o'clock. Pastors are requested to notify their congregations of the services and appointments.

L. PARKER, P. E.

Mobile District Conference.

Preachers in charge of circuits and stations in the Mobile district will please give me, by letter, the names of preachers and laymen who will attend the District Conference, to be held here in April, that provision may be made for their entertainment during the conference. Members of the conference, upon their arrival, will report to either of the pastors in this city. My place of residence is on Charles street, opposite Washington square. Services of the occasion will begin on Wednesday night, April 15, at St. Paul's church.

JOSIAH BARKER, Pastor.

MOBILE, March 16, 1874.

BISHOP KEENER will address an audience on missions and Mexico, at Carondelet Street church, on next Sunday evening, the twenty-ninth instant, at half-past seven o'clock. All who attend will undoubtedly be both instructed and entertained by his descriptions of the wonderful country lying just south of us, and the progress of Protestant missions in it during the last few years. The public are invited to attend.

REV. L. M. LEWIS, writing from St. Louis, March 14, says: "We have had a great blessing in St. Louis in the revival of God's work. I have never seen its equal. No man can tell the amount of good done."

IT HAS become questionable, says the Western Methodist, whether the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which does not meet until May, 1878, will be held in St. Louis, the appointed place of meeting. Referring to the recent annual session of the book committee of that church, the Northwestern Christian Advocate says:

"One important question raised was that of changing the seat of the next General Conference. While there is no doubt of the hospitality of the appointed place, St. Louis, it is yet a question whether the Northern Methodists there are numerous enough to entertain such an army. At any rate, a committee was appointed to consider the question and report hereafter. St. Louis will not decline by any means, and may utterly refuse assent to a change; but the question is justly no open one whether, while our church there is doing such grand, vital work, she should be allowed to invest twenty-five thousand precious dollars in General Conference local expenses."

SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.—Bishop McTyeire, in a letter to the Western Methodist, speaks as follows of the prosperous condition of church affairs in the South Carolina Conference: "I was greatly surprised to find, in my last visitation to the South Carolina Conference, that the church was prospering there in the midst of a prostrate State. I feared to hear about the support of the pastors in a land not rich in soil, and taxed almost to confiscation. The South Carolina preachers were better supported than those of Tennessee and Kentucky—States rich in soil and enjoying good government. One reason of this is, the parsonage system prevails in South Carolina. There are sixty-five parsonages in that Conference. In the village of Sumter, where the session was held, there are three parsonages—that of the district, the circuit and the station. Other villages show the same provisions for ministerial support."

THE NEW YORK BIBLE SOCIETY. The regular meeting of the board of managers of the New York Bible Society was held at the Bible House on Thursday evening, March 5, the president, Mr. Alfred L. Edwards, in the chair. The various standing committees reported as follows: During the month of February 3,087 families were visited and 565 Bibles or Testaments distributed among them by gift or sale; 159 vessels lying in the harbor were supplied with 3,461 Bibles or Testaments in different languages, and 429 Bibles or Testaments were distributed among 3,155 emigrants landed at Castle Garden.

IT IS STATED in the secular papers, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, that Dr. Munsey has been appointed by Bishop Pierce to the charge of one of our churches in Augusta, Georgia. It gives us great satisfaction to learn that Dr. Munsey's health has greatly improved, and that he is able to enter again upon the active work of the ministry. We trust his labors in Augusta will be owned and blessed of the Lord.

Books and Periodicals.

WE HAVE received: Go or Send. A Plea for Missions. By Rev. Atticus G. Haygood, D. D. This is a prize essay, and published by order of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. We have not read this plea for missions, but we have sampled it here and there, and find its flavor excellent. We hope hereafter to quote much, but here is a passage for the present:

"The Doctrine of Averages.—It is very convenient for theorizing, but it is unsafe as a basis of appropriations. The trouble is that those who should give more than the average take advantage of it, and compliment themselves upon their liberality when they come up to it. If we had $1 from each of our six hundred and fifty-four thousand members we should have $654,000. To be sure; but this is not the best way to put the case. Each member should give something, and is bound, by every law of the kingdom, to do so, not according to the delusive doctrine of averages, but as the 'Lord hath prospered him.' 'Every man according to his several ability.' The law does not state the amount; it puts that upon each man's conscience, and some consciences are very dark or dead. Some are as much bound to give $1,000 as others are to give $1, and it would require less sacrifice to do it. Millionaires have no business talking about averages with day-laborers. When the rich fall down to the averages they 'fall from grace.' There is power in the 'penny-a-week' doctrine if only it be so adjusted that it shall read 'a pound a week' for those who ought to give 'a pound a week.' We fear that this doctrine of averages is proving a snare of satan to some of our richer people. Let them consider what Bunyan says of those pilgrims who 'at the first beek went over to Demas' digging for silver in the hill Lucre: 'Now whether they fell into the pit by looking over the brink thereof, or whether they went down to dig, or whether they were smothered in the bottom by the damps that commonly arise, of these things I am not certain; but this I observed, that they were never seen again in the way.'"

The cost of the work is only twenty cents for single copies, sent by mail; per dozen, $2, with usual discount to preachers. Every member of our church should obtain a copy, and the preachers cannot do a better work than to order and distribute freely. All can be supplied from the Publishing House, Nashville, and New Orleans.

RECORD OF MR. ALCOTT'S SCHOOL. Exemplifying the principles and methods of moral culture. Third edition, revised. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1874.

The work is eminently suggestive, and may prove helpful to parents and teachers. It is the record of a school reopened by Mr. Alcott, in Boston, in 1834. The contents are arranged under the following heads: Plans, Journal of the School, Self-Analysis, Conclusion, Explanatory. We are indebted to Kam & Co., New Orleans, for a copy.

LILIAN DALZELL. Loring, publisher, Boston.

OUR Sunday school publications from Nashville for April are to hand in good time. All very good. The Magazine is better than usual. The first article, on "The Spirit of Missions," by Bishop Keener, is a powerful and luminous exhibition of the principles and incentives to missionary work. The following from the editor, touching General Conference action on the election of Sunday school superintendents, we most heartily indorse:

"The General Conference, we suppose, will take the question of the election of Sunday school superintendents in hand and settle it. It ought to be done by every token. The church expects it; the Sunday school interests require it. Perhaps it is best that it was not done at Memphis, but it ought to be done at Louisville. It is too important a matter to be settled by any, or by no method. Several Annual Conferences have memorialized the General Conference to pass a law making the superintendent elective by the Quarterly Conference upon the nomination of the pastor, just as in the case of stewards and trustees. This seems to be the most natural, satisfactory, as well as best-guarded solution of the question."

THE first annual report of the officers and trustees of the Louisiana Institution for the Education of the Blind, and the Industrial Home for the Blind, to the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, is a pamphlet of much interest. The institution is located at Baton Rouge, and the Rev. Patrick Lane is the worthy and accomplished principal. It is doing an important work, and should receive the support and encouragement of every benevolent and intelligent citizen.

THE SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR, published at Athens, Georgia, will be found invaluable to Southern planters. The March number is filled with articles suited to the season, and adapted to the wants of our Southern soil and climate. W. L. Jones, editor and proprietor, Athens, Georgia. $2 per annum.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST for March is splendidly illustrated, and replete with the latest information on agricultural and domestic matters. For the farm, garden and house we know of no periodical equal to it. Published by Orange Judd & Co., New York. $1.50 per annum.

ST. NICHOLAS for April is filled with taking pictures and a fine table of contents. The publishers are sparing no pains or expense in their effort to make this the leading magazine for the young. It is a very attractive publication, and, we believe, pure and good in its moral tone.

GOOD WORDS for March has an excellent table of contents, and the illustrations are rather better than usual. Of the articles we note especially: Behold All Creatures for Our Use, Pure Water, Lyrics from Goethe, Solar Research, The Early Life of King David.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for April is splendidly illustrated, as usual. The Great South, Christ's Resurrection Scientifically Considered, Concerning Some Imperial Booty, English and American Women, are the principal articles.

LIPPINCOTT for April is handsomely illustrated, and contains: The New Hyperion, With the Count de Beauvois in Japan and California, Some Recollection of Walter Savage Landor, Among the Mediums, and other articles.

WILSON'S HERALD OF HEALTH is an excellent monthly, published by the Southern Publishing Company, Atlanta, Georgia. Terms, $2 a year. We have received the February number.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for March has: Notes from the South Pacific, The Poetical Books of the Old Testament, Salvation by Faith, and other articles of merit.

THE GARDENER'S MONTHLY for March is a valuable number of this excellent periodical.

BRAINARD'S MUSICAL WORLD for March has been received.

THE woman's temperance movement, says the Methodist, continues to be prosecuted with unabated energy in the West. Its success surprises its friends and silences scoffers. Organizations against the liquor traffic, with plans varied to suit the different circumstances of different cases, are being formed in the Eastern towns and cities, and the subject everywhere excites increasing attention. The movement in Ohio is said to be helped by the fact that the keepers of the tippling shops have actually no standing before the law. In Indiana also most of the saloons are kept in constant violation of the law. A similar aid is promised in this State, if the decision of Judge Warren, of Ontario county, is allowed to stand. He holds that the excise law of the State grants no authority for the licensing of saloons to sell liquor which is to be drunk on the premises, and quotes in support of his judgment the law of 1857, confirmed in 1870, which expressly forbids the granting of such licenses, except in the case of keepers of inns and hotels. These beneficent provisions do not, however, apply to the cities of New York and Brooklyn, which are under special excise laws.

DEATH OF PROF. FRANK A. LIPSCOMB.—We record with profound sorrow, says the Southern Christian Advocate, the death, at Auburn, Alabama, on the eighth of March, of this most excellent and esteemed Christian scholar and gentleman. Prof. Lipscomb was the son of the distinguished chancellor of the University of Georgia, and was himself a member of the faculty of that institution. A very slight acquaintance with Prof. Lipscomb confirmed in our mind his title to the exalted appreciation in which he was universally held wherever known. A singularly ripe scholar for his years, he was a devout Christian, and gave promise of inestimable service to the cause of sanctified learning. We bewail his early death as no common loss to the Methodist Church and to the country at large. The stricken father and sorrowing family will have the sympathies and prayers of a bereaved church.

"A CLERGYMAN in England was recently fined $50 for sending to a parishioner a postal card on which he had written some gentle admonitions upon the subject of non-payment of church dues, and upon the evils of a too great love of money." The Journal and Messenger, in publishing the following, adds: "We have in mind a pastor who thought of using the postal card to urge delinquent members to prayer meeting. The argument that it was both convenient and economical was met by the sagacious reply that the expense would break him up."

A CHILD tried to put together the parts of a dissected map, but, not knowing the place of each, failed. He then broke them up to make them fit, and the failure was greater than ever. The child is human reason attempting to put together the plans of God. The more it tries, the worse its confusion.—Dictionary of Illustration.

WE ARE requested to state that, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, yielding to the solicitations of friends from a distance, the time for the formal laying of the corner-stone of the Vanderbilt University has been changed from Monday, April 27, to Tuesday, April 28.

MARRIED,

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.—There are few things more important, in a community accustomed to depend on medical aid for relief from suffering, than pure medicines. In the absence of fidelity or competency on the part of the druggists or the pharmaceutists the greatest medical skill is little better than the most stupid quackery. It is impossible to arrive at even an approximate conclusion as to the number of unfortunate results in the practice of the medical profession from incompetent pharmacy or downright dishonesty in compounding. Impressed, as we are, with these facts, it becomes a source of pleasure to recommend an establishment where we believe pure and fresh drugs are kept, and prescriptions faithfully compounded by skillful and faithful chemists. The establishment of I. L. Lyons, successor to Ball & Lyons, corner of Camp and Gravier streets, we would recommend as one upon which we think our readers may depend for good materials and accurate pharmacy. The prescription department is open night and day. Mr. Lyons is also an extensive importer and wholesale dealer in drugs and medical specialties, as will be found by reference to his advertisement elsewhere in these columns.

THE STAR HOUSE, No. 164 CANAL STREET.—We call special attention to the advertisement of Messrs. J. M. Satomayor & Co., who propose to open, on the thirtieth instant, a splendid assortment of silk, linen, woolen and cotton goods. They propose to fit up their store after the style of stores in Chili, from which country the proprietors hail. They are sure that they can offer goods at prices as low as any house in the country.

UPPER CITY B. B. AND S. S.—Call at 575 Magazine street, and inquire of that polite and thorough business man, Mr. Louis Gimbel, who will inform you what B. B. and S. S. mean. Ladies, gentlemen and children are interested. Those who live at a distance may find the key to it in our advertising columns.

P. H. QUINLAN, No. 280 Camp street, is prepared to fit up stores, offices and dwellings for gas, steam and water in the most approved style. He desires to call the special attention of the public to his gas cooking stoves.

A COMPLETE STOCK of English, French and German drugs, also perfumery, soap and fancy articles, will be found at the store of William Graner, druggist and apothecary, corner of Dryades and St. Andrew streets.

DR. CHARLES E. KELLS, whose card appears in another column, is one of our oldest resident dentists. His office is at No. 12 Dauphine street, first door from Canal, where he may be found at all hours.

PARTIES in quest of patents for inventions, trade marks, copyrights, etc., will do well to notice the card elsewhere of Mr. H. N. Jenkins, No. 27 Commercial place.

THE American Sunday School Union advertises elsewhere special terms to Sunday schools in the selection of new and replenishing of old libraries.

LEVY BROS.' dry goods establishment is situated at Nn. 540 Magazine street. See their advertisement of fresh spring goods.

SOLE PROPRIETOR OF

ABRAMS' CHILL TONIC,

a most effectual, reliable and entirely safe remedy for Chills and Fever, etc. Sold under full guarantee.

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.

THIS MEDICINE, FOR THE CURE OF

DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA

and all diseases of the Bowels, is without exception the most valuable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to Infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most acute attacks. For infants its use is recommended in preference to the death dealing "Soothing Syrups," etc. No household should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.

A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from

Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis,

and all Pulmonary affections. It is specially adapted to the relief of Hoarseness, and all diseases of the Throat caused by excessive use of the voice. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Ball & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION,

Scrofulous and Tuberculous affections, Rickets and all complaints characterized by deficient nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.

This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is

Unrivaled as a Rubefacient,

and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the entire limbs should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

THE GREATEST

MEDICAL

DISCOVERY

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunderhumor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of blles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is

Raw and Inflamed,

your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful. As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,

DONALD KENNEDY.

MARCH.

In the snowing and the blowing,
In the cruel sleet,
Little flowers begin their growing
Far beneath our feet.
Softly taps the Spring, and cheerily:
"Darlings, are you here?"
Till they answer: "We are nearly,
Nearly ready, dear."

"Where is Winter, with his snowing?
Tell us, Spring, they say;
Then she answers: "He is going,
Going on his way.
Poor old Winter does not love you,
But his time is past;
Soon my birds shall sing above you—
Set you free at last!"

M. M. D., in St. Nicholas for March.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

The Neglected Promise.

"Mamma, let me go to Mrs. Jones' this evening?"

It was the merry voice of careless little Lucy Neel. She was a dear, good child, filling her home with sunshine; but, alas! there was one fault she possessed which sometimes caused a cloud to hide away the light she otherwise gave by her presence. Her mother had chided her so often for this fault that, notwithstanding her tender years, she would at times feel quite discouraged. It was the inclination she had to forget what she knew she ought to do. Her mother often told her that she was afraid she did not always forget, but she was generally quite sure that she did.

She was about seven years of age, and she scarcely seemed that, so lightly had time left its traces among her sunny ringlets.

She was in the habit of going to Mrs. Jones' to play with her little daughter Ella, who was about her own age, and her mother could never offer her a more tempting reward than to promise her a visit there. This evening was the first time she had asked in some time, for she had disobeyed her mother in forgetting when to come home, and she had punished her by not permitting her to go again in two weeks. Lucy had watched and counted the days all to herself, and she knew her time of punishment was out. So in answer to her question her mother said:

"Yes, Lucy, you may go and stay two hours. Remember, now. Ask Mrs. Jones to let you know when it is time for you to come," were her mother's parting words.

Away sped pretty Lucy. The sunbeams loved to nestle among those bright curls, and brighter than the sunbeams seemed her merry eyes. A little while afterward she and Ella were very happy playing. She met Ella at the door, and they ran right into the play-room to see a beautiful new doll, nor did Lucy think once of her mother's parting words.

The dolls had a tea party, and they were very busy until the table was arranged. Then they had everything to replace, as nice little housekeepers should. By and by they ran out into the grove to play hide and seek among the tall oaks. All at once Lucy thought of her promise.

"Oh!" thought she, "if I go home now mamma will have to punish me, and I will just stay awhile longer and have all the fun I can." She kept thinking, though, of her mother, and many times did she have to administer some soothing word to her complaining conscience. When the sun was setting she broke loose from her sports and started home.

She found her mother sleeping, notwithstanding her baby brother was crying.

"I'll not rock brother," she said to herself, "for then mamma might wake, and I know she will punish me." So she ran out into the back yard, where her father was cutting wood.

"Ah! Lucy," said her father, "here you are. Is your brother asleep?"

"No, sir, he is crying; but mamma is."

"Your mamma asleep and he crying? Oh, no."

"Yes, papa, she is asleep."

The father thought a moment, and only a moment, for he had never known one of the children to make the least noise and not awaken his wife, and he knew that she never allowed them to cry without making some effort to soothe them. So, throwing aside his ax, he hurried to the house.

He went to the bedside. "Mary," he called, but no answer came. Could she be sleeping so soundly? He felt her hands. Oh! so cold they were, and her feet were almost icy. Her brow was cold and moist.

"My God!" he said, "has my wife died here all alone?" He ran out the door, and it was not long before he had a physician at her bedside.

By careful nursing and skillful attention Mrs. Neel was soon restored enough to be up; but poor Lucy, how miserable she was when she looked at the dear, pale face of her mother, the being she most loved on earth!

When she was able to sit up she called Lucy to her, put her arm around her waist, and, pulling her head down, kissed her. The little girl could not restrain her tears, but, laying her head upon her mother's knee, wept bitterly. The patient mother only stroked her soft ringlets, and breathed a fervent prayer to her heavenly Father to help her in her loving work.

After awhile Lucy looked up and said: "Oh! mamma, you do not know how sorry I have been since you have been sick. I was so afraid you would die, and I would always have thought it was my fault. Oh! my mamma, I will never do so badly again."

"You must not think, my dear little girl, that you can overcome this great fault by your own will; but your blessed Savior is watching you, and he, like an elder brother, would lift you over every rough place. Only let him know that you wish him to help you, and he will gladly answer every call. Are you willing to ask him, my child?"

"Oh! yes, mamma. I have asked him a great many times to make you well and make me good, and I am sure he will answer my prayer, for he is already making you well."

"It may be, Lucy, that our Father has sent this sickness upon me in answer to my prayer for you."

"How, mamma?"

"Ah! my child, you do not know how sad I have been over your disobedience in never coming home at the right time. I have suffered very much, but I will feel so thankful if it will only make you remember and correct your fault.

"While you were enjoying your play so much mamma was watching for you so wearily. I began to feel sick about the time your two hours were out, and I knew that I needed attention. My eyes grew weary watching for the little feet tripping up the walk, while the aching chill kept creeping through my body. At last I felt so cold and sad that I closed my eyes, and knew nothing more until long after the doctor came."

Lucy listened to her mother's words, while the tears were dropping from her eyes. Her mother was very sorry to add to her grief, but she wished it to make a lasting impression upon her. And surely it did, for never since then has Lucy disobeyed her mother in anything.

MAXIMS FOR THE YOUNG.—Keep good company or none.

Never be idle.

Always speak the truth.

Live up to your engagements.

If one speak evil of you, let your life be such that none will believe him.

Make no haste to be rich if you would prosper; small, steady gains give competency, with tranquillity of mind.

Never play at any kind of game of chance.

Avoid temptation through fear you may not withstand it.

Never run in debt unless you see a way to get out again.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Swarming of Bees.

The way bees proceed in swarming is briefly this: The old queen departs with the swarm as soon as the first royal cells are ready and sealed, usually leaving some unsealed. The remaining workers go on precisely as before, nurse the young, seal up the unfinished cells of workers, as well as the royal cells. The queen that first matures bites her way out before she has strength to fly, and makes it her business to go about and sting her royal sisters to death. This is exemplified when a hive throws off but one swarm in a season. But if a second swarm is to issue the case is different, and then is when the second and other maturing queens are kept back, not by depositing wax on the lid, but by simply holding it shut; a little bulge on one side is all that holds, and it can be pushed open in a second when the bees do not hold it. The first hatched queen is not allowed to destroy the others, and seems to understand that they are deadly rivals and have strength to fight a decided battle. She seems greatly agitated, running about and stopping a moment occasionally to give a few sharp, shrill sounds. Those in the cells repeat the notes in a coarser key. I have taken out the combs and held a single one before me with the bees on it, and have seen the queen at the time of making the notes. I have examined the cells just described containing the queens, and seen the bees holding the door shut. I have cut off such cells, held the door myself, heard the piping noise in my hand, have laid the cell down, and saw her majesty push open the door to freedom the next instant. This piping may always be heard a day or two before and after swarm or swarms of young queens. If the weather and all is favorable, the first hatched queen, seeming to understand the consequence if she remains, leaves with as many bees as choose to follow, and avoids further trouble. This occurs usually in just nine days after the old queen issued. Another queen is liberated, which proceeds like the one first hatched, and if a third swarm issues it is under similar circumstances, and only about two days after. When the bees are through swarming the queen which is at liberty destroys all her rivals and reigns alone.—Mr. Quinby, in the Agriculturist.

GRAFTING-WAX.—An excellent grafting-wax can be made by taking rosin two pounds, bees-wax one pound and tallow half a pound. Melt all together and manipulate well with the hands as it becomes cool. Make up into small rolls, and inclose in a greased or oiled paper any surplus not wanted for immediate use, and put it away in a cellar or cool room.

WARTS ON ANIMALS.—Take white poke-root (there is white and yellow;) boil thoroughly; then remove the root; then boil the liquid to the consistence of salve or ointment. Rub it on the warts once or twice, and a cure will be certain.

"HOUSEKEEPER" OF HEALTH.

The liver being the great departing or blood-cleansing organ of the system, set this great "housekeeper of our health" at work, and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood, and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with very small daily doses of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor, from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted systems may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these great resolvents.

DOCTORS COULDN'T HELP HIM.

MEIGSVILLE, MORGAN CO., OHIO, March 24, 1872.

DEAR DR. PIERCE: When I was twelve or fifteen years of age I took what is called King's Evil, and by constant doctoring it would heal in one place and break out in another. It also broke out in my left ear. I first found your name in the Christian Advocate, and sent ten dollars for the first bottle, which did me more good than all other medicines I ever used. I am twenty-eight years old, and doctored with five doctors, and not one of them helped me so much as your bottle of Discovery. I have got well and able to do a good day's work.

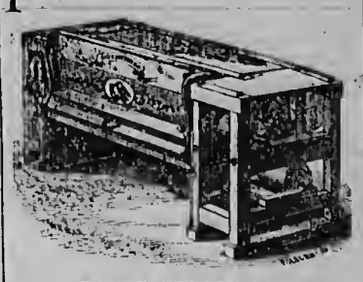
IMPROVED



EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. It has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand suction gins.

JUSTLY CELEBRATED.

THE DIAMOND COTTON CHOPPER AND CULTIVATOR.

THE GREATEST LABOR-SAVER OF the AGE; with ONE MAN and ONE HORSE does the work of from SIX to TWELVE men and from TWO to FOUR horses. It CHOPS and BARS both sides, WEEDS and HOES the cotton at one operation. After which it is converted into a most excellent CULTIVATOR, for use between the rows throughout the season. This machine has been tested upon a growing crop, and proved a thorough, practical SUCCESS. It bears the highest TESTIMONIALS from our best cotton planters. It will soon become as indispensable to the cotton planter as the cotton gin or press. It has taken the grand sweepstakes prize, the GOLD MEDAL, at the Georgia State Fair as the latest and most valuable improvement in agricultural implements, and the first premium wherever it has been exhibited. Active and reliable AGENTS are wanted in every town and county, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Applications for agencies should be made without delay. Retail price of machine, with attachments, $35 and freight. A most excellent COTTON PLANTER and GUANO DISTRIBUTOR has been added to the machine. Price, $12.5 extra. MEDICAL.

DR. WILLIAM HALL'S
BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS,
THE
GREAT AMERICAN CONSUMPTIVE REMEDY
Consumption is NOT an incurable disease. Physicians assure us of this fact. It is only necessary to have the RIGHT REMEDY, and the terrible malady can be conquered.

HALL'S BALSAM IS THIS REMEDY.

It breaks up the NIGHT SWEATS, relieves the OPPRESSIVE TIGHTNESS ACROSS THE LUNGS, and heals the inflamed and excoriated surfaces which the venom of the disease produces.

While Life Lasts There is Hope.

It may not be too late to effect a cure even after the doctors have given you up.

HALL'S BALSAM is sold everywhere, and may be had at wholesale of the Proprietors, JOHN F. HENRY, CURRAN & CO., at their Great Medicine Warehouse, 8 and 9 College Place, New York. Price, $1 per bottle.

HALL'S BALSAM is also a sure remedy for

COUGHS,
COLDS,
PNEUMONIA,
BRONCHITIS,
ASTHMA,
SPITTING OF BLOOD,
CROUP,
WHOOPING COUGH,

and all other diseases of the respiratory organs.

Also Proprietors of Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup, Carbolic Salve, Edey's Troches, Oxygenated Bitters, Mott's Liver Pills, etc.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twentieth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales... 5,582
Lake	13
Arkansas	3,685
Mobile	1,986
Texas	169
Total	11,535

On Saturday the market opened under the favorable influence of increased activity at Liverpool and an advance of 1-16d. in uplands and ⅛d. in Orleans, and fully 4,500 bales changed hands during the morning, partly at previous rates, but mostly at a further improvement of ⅛@¼c., after which buyers continued their operations with unabated spirit, and although the offerings were moderate, yet the sales summed up 11,000 bales. Low ordinary sold at 10c., low ordinary to strict ordinary at the same, ordinary to strict ordinary at 12⅛c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 13⅜c., good ordinary at 14⅛c., good ordinary to strict good ordinary at 14⅝c., strict good ordinary at 14⅞, 14⅞, 14⅞@14⅞c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 15c., low middling at 15⅛, 15⅛@15⅜c., low middling, with strong staple, at 15⅜c., strict low middling at 16c., middling as high as 16⅜c., and strict middling to good middling at 17c. On Monday, under an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool, with a buoyant market and sales of 20,000 bales, factors raised their pretensions ⅛@⅜c., which rather checked the movement, but the demand, nevertheless, was quite animated. The business embraced 5,200 bales. On Tuesday the demand was slack throughout the day, and in the absence of any competition among buyers factors were compelled, in order to effect sales, to make concessions of ⅛@⅜c., the market nearly losing Monday's improvement. The sales were consequently confined to 4,400 bales. Prices exhibited considerable irregularity, some sales showing a falling off of only ⅛c., and others of ¼c. or even ⅜c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 20,600 bales, against 21,450 for the corresponding time last week and 18,150 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,676,281 bales, against 1,006,814 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 222,906 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 83,396 to Great Britain, of 76,929 to France and of 37,339 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Low ordinary	9¾ @ 10⅛
Ordinary	11⅜ @ 12⅛
Strict ordinary	12⅝ @ 12⅞
Good ordinary	13⅜ @ 14⅛
Strict good ordinary	14⅛ @ 14⅞
Low middling	15¼ @ 15⅝
Strict low middling	15⅞ @ 16
Middling	16⅛ @ 16⅜
Strict middling	16⅜ @ 16⅝

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

PROSPECTUS OF THE General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR. A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the Lives of the Bishops will be published in the DAILY; also a Pen-and-Ink Sketch of the Members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the greatest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the master-minds of the church—questions in which every Methodist will feel the liveliest concern.

The DAILY will be a handsome sheet of four pages, of good size, printed on good paper, and in clear type; and neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it all that the church may desire.

The services of a competent reporter have been secured, and the subscribers may rely on receiving the earliest intelligence of the deliberations of the Conference through the Daily.

Many persons desire to preserve the Proceedings and Debates of the General Conference in a permanent form. To all such we take pleasure in saying that the numbers of the DAILY ADVOCATE when bound will make a handsome volume that may be read with interest in years to come

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 26.—At Portland, Oregon, this morning, the temperance women visited most of the saloons of the city, among them the lowest dens. One saloon-keeper refused them admittance, but on hearing that the other saloons were making a good paying business of it he sent an invitation for them to visit him, which they did. No converts have been made among saloon-keepers yet.

GALVESTON, March 26.—The Rev. R. S. Hammond, the revivalist, assisted by a number of ministers from St. Louis, is holding a series of meetings in the city, and services in the Baptist and Methodist churches. Street meetings are being held. Much interest is manifested.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—The committee from the South Carolina taxpayers' convention had an interview with the President this morning, after being personally presented by Secretary Fish. The grievances of the South Carolinians were briefly and pathetically described by Hon. W. D. Porter, chairman of the committee.

The President listened attentively, and replied at some length. He said he felt sympathy with any people who are badly governed and overtaxed, as Louisiana and South Carolina seemed to be, yet he could not see how anything could be done either by the executive or legislative branch of the national government for their relief, inasmuch as South Carolina had now a complete existence as a sovereign State, and must enact her own laws.

The President referred with some feeling to some personally offensive utterances which had been made by a member of the taxpayers' convention in regard to himself. The delegates explained that those expressions had met with the marked disapproval of the whole convention. In parting the President expressed the hope that when their case was laid before Congress some means would be offered of legitimately affording the desired relief.

NEW YORK, March 30.—The men and women enlisted in the temperance cause gathered in the churches in this city and Brooklyn yesterday, and made their prayer offerings in the presence of large congregations.

In Brooklyn three routes have been laid out for the special work of visiting saloons. Temperance work is found to be far more extensive and complicated than anticipated, but the visitors are not discouraged.

NEW YORK, March 30.—The Herald's special says: The steamer Moina arrived off Anez at eleven o'clock on Saturday night. Arthur Lahgard and Jacob Wainwright were on board, in charge of the remains of Dr. Livingstone. The following account is given of Livingstone's fatal illness and death:

He had been ill of chronic dysentery for several months. He was well supplied with stores and medicines, but he had a presentiment that the disease would prove fatal. At first he was able to ride on a donkey, but soon had to be carried. Arriving at Muliada, beyond Lake Pemba, in the Bisa country, he said: "Build me a hut to die in." A hut was built by his followers. The first of May he was confined to his bed, and afterward suffered greatly, groaning night and day. On the third day he said he was very cold, and requested that more grass be put over the hut.

His followers could not speak or go near him. Kilumbo, the chief of Bisa, sent flour and beans, and behaved well toward the party. The fourth day Dr. Livingstone was insensible, and died about midnight. Makadahoon, a servant, was present.

Dr. Livingstone made his last entry in his diary April 10. He spoke much and sadly of his home and family.

When he was first seized by the fatal attack he told his followers he intended to exchange everything for ivory to give them, and then push on to Ujiji and Zanzibar, and try to reach England.

The same day on which he died his followers consulted what to do. The Nassick boys determined to place his remains in a bark case, done up to represent a bale of goods, so as to deceive the natives, who objected to the passage of a corpse, and thus carried to Zanzibar. Dr. Livingstone's clothing, papers and instruments accompanied the body. When sick in bed Dr. Livingstone prayed much at Muilalu, and said: "I am going home."

Chumaah remains at Zanzibar. Mr. Webb, American consul at Zanzibar, received letters, through Murphy, from Dr. Livingstone for Stanley, and will deliver them personally. The only geographical news is as follows: After Stanley's departure the doctor left Unyamzimbe, rounded the south end of Zanganyika, traveled south of Lake Bemba or Bangaeolo, crossed it from the south to north, then proceeded along the east side, returning north through the marshes to Mullala.

All his papers, sealed and addressed to the secretary of State, are in charge of Arthur Lalry, a British merchant of Zanzibar. Messrs Murphy and Cameron remained behind.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, March 23.—Additional advices from Mexico report that General Santa Anna has arrived at the capital and paid a visit to President Lerdo. He intends to reside at Tacubaya, seven miles from Mexico. His fortune having been reduced to almost nothing, the ex-President proposes to petition Congress for the grant of a pension or the restoration of some of his private property, which was sequestrated by the State.

Mr. Foote, engineer of the Interoceanic railroad, is surveying a route from Mexico to Queretaro.

VIENNA, March 28.—Several deputies have presented resolutions in the lower house of the Reichstadt requiring the government to expel from the country the Jesuits and all orders affiliated therewith.

LONDON, March 30.—The Queen reviews the Ashantee troops to-day at Windsor, and has a dinner furnished them. General Wolsley gets a baronetcy and the garter.

Serrano's loss before Bilboa was comparatively enormous; two colonels were killed, General Primo De Revera mortally wounded and General Lobas severely wounded.

Livingstone's remains have arrived at Suez. He died of chronic dysentery.

PARIS, March 30.—The report that Henry Rochefort and Paschal Grousset have escaped from the penal colony at New Caledonia is confirmed. A dispatch from Melbourne, of to-day's date, says they, with Gourde and Bulliere, and two other convicts, have arrived at Newcastle, New South Wales.

LONDON, March 31.—A dispatch from Melbourne says Henri Rochefort and his companions escaped from New Caledonia by stowing themselves away in the vessel bound for Newcastle. They have arrived at Sydney, and will proceed to Europe direct.

CALCUTTA, March 31.—Reports from the districts affected by the famine show a great improvement in the situation. The measures taken by the government to relieve the distress of the people have proved very effective. There are now no actual cases of starvation outside of Tirhoot, and in that district there are but few.

BERLIN, March 31.—The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cologne was arrested to-day for violating the ecclesiastical laws. The arrest was made without any demonstration.

Chinese Children.

When a son is born a "milk-name" is given him in connection with the rejoicings of the family. This corresponds with our pet names. Later the boy receives his regular names. The important ceremony of binding the wrists is observed in connection with the thank-offerings to the goddess mother. It varies in details. A common plan is to tie a piece of red cotton loosely round the wrists; another is to fasten some ancient copper coins on the wrists for several days by means of red cotton. In some families this is not finally removed from the infant's wrists for several months, though it is more usual to take it off after fourteen days. The idea is that the binding of the wrists together will prevent the baby from being wicked and disobedient not only in childhood, but also in after-life. In allusion to this singular custom, when children are troublesome or naughty, they are asked if their mothers neglected to bind their wrists.

When the baby is a month old the head is shaved for the first time, and in the case of a boy this ceremony is performed before the ancestral tablets. A feast is also given, to which the relatives and intimate friends are invited, and it is customary for them to bring presents of toys, food, money, etc.; they also frequently club together and send the infant a silver plate, on which they inscribe three characters, meaning longevity, honor and happiness. Shortly after this the parents make their acknowledgments to their various friends for their congratulations, and for the presents which they have sent; this is commonly done by sending a small present of cakes in return. At a subsequent entertainment, which sometimes takes place when the child is four months old, the "happy father," it is said, "bows down before the goddess ('mother,') and begs that the child may be good-natured and easy to take care of, that it may grow fat, that it may sleep well at night, and that it may not be given to crying," etc.

The maternal grandmother, when a boy is a year old, sends him a present of a cap and a pair of shoes, as well as some other garments, and on this occasion another family feast is held to celebrate the birthday.

Our mothers, whose children are backward in walking, will be amused at the following piece of Chinese nursery superstition: "It is the custom in many families, when the child is just beginning to walk alone, for a member of the family to take a large knife, often such as is used in the kitchen to cut up vegetables, and, approaching him from behind as he is toddling along, to put it between his legs, or hold it a little way off from him, the edge downward, and then to bring it to the ground, as if in the act of cutting something. This is called 'cutting the cords of his feet,' and the motion is repeated two or three times. It is done in order to facilitate his learning to walk, and is supposed to be of great use in keeping the child from stumbling and falling down."

After the shaving of the head, at the end of the first month, it is a common practice to allow a patch of hair to grow on top, if the child be a boy, and on both sides if a girl; the hair is braided into tight little queues, which stick out, and give the children a very comical look in their early years. When a girl, however, reaches womanhood she ceases to wear these queues.—All the Year Round.

Joss Worship.

The principal Chinese festival is a propitiatory offering to Joss. The Chinese believe their god is good and kind, and therefore needs no offering to secure his favor, but it is necessary to ingratiate the evil spirit, or Joss. Previous to the great yearly gathering at the place dedicated to Joss, there are great preparations for the occasion. Everything that can tempt a Chinese palate is cooked—pigs, poultry, rice and fruit in every conceivable form. Frugal to a proverb on ordinary occasions, on this gala day the Chinaman spares no expense. "Every carriage to be had is engaged for transport to the festive scene. Very jaunty, too, the young celestials look, in the scrupulously clean, and generally new costume, one very noticeable feature of which is the whitest of stockings, and brightest of varnished leather shoes." The Joss house has been thoroughly cleaned; Joss himself, a large wooden figure about ten feet high, has been regilt. He sits cross-legged on an elevated platform, surrounded by little silk or satin flags, on which are curious devices. The room he occupies is hung round with banners bearing all sorts of Chinese characters, and long scrolls of paper, each with some wise saying written on it. The whole is decorated with bouquets, and on a table before the Joss are large vases filled with artificial flowers. Outside are scores of little tables, piled high with provisions. Gongs and cymbals make a deafening din.

Early in the day the procession, with banners borne aloft, and gongs and cymbals clanging on every side, marches slowly and stealthy before the image, each man bearing a bowl of rice, and invoking the friendship of Joss. After this ceremony comes the feasting, and then the gambling, which is, after all, the great attraction of the day. This gambling is carried on in utter silence, though there are sometimes as many as six or eight hundred gambling at once. Mr. Pike says: "I have carefully studied their countenances, but could not judge from them who won or lost—the same stolid look on every face; not a muscle moved. Sometimes after losing his ready cash a man will stake his whole stock in trade. A shop close to my house was owned by a very respectable Chinaman, a quiet fellow, who had his place well stocked with groceries, wines, etc., and owned one assistant, a boy of about twenty, as quiet and steady as his master. For a few days his shop was shut, much to the inconvenience of his neighbors; and on inquiry I found it was the annual festival, and both master and man had attended it. At length Mr. Lung-Fo reopened, but, to every one's astonishment, he was busy sweeping out his shop, and weighing out charcoal and lard to the customers, while the youngster sat leisurely smoking and making up the day-books. It appeared they had been gambling from the time they left home. Lung-Fo had lost to his servant all his money, his whole stock and house; and then, having nothing more, he wagered himself, and if he lost he was to be servant to the other. And he did lose. But there was no appearance of triumph on the boy's face; master and servant reversed their places with the most perfect sang froid. This is no uncommon case."

Medical View of Spiritualism.

Of all mental ailments none seem to yield to treatment so reluctantly as Spiritualism. I have watched many cases of genuine Spiritualism, but do not remember to have seen a chronic case permanently cured. I have seen typical cases pass regularly through their successive stages and terminate in open insanity, and have never been able to mitigate the symptoms nor avert the result. Spiritualism is the most uncompromising complaint with which the psychologist is called to meet. No epidemic of modern times can compare with it. It is a delusion which has existed twenty-five years, and attacked in the United States alone nearly three millions of people. The last census informs us that there are in the republic twenty-four thousand insane, setting aside idiots; and it is believed that out of this number seven thousand five hundred cases may be traced directly to Spiritualism. The delusion does not appear to be decreasing, though fortunately its victims are now almost altogether from the vulgar and illiterate classes, and scientific men do not seem to be liable to the contagion. It numbers among its victims a few men and women of talent and genius, but they were attacked years ago; and we venture to say that, had they remained free from the disorder up to the present day, they would not be very susceptible to its influence. The fact is, Spiritualism has lost its hold on the higher classes, and is spreading with fearful rapidity among the rude and illiterate. Whole communities are given over to its influence. Its believers have their organizations, places of worship, mediums, books, papers and asylums; they are as sincere, earnest, and as fearless as were the Flagellants, Lycanthropes and Crusaders of the middle ages; but, alas! they are even more deranged.—New York Medical Review.

Japanese Dentistry.

Dentistry is a famous "trade" in Japan, and as metal enters into the manufacture of the Japanese false teeth, we close our notice with an account of their manufacture. It is well known that although the Japanese possess fine teeth, they dye them black, and whether from this custom or from the use of woolen brushes they lose them very early in life. To us it seems that their tooth-brushes should receive most of the blame, as they consist of tough wood pounded at one end to loosen the fibers. They resemble paint-brushes, and owing to their shape it is impossible to get one behind the teeth. As might be expected, there is an accumulation of tartar, which frequently draws the teeth. Their process of manufacturing false teeth is very crude. The plates are made of wood, and the teeth consist of tacks driven up from under the side. A piece of wax is heated and pressed into the roof of the mouth. It is then taken out and hardened by putting it into cold water. Another piece of heated wax is applied to the impression, and, after being pressed into shape, is hardened. A piece of wood is then roughly cut into the desired form, and the model, having been smeared with red paint, is applied to it. Where they touch each other a mark is left by the paint. This is cut away until they tough evenly all over. Sharks' teeth, bits of ivory or stone, for teeth, are set into the wood and retained in position by being strung on a thread, which is secured on each end by a peg driven into the hole where the thread makes its exit from the base. Iron or copper tacks are driven into the ridge to serve for masticating purposes, the unequal wear of the wood and metal keeping up the desired roughness. Their full sets answer admirably for the mastication of food, but, as they do not improve the looks, they are worn but little for ornament. The ordinary service of a set of teeth is about five years, but they frequently last much longer. All full upper sets are retained by atmospheric pressure. This principle is coeval with the art. In Japan dentistry exists only as a mechanical trade, and the status of those who practice it is not very high. It is, in fact, graded with carpenters—their word hadyikfson meaning "tooth-carpenter."—Iron Age.

THE following printed directions, furnished to communicants at the Ritualistic Church of the Advent in Boston, will give a clearer idea of what Ritualism is than could be imparted in an elaborate essay on the subject:

"1. Come fasting; it has been the practice of the church from the earliest times, and experience will soon teach you the benefit of the custom. If you cannot conveniently come fasting on Sunday, come on a week-day.

"2. It is good to prepare one's self for receiving, or to return thanks after receiving, by being present during a celebration of the holy communion without receiving.

"3. Come up to the altar rails as soon as the priest turns round to the people, after making his own communion.

"4. Kneel near the middle of the altar rail if there are only a few communicants.

"5. Your hands ungloved; ladies' vails uplifted, otherwise they sweep the rim of the chalice.

"6. Receive the body of Christ in the palm of the right hand, supported by the left, crosswise, and so raise it to your lips.

"7. When the priest presents the chalice, do not bend down; keep your head erect and unmoved. If need be, gently raise it with your hand on the stem.

"8. Gentlemen will take care that their mustaches do not enter the chalice.

"9. Do not put your head down suddenly after receiving the precious blood, or you might strike the chalice from the priest's hands.

"10. Do not use a handkerchief to wipe the lips, after receiving.

"11. If, by any misfortune, a crumb should fall, pick it up, remembering that 'we are not worthy so much as to gather up the crumbs from the Lord's table.'"

Some uninitiated person remarks that the reason given for the concluding direction is a very neat example of a non sequitur.

PRIZE ESSAY.—Mr. Editor: Already some of our ministerial brethren are ordering copies of the missionary prize essay for distribution among their people. The idea is a good one. They can be furnished on the following terms: For a hundred copies, $12; for a dozen, $2; single copy (net,) twenty cents. The usual discount to preachers and wholesale dealers. Direct orders to A. H. Redford, agent, Nashville. Would not presiding elders, as well as pastors on circuits and stations, do well to have this excellent document spread broadcast among their people?

J. B. MCFERRIN, Sec.

NO FRIENDS have a perfect suitableness to each other, and roughness and inequalities that are nearest us are most troublesome. The wonderful variety and contrariety of apprehension, interest, temperaments, and occasions and temptations are such that, while we are scandalized at the discord and confusions of the world, we must recall ourselves, and admire that all-ruling Providence which keepeth up so much order and concord as there is.—Baxter.

Providence and Pecan Grove, La.

MR. EDITOR: Providence and Pecan Grove circuit is in the extreme northeast corner of the Louisiana conference, and is composed of the two appointments from which it is named, lying on the Mississippi river, about fifteen miles apart. Our territorial area thus includes a portion of that rich alluvial region of the old Pelican State, once so highly cultivated, and still possessing such enchanting possibilities. Our people, though, alas! not so wealthy as of yore, are refined and cultivated, and have the biggest kind of hearts. They have given their pastor a warm welcome. O how his heart yearns over them in all their joys and sorrows!

Providence is an incorporated city of five hundred inhabitants, more or less. The old town lies near the river, and is protected from inundation by a small embankment. Here are several residences, and an old ruined Presbyterian church, a relic of the halcyon days of yore. The new town, which has grown up since the war, lies partially concealed behind the enormous levee, which saith to the Father of Waters: "Here shall thy proud waves be stayed." The beautiful lake, from which the town derives its name, stretches away into the dim distance, embordered with fine residences, and with many moss-clad trees reflected in its glassy surface. It was formerly connected with the river by Grant's canal, which, being now shut out by the levee, forms a very commodious harbor, where the various merchant marine of the Western waters find lodgment and traffic for their wares. There is more of public enterprise in Providence than in most towns of its size. The streets are well laid out and cleanly kept. We have a court-house and jail, three churches, some good schools, a fire company, and an ably conducted weekly paper, to say nothing of the numerous stores and festive haunts of Bacchus, too numerous to mention. Of course the Catholics and Episcopalians are here before us; but, thanks to the labors of my predecessors, we have a foothold. Besides the Sabbath services, we have a Bible lesson every Wednesday evening, also weekly lessons in vocal music, by which we seek to improve our service of song. All these occasions are well attended by young and old. Our weekly paper is also pleased to help the good cause along by an occasional puff in its local column. The house of worship at Providence is inconveniently small, but we will build a church soon, if God permit. The Pecan Grove church is pleasantly situated on a grassy lawn, embowered in a grove of forest-trees, near Goodrich's Landing, in the midst of an intelligent and lovely people. The roads are terribly bad, yet the congregations here are always large.

The river is now at a fearful height. The passing steamers tower far above the level of the surrounding country. Last Friday the levee gave way two miles or more below town, cutting off communication, except by steamer, between the two portions of my circuit. And now a torrent of water, probably equal in volume to the Ohio river, goes madly roaring, boiling, careering away, to spread itself over many fair fields, some already prepared for planting. God help the planters, already sorely impoverished; yea, the hundreds of water-bound, famine-threatened poor.

From the Work.

CRAWFORD CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Some of the older members of the Alabama Conference may remember that Soule chapel once stood on the road leading from Columbus to Eufaula. About twenty years since it was moved away, and since that time the community has, for the most part, been destitute of the means of grace. The writer, hearing of the destitution, went over the first of last year, to see if anything could be done. The only chance was to use a little church owned by a negro Baptist preacher. It was ascertained that the people were willing to meet for worship in this church; so an appointment was made. During the year the good people determined to have a church, and went to work with a will. The result is that we now have a good house of worship, all paid for, exactly where the old church formerly stood. I could mention the names of those who were most active in accomplishing this good work, but I suppose it is unnecessary, as they have a good conscience now, and will receive their reward in heaven. Last Sabbath, the twenty-second of March, was the day appointed for the dedication, and Dr. McCarty, our presiding elder, was to preach the sermon and dedicate the church. He came, and long will we all remember the day of his coming. After the dedication the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, which was indeed a precious season. We then gave an opportunity for persons to join the church, when three candidates came forward. One of them was happily converted. The others are earnest penitents. After due examination by the presiding elder they were received into the church. We now have thirteen members, with a prospect of others, and a good Sabbath school. The appointment is not so convenient to this circuit as to some others, but I will take pleasure in serving them until a better provision can be made for them.

Yours truly,

W. W. GRAHAM.

THE EFFORT TO ESTABLISH A SEAMEN'S BETHEL FOR SCANDINAVIAN SEAMEN.

The meeting for the purpose of raising funds to build a chapel for the use of Scandinavian seamen visiting this port, was well attended last evening at the Prytania Street Congregational church, by a congregation largely composed of persons that probably never realized how large a transient population we have at times in the shape of sailors who claim nativity in the land of the "Norseman of old." One of the speakers remarked that it was a fact not generally known that there were twenty per cent. more Scandinavian seamen visited this port than of all other nationalities together.

The Rev. Mr. Pease, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel, spoke at length of the number of visitors attending his church, and its inadequacy to accommodate many more that would come; also the pressing need of a Sailors' Home, an institution to be met with in every other large seaport town of the Union, and many of the smaller ones as well. He was followed by Dr. Tudor, who mentioned the fact that at the late Evangelical Alliance the mission of preaching the gospel to the sailor seemed to be entirely overlooked; he also spoke at some length of the late Father Taylor, of Boston, the pioneer of bethel preachers; of his many virtues and great labors in behalf of the seaman.

Dr. Taylor was the next speaker introduced. He also spoke of the great want of a home for seamen at this port, and other subjects pertinent to the object of the meeting. A hymn was then sung in the Scandinavian language, followed by an address by the Rev. Mr. Raden in the same tongue, when the Rev. Mr. Mathews succeeded him, and in a few humorous and well-timed remarks was successful in inducing quite a large subscription toward the fund required, many gentlemen present subscribing $50 each, others $25. The estimated cost of the proposed building is $2,700.—New Orleans Times, March 31.

Periodicals.

THE GEORGIA MUSICAL ECLECTIC is a handsomely-printed monthly, devoted to musical literature and the publication of new and choice music. Guilford Wood & Co., publishers, Macon and Atlanta, Georgia. We have received the March number.

THE March number of Good Things for the Young of All Ages has: The Adventures of Harry Delane, God's Child, Waking Up in Spring, Cicero Brick's Orations, Puzzledom, and other things.

OLD AND NEW for April has: Henry W. Longfellow, The Liquor Trade Two Hundred Years Ago, The Church and Its Pretensions, Charles Sumner, and other articles.

LA CREME DE LA CREME No. 4 is said to contain the richest of the rich music of the ablest composers. Published monthly, by J. L. Peters, New York.

THE AMERICAN ARTISAN for April is a fine number of this splendid and exceedingly valuable publication. Published by Brown & Allen, New York.

MOON'S BEE WORLD for March contains much fresh and instructive matter about bee culture. A. F. Moon & Co., publishers, Rome, Georgia.

THE AMERICAN PRIMER, John P. Morton & Co., publishers, is well adapted for teaching little children to read and write.

THE COLLEGE PEN for March has been received. Nashville, Tennessee: Wheeler, Marshall & Bruce, printers.

APPLETON'S JOURNAL of March 28 has an unusually good table of contents, and is copiously illustrated.

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY for April has a fine collection of songs and new music.

AN EXCELLENT GIFT.—Mr. Editor: Dr. McCraw, pastor of the First Baptist church in Delhi, Louisiana, on leaving home last fall to recruit his health, requested his wife to present me Fletcher's complete works, which he desired I should have. He never returned alive—was taken from his labors on earth to his reward in the sky. In due time his most estimable yet bereaved companion carried out his request, and we were placed in possession of the books. We have placed them in our library, along with Watson, Clark, Raulston, etc.—quite an accession. Who will be next to imitate the noble example of the dying man of God?

T. M. LIVERMAN.

FLOYD, La., March 25, 1874.

BOOKS TO SELL.—As some brethren have suggested books that will sell, and ought to be sold, allow me to request every preacher who orders books to sell to order at least one dozen each of Points of Controversy, and Infant Baptism, both by Rev. C. W. Miller, of Kentucky. By the time you sell them you will want as many more. The Bible Christian, by Josephus Anderson, is a good book to put into the hands of any one, old or young. H. H. MONTGOMERY.

INSTEAD of spending much time in refuting error, real or supposed, let the pulpit confine itself more particularly to the exposition of sound and earnest practical Christian truth, which will prove a much more perfect weapon than any argumentative discourse directly addressed against it.

THE FIRST HYMN TO CHRIST.

Translated for the Alliance from the Greek of Clement of Alexandria, by Edward P. Weston.

Christ, of tender lambs the leader,
Shelter of each wandling bird,
Of our young the guide and pleader,
Let our song to thee be heard;
While sweet praises each voice raises
To the everlasting word.

King of saints, the all prevailing
Message of the Father's grace,
Lord of wisdom, grief assailing
Savior of our mortal race;
Shepherd Jesus, guide and lead us
To thy heavenly pasture place!

Fisher in the sea of mortals,
Whom thy grace alone can save,
Luring us from sin's dark portals,
Luring from the hostile wave;
With thy life so sweet and tender,
Save thy saints, O Christ, we crave.

Lead, O King, to life eternal,
In the footsteps thou hast trod,
In the heavenly way supernal,
Strength of those who worship God;
Fount of mercy, virtue's author,
Lead us with thy staff and rod.

For thy lowly life of teaching
Find thou here thy blest reward,
While the children, heavenward reaching,
Sing the praises of their Lord;
Children tender, their Defender
Praising in divine accord!

LAKE FOREST, January 20, 1874.

NOTE.—The hymn here translated is claimed to be earlier than the time of Clement, in whose writings it is recorded. Many modern hymns to Christ are richer in the graces of sacred melody; but there is much in this to interest the reader, as the earliest hymn of praise to the divine Redeemer known to the Christian world. The translation is as nearly literal as the exigencies of English verse allow.—Christian Intelligencer.

Terms of Membership.

A REPLY TO DR. L. PIERCE.

MR. EDITOR: I know not who Looker-On is, to whose strictures Dr. L. Pierce replies in your issue of March 5, nor would I defend the motto of either. I think they are on opposite extremes. But believing the venerable doctor to be wrong on a point of organic law in several late articles from his pen, I ask the privilege of reviewing his position in the ADVOCATE. The question, Who are qualified for membership in the church? is certainly a very important one—one carrying with it grave consequences to both the church and applicant. Just at the outset I will put in a disclaimer against favoring any looseness in the reception of members. Great caution ought to be exercised in preparing and bringing forward applicants, and the act of receiving them ought to be marked by such solemnities as will impress them with the sacredness of their covenant engagements.

If I understand Dr. Pierce, he holds the affirmative of the proposition: That, according to the law of our church, conversion, in the Methodistic sense of the term, is the necessary qualification for membership in the church. I deny. Let it be understood that we are not now arguing the question: What ought to be the qualifications? but this: What is the law of the church bearing upon this particular? Just here, it seems to me, is where the discussion of this subject has tangled itself with error. It has been claimed (justly too, no doubt) that the standard of piety in the church is far below the scriptural mark, and it is assumed that the reception into the church of unqualified applicants for membership is the cause. It seems to be taken for granted that a faithful application of church law in receiving members would have prevented a lapse from piety. Thus, instead of applying the remedy at the right point, as we shall see in the sequel, there is an effort being made, it seems to me, to introduce a practice in direct conflict with the organic law of the church. It is strictly a question of church law that we now have before us.

Now, at the risk of being classed with those "unreflecting men" who "fall back upon what they call the old Wesleyan conditions of church membership," we maintain, as a question of fact, that there is no law in our church code requiring conversion as a condition of reception to membership in the church. This, notwithstanding all that Dr. Pierce says about Mr. Wesley's intention, and the General Conference action of 1840. To the proof. In the General Rules of the United Society, drawn up in 1739, Mr. Wesley did not require conversion as a qualification for admission. "There is only one condition previously required of those who desire admission into these societies—a 'desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins.'" Not a word about conversion. Again, we deny that Mr. Wesley intended to change the terms of admission when he set off the American societies, and ask for the proof that he did. Further, all will admit, we presume, that when the Methodist Episcopal Church in America was organized these General Rules were accepted as stating the terms of admission into and continued membership in said church. From the nature of the case no change could have been effected without specific legislation, and there was none. Once more, it is admitted, in the article under review, that up to 1840 "Methodist preachers generally went upon the Wesleyan Society platform." Still further, it is clear that this "society platform" is regarded by Dr. Pierce as still in force in all particulars, except in the terms of admission; for it is by the faithful application of the rules constituting this "platform" that he is laboring to bring about a revival of purity in the church. I am glad he is placing such emphasis upon these rules. His earnestness, venerable years and commanding influence will do great good; besides, he thus saves me an argument to prove that these rules still embody the constitutional terms of continued membership in the church. The only question is whether the first clause, setting forth, as just quoted, the terms of admission, is still in force. Dr. Pierce denies and I affirm. We quote him. He is surprised that Looker-On is "utterly unaware of the fact that the General Conference had, as far back, I (Dr. Pierce) think, as 1840, laid it down as an ordinance that from thenceforward no one was to be admitted into the church, or offered by the pastor to the church for reception into its fellowship, until he had, in all the prescribed inquiries, became satisfied of their regenerated state in mind and heart, and especially of the genuineness of their faith; by which the General Conference meant saving faith—the faith that justifies the ungodly." Granted that this is a correct statement of the General Conference action of 1840—that an "ordinance" was passed setting forth new terms of admission into the church—it utterly failed, on constitutional grounds, to carry with it the authority of law. Let us go back thirty-two years further, to the Conventional Conference of 1808. This Conference passed what is known as the "Restrictive Rules," which "rules" have all the form of a constitution. The fourth reads as follows: "They (the General Conference) shall not revoke or change the General Rules of the United Societies." Now compare the terms of admission, as set forth in the General Rules, with the above extract from Dr. Pierce, and who does not see that they are in irreconcilable antagonism—that his rule, to all intents and purposes, changes the General Rules? It signifies nothing that the clause was not formally stricken out; if the General Conference resolution went into operation the clause became a dead letter. But it has more vitality than any General Conference resolution, unless brought into its place constitutionally, which is not claimed for the resolutions of 1840. Hence any "ordinance" passed by a General Conference changing the terms of admission is, ab initio, null and void. With great deference I suggest that it is useless to characterize this argument as mere "simpering," or to try to silence those who hold this view by crying: "Shame upon their memory as guardians of Methodism." It is not a question of memory, but of clearly-defined constitutional law. The case demands proof either that the Conventional Conference of 1808 did not intend to perpetuate in the Methodist Episcopal Church the same conditions that determined the qualifications for membership in the United Societies, or that the constitutional steps were taken to displace the clause setting forth these conditions in the General Rules by the resolutions of the General Conference of 1840. Until such proof is furnished it must appear to all who keep the law of the church in view, rather than what may seem to be a pressing want, that all who sympathize with this effort to change the terms of admission into the church have taken a "new departure," that places them in conflict with our church constitution. If the change in question be necessary, let it be introduced legally, and not brought in by a side door.

Asking you, Mr. Editor, to indulge me in one more article on this subject, I will leave off for the present.

Denominationalism.

MR. EDITOR: In Webster's dictionary this term is defined: "Devotion to the interests of a sect or denomination."

I use it as opposed to indifference on the one hand, and to bigotry on the other—as a happy mean between two extremes, signifying a strict adherence to the doctrines distinguishing any particular body of orthodox Christians from all others.

I use the term orthodoxy as embracing all those doctrines which are held in common by the several Christian denominations, and which becomes a basis for union like that of the Evangelical Alliance. Yet each one of these denominations holds doctrines peculiar to itself, which has given rise to Methodism, Presbyterianism, etc.

As in a federal government of States all the States are united by one organic instrument, called a constitution, yet each State has its particular constitution, which differs in some respects from every other State constitution, so each denomination of Christians has its own particular creed, which distinguishes it from every other. Yet the creeds of each and all these denominations are in harmony with the great constitution of orthodoxy.

Now, as all the articles of religion essential to salvation are comprised in the orthodox symbol, and held in common by every Christian denomination, therefore Christianity and denominationalism are not inseparable, since a man may be a Christian without being a Methodist, Baptist, or of this or that particular name. It may now be asked: If denominationalism is not essential to individual salvation, what use is it? Much every way. The church exists in different denominations. It is man's imperative duty as well as his highest interest to join the church. He can only do this by uniting with that denomination which, according to his judgment, is the most scriptural in its faith and practice. And because there are no other bonds to unite the membership of a denomination, as such, than its distinctive doctrines, its strength and success depend in a large measure upon the devotion of its members to them.

For success every denomination is shut up to that which makes it what it is; here is found its chief element of power. For example, Methodism does not depend upon her Christianity alone for success, but upon that which distinguishes her Christianity from all others, it being, as was truthfully pronounced, "Christianity in earnest." Now I maintain that the success and strength of Methodism will be in proportion to the zeal of her members not only as Christians, but as Methodists. To create and perpetuate this, all that is peculiar to Methodism, whether it be in spirit, doctrine or practice, must be kept prominently before the minds of her membership. I fear that we have lost sight of this to some extent, which may account for a kind of indifferentism found among us. I am no advocate for bigotry, nay, I detest the very feeling and practice for which the word stands, but I do plead for a true denominationalism, which is not incompatible with Christian charity, for both may unite in the life of a good man. I am aware, however, that a Christian and a sectarian zeal are not inseparable in one aspect, for a man may have a strong zeal for his church and at the same time have no true Christian zeal. But a man never has a true Christian zeal and is yet devoid of sectarianism; for how can he if he be an honest man? By his profession he says that his church is the most scriptural in her articles of faith. My observation for several years of ministerial life has taught me that those persons who lay the largest claims to what they are pleased to call charity are generally persons of little or no religion, and that their charity is only another name for indifference. Whereas those persons who are the best Christians among us I have invariably found to be the strongest Methodists.

There is not a denomination in Christendom that has such an all-embracing charity as the Methodist, nor one that had a stronger denominationalism in the days of her most rapid advance. But the spirit of a kind of liberalism has obtained among us, which is paralyzing in its effects. We are wont fondly to call it charity, but it deserves not the name. Charity is not indifference; but that this spirit is one of indifference is manifest, for all who possess it are easily proselyted. We often reproach other denominations for bigotry, when perhaps it is not bigotry, but a deep conviction of the truth of what they teach and believe. A true denominationalism is founded upon a deep conviction of the truth of what is professed, and it will, on proper occasions, necessarily manifest itself. On the other hand, indifference exists where there is no conviction, or where the conviction is not strong enough to overcome counter influences. If a denomination wishes to lengthen its cords and strengthen its stakes it must produce this conviction by emphasizing its peculiarities in the way of proof and practice.

As Methodists we have a historic prestige of which we might boast. But if not true to the spirit, doctrines and practice which gave us birth, we must seek out, as many would like to do, other elements of success. To insure prosperity our pulpits, presses and Sunday schools must give us that view of Christianity called Methodism.

Our Local Ministry.

MR. EDITOR: In the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of the twelfth of February I find an article headed "Our Local Ministry," for which you will ever retain the kindest regards from the local ranks.

Outside of the Methodist Church they seem to occupy an anomalous position. They are without any charge, church or flock; without representation, except as lay delegates to the General Conference; without any certain duties, except such as may be assigned them by the preacher in charge, or such duties as they may find necessary, under existing circumstances, and under long tutelage before ordination, and without any course of studies to prepare them for their duties as ministers. While they may be very useful to the community and church at large, and do a great deal of good, it seems to me they might be placed in a better position for usefulness by taking a regular course of studies which would enable them to be better preachers, and so that their preaching would not be in an "occasional and haphazard way, but habitually and after a well-devised plan."

In order to be ordained deacon the local preacher is required to preach four years, also four years more to be ordained elder. Then, by recommendation of the Quarterly Conference and an election by the Annual Conference, they may be ordained, without any course of study and without any knowledge of their qualifications, by the Conference, except such as the friends of the applicant may present. Hence nearly all or a large proportion of our local brethren are not qualified as they ought to be or would wish to be.

Therefore they are looked upon as second or third or lower-rate preachers, and are used sometimes when there is no other chance. This arises from want of the proper education of the local ministry. As education is advancing in our church, we need it in all classes of preachers. To remedy this want, it seems to me, the General Conference should provide that, after preaching two years, the local preacher shall be eligible to deacon's orders, by proving efficient in a certain course of studies recommended by the General Conference or College of Bishops, and to be eligible to elder's orders under the same rule. By this means we may have in our local ranks preachers of whom we would not be ashamed of at any time or place. It may be objected that there are a great many local brethren who would never be ordained under this rule; but I think it would prove an incentive to go forward and better qualify themselves for advancement.

I throw out these few thoughts for reflection, as the General Conference is near at hand.

LOCAL PREACHER.

I Must Speak a Little.

MR. EDITOR: A feeling of veneration has hitherto restrained me from saying anything against Dr. Pierce's views as to the conditions of church membership; but since he becomes "defiant" I must speak a little to somebody, if it be only to you. And I defy him or any man to prove by holy writ that any of the apostles, save Paul, were ever converted—had justifying faith at all—or were ever baptized; or that one of the three thousand added to the church on the day of Pentecost professed saving faith in Christ before their admission into the church.

No inferences now. I can infer as much as any man. But I hold him to the word. I want you to publish this scrawl. It won't ruin the church, coming from Beza and the Psalms.

The story of the life of Theodore de Beza is well known. Educated in evangelical principles, he had been drawn for a season far away from religious thought by the love of the world and by a fondness for poetry. Meanwhile, on recovering from an illness which had brought him near to the gates of death, he unreservedly gave his heart to God in his early years; he left what he called Egypt, and withdrew to Geneva, near to Calvin. From this moment he began a new life.

When Beza arrived at Geneva, in the month of October, 1548, he visited for the first time the assembly of the Reformed for worship. There he heard sung Marot's version of Psalm 91: "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust." He never forgot the lively impression the singing of this Psalm made upon him. Its remembrance, he tells us, always sufficed to sustain him, and to drive from him every appearance of fear; as, for instance, during the plague at Lausanne, and in the most trying junctures of his life.

Fifty-seven years afterward, at the close of a career consecrated to the service of the church, this veteran of the Reformation repeated on his death-bed these words of another Psalm (130) of Marot:

"O Lord, my God, if thou shouldst weigh
Our sins, and them peruse,
What man could then escape, or say,
I can myself excuse?"

When he renounced the world, Beza did not renounce poetry. Calvin, going one day to see him, and not finding him at home, perceived upon the writing-table a copy-book containing French verses. It was a translation, in verse, of Psalm 16. He carried it away, unknown to the author, and read it to his colleagues. The verses of Beza pleased them so much that they prevailed upon him to make no delay in versifying the other Psalms not yet put in verse.

It was at Lausanne, where he was sent the following year as professor of Greek, that Beza commenced this work. Calvin continued to encourage and to press him to it. "If Beza has any of the Psalms ready," wrote he to Viret, January 21, 1551, "he ought not to wait until he has more of them. Tell him to send me them, although but a few, by the first messenger." On March 24 Beza obtained license to print his Psalms. He had translated thirty-four of them. They were published at Geneva that year, and were reprinted with the Psalms of Marot in 1552.

The sixty Psalms not yet translated were finished in much less time than the others. This was due, no doubt, to the renewed energy given him by his three visits to Germany and France in the years of 1560 and 1561. Charles the Ninth consented, a few days after the conference at Poissy, to grant the royal privilege for an edition of the Psalms, and the collection of Marot and of Beza were printed at Lyons in 1562. The editions of this year are the first that give the Psalter complete.

Beza had required, in accomplishing this work, such a taste for the Psalms that they never ceased to occupy him. More leisurely he made in Latin a literal version, a paraphrase and a translation in verse. "It is not," he said in the preface to the last of these works, "that I believed the efforts of man are sufficient fully to express the sublimity of these inspired writings; it was only for my own profit, and because this exercise helped to fix them more upon my memory."

In printing for the first time his thirty-four Psalms, Beza dedicated them "To the Church of our Lord" in some delightful verses, that let us see "the admirable qualities so happily united in him," of which his friend Pelletier has told us. Indeed there was always found in him the man of genius and of action, the Christian and the poet.—Scottish Reformed Presbyterian.

A WARM friend of missions, after sending a donation of $1,000 to the American Board, wrote to the treasurer, giving a "little history" of the donation, as follows:

"Some two years ago I bought some real estate here. Part of it was a choice building lot—so regarded. I have offered it for sale in all that time. For the first year real estate was active here, and money tair easy; then came closer times, and real estate dull; but, good or bad times, I had no offer for it. A few months since, feeling that I had little tact for selling or finding a buyer, I got tired of it, and consecrated the property to the Lord. Still I had no offer for it until last week; just in the hardest times, a man came in one morning and offered me $3,800, my price being $4,000. I said: 'I will not sell it for that to-day; will you make me the offer for twenty-four hours?' 'Yes.' 'Come in, then, to-morrow morning, and I will tell you whether I will take it.' Before night another party came in and offered my full price, one-half cash down, the other half on time. I sold it, and sent one-half the sum paid down to you, and the other half to the American Home Missionary Society.

"I concluded that the Lord best knew when he wanted the money in his work, and sent a buyer when that time came. I think this is a capital way for disposing of unproductive property."—Missionary Herald.

RELIEF THERE.—A lady was asked by her Biddy about the nature of the next world, and whether it would be just like this. The lady, being blessed with a happy family of eleven children, has a skeleton in the house in the shape of a stocking-basket that never gets empty, and at whose side she has spent many a weary midnight hour in darning. With this spectacle before her eyes, she replied to the girl playfully: "I don't think we shall be required to darn stockings after midnight." "Sure, and that's thru for you, mum; for all the pictures of angels I have ever seen were barefooted."

Obituaries.

WILLIAM CADE was born January 22, 1793, and died January 28, 1874. About twenty years ago, at a meeting in Vermillion parish, Louisiana, he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Four years ago he removed to Lincoln county, Mississippi, where he died. Although an invalid for a number of years, he died suddenly. His intimate friends have strong hope of his eternal salvation.

W. WADSWORTH.

DIED, at Oak Grove, St. Landry parish, Louisiana, March 15, 1874, little HARRY, son of James F. and Rosa A. Simpson. This darling child was only seven years old, yet he was a true Christian. His dying words were: "Lord, have mercy upon my father; Lord, have mercy upon me." His father was absent in Texas, and in the dying hour the little Christian did not forget him. At the age of five years he received a Testament as a reward for having committed to memory the Lord's Prayer, the Creed and the Ten Commandments. Truly, "of such is the kingdom of heaven." How delightful to know that the first impulses of childhood may be sanctified as oblations of praise to God.

B. F. WHITE.

MRS. JOHANNA MYRES was born near Lexington, Holmes county, Mississippi, April 19, A. D. 1834, and departed this life near Midway, Louisiana, January 18, A. D. 1874.

Sister Myres joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Midway in 1872, while Bro. Bradley was in charge of Floyd circuit, of which she lived a member till death. She suffered much, but bore her afflictions with Christian resignation, hoping to recover. About two days before her death she became unconscious of her suffering, and thus passed away. May God sanctify her death to the good of her bereaved husband and the many friends she leaves behind to mourn their loss, which doubtless is her eternal gain.

MRS. MOLLIE A. JEFFRIES, daughter of David and Mary Lynch, and wife of Willis L. Jeffries, died January 27, 1871, aged nineteen years, nine months and two days.

She applied for membership in the church August 30, 1873, under the administration of Dr. Trippett, and was received on profession of faith and baptism, by Rev. W. F. Alexander, only the day before her death. Although not accustomed to talk freely on the subject of personal religion, her faith was evidently well founded. Her last illness was too short and painful to admit of much conversation, yet her friends were well assured, from her expressions of living faith, that her rest was upon the Rock of eternal ages. But, better than any mere profession, her life possessed all that quiet, unobtrusive, tranquil beauty so characteristic of the children of God.

J. GORTON MILLER, Pastor.

ELLA W. GLATHARY was born in Jackson parish, Louisiana, December 23, 1850, and was married to W. T. Glathary, of Washington county, Mississippi, November 15, 1871. She was the youngest daughter of Martin and the only daughter of Delila McLeroy. She died at her home in Washington county, Mississippi, March 11, 1874, of disease of the lungs. Although deprived of the privilege of renewing her membership with the church since her residence in Mississippi, she always endeavored to live in strict conformity with the rules of the Methodist Church, of which she was a member up to the time of her departure from Louisiana. After she had become fully convinced that she could not recover she quietly summoned her husband and mother-in-law to her bedside, and told them the hour for her departure from this earth was drawing very near, but that she felt that she was fully prepared to die and had no fears of the future. After giving some instructions in regard to the clothes in which she desired to be buried, she requested that her mother and father should have her little babe, and that her relatives should all strive to meet her in heaven, and in a few short minutes she ceased to live.

W. T. G.

DIED, at the residence of Mr. J. W. Kinabrew, at Johnston's Station, Mississippi, about one hundred and twelve miles from New Orleans, Louisiana, on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad, a gentleman by the name of L. JENKINS. He was a stranger here, and said his native State was Kentucky. He was very badly afflicted. His left side was so drawn that he did not use his foot in walking, and his right foot was somewhat deformed. He used two crutches in walking. Mr. Jenkins was a very nice-looking man; had black hair and eyes, and possessed quite a commanding appearance. He was somewhat reticent concerning his past life; never spoke of any of his relatives except an uncle and a sister, who, he said, lived in Delaware. He came here in October last, and boarded with us until his death, which occurred on the eighth of March, 1874. His last hours were very sad and painful not only to himself, but also to his friends who gathered around him. But the saddest of all was that the great evil—intemperance—caused his hours here to be fewer than they might have otherwise been. He left no parting words, for before he thought himself dangerously ill he became speechless. He tried very diligently to tell something, but could not, and then tried to write, but was so weak and nervous that he did not succeed. He seemed to be a very quiet man, and was a great lover of solitude—always preferred to be alone.

MISS MARTHA F. RUSSELL, of Lawrence county, Mississippi, died at the residence of her father, November 6, 1874, aged sixteen years, four months and six days.

Our sister lived and died beneath the very shadow of our temple. Her earlier years were characterized by religious deportment. She was a kind sister, an affectionate and obedient child, and a faithful friend. During her last illness she requested her father, as he leaned over her, to sing, telling him at the same time that she saw white angels. Such a death scene has more true dignity and grandeur than the most brilliant exploits of kings and conquerors.

The parents of our deceased sister have many times gone to the grave to deposit the cold remains of those whom they fondly loved and early lost, and now they are called upon to lay a new sacrifice upon the altar of Christian submission. Many evidences of mercy and goodness cluster around even this severe dispensation. Had their child gone down to the grave a stranger to the hope of heaven, and she closed her eyes in that last long, dreamless sleep without a view of him whose smile is life, with what feelings of sadness would they have bewailed her early fall. We have seen our sister walk unterrified amid the awful shadows that gather over the last boundary of life, and triumph while she died. If called upon to exchange worlds and stand before the bar of the Infinite, may our death resemble hers. When our eyes grow dim, and our voice fails, and our heart ceases to beat, may the visions of our soul extend far beyond the vail, and discern Christ standing by the throne of God.

HENRY MOORE.

BRO. JAMES RUSSELL, of Lawrence county, Mississippi, died at his residence, December 3, 1873, aged fifty years, two months and fifteen days.

Bro. Russell was a native of Alabama. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South some seven years ago. He was a tender husband, a kind father and a consistent member of the church. He was distinguished for his devotion to the interests and welfare of the church, and he always contributed liberally of his means for her maintenance. He also provided well for his own family, and the Lord seemed to prosper him in all his business affairs. His death has left a chasm in the church which will be very difficult to fill.

He survived the death of his daughter but a very short time. Being very strongly attached to her, perhaps her dying hastened his decline. But they have met together by the river of life, in the country of Immanuel, where the enemy—death—will never come to disturb their happiness.

When the sun goes out in darkness, and the last star fades away from the heavens, an angel from the throne of God will gather and reanimate his scattered dust with new life and beauty. Nothing remains with us but the clay-cold body, and it shall see corruption, and mingle with the earth which forms a covering for the bodies of all her children. Nevertheless we have this assurance—while his dying groans mingled with the sighing winds, the atmosphere of another clime received his parting breath.

HENRY MOORE.

"WE all do fade as a leaf," yet the tree of social life remains in unimpaired vigor. Meanwhile "the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance."

MADISON WEEMS is dead! Sad event to bereaved wife, loving children, devoted kindred and friends; sad for the community of Durant and vicinity, sad for the church he loved so well and served so faithfully. On our account the first exclamation was: "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth;" on his: "Servant of God, well done."

Bro. Weems was born in Abbeville district, South Carolina, October 8, 1809. He came to Mississippi in 1839. He died near Durant, Holmes county, Mississippi, December 23, 1873, in his sixty-fifth year. He was converted in his fifteenth year, and was consequently for fifty years a faithful servant of God. He was a man of commanding appearance, whose every feature and expression were molded into the gentleness of the gospel of love. He had a well-cultivated mind, and a fine capacity for business, which, combined with his sterling integrity, made men love to do business with him and to seek his counsel.

He was eminently wise in church counsel. He was for forty-one years an official member; was the recording steward of the Durant circuit at his death. Since my acquaintance with him, and specially as his presiding elder, I have had occasion to know his wise devotion to the cause of God among his people. At a time when nothing but the wisest administration, by the blessing of God, could build up the church, he took hold with a firm, trusting hand, and saw the work of the Lord prosper. He thought and worked and prayed, and enlisted others, as far as he could, in the good work. I have had letters and interviews and visits from him in the interests of the church, when the casual observer thought not of the chief desire of his soul. He was a man of strength and great faith in the cause, in the people too, and in God. As a strong man, he did a great work with little noise. What he was to his community cannot be known here. He was a peacemaker, and consequently a child of God. He was not only a noble worker in the church; he was more—a bright and shining light. The tongue of slander is dumb before his pure name.

He has left his family a priceless heritage in his spotless character, and the church an unanswerable illustration of the truth and holy power of religion, the community the fruits of a wise and well-spent life, while he has attained unto the rest that remains for the people of God.

W. P. BARTON.

A BILL has been introduced into Congress providing that no person in any one action in a civil suit for slander or libel shall be held to bail in any greater sum than $2,000, and that no matter what the number of suits by any one plaintiff against a single defendant, the latter shall not be required to give any larger bail than $5,000.

SHE KISSED THE DEAD.

BY HOMER GREENE.

She kissed the dead. Her warm, red lips
Were pressed against his marble brow.
"For if he's but asleep," she said,
"And is not numbered with the dead,
He'll rise and kiss me now."

She kissed the dead. Her warm, red lips
Were pressed against his lueless cheek.
"For he will know," she softly said,
"My kiss, and if he be not dead
He'll turn to me and speak."

She kissed the dead. Her warm, red lips
Were pressed against his lips of ice.
"He answers not," she weeping said,
"I know my darling must be dead,
For I have kissed him thrice."

The Seven "I Wills" of Jesus.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

We read of "seven golden candlesticks" seen by John the Evangelist in his vision of heaven. There are seven utterances by our Lord and Savior that deserve to be placed in a group of candlesticks, that they may give light and comfort to many a dark, troubled heart.

1. The first one of these is the "I will" of invitation. It was addressed originally to the burdened in spirit, as well as to those who were in bondage to a religion of pharisaic rites. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The Greek words in this passage are very intense; they describe toil so severe as to cause suffering and burdens too heavy to be borne. This is exactly the condition of every unconverted soul. That soul is under the crushing bondage of sin. Guilt galls the conscience. No man can be at rest while he feels guilty and dreads an inevitable punishment. To all such convicted, conscience-smitten sinners, Jesus kindly says: Come unto me, who have borne the sinner's sins and suffered in his stead—come unto me, and I will give you rest. In the old English version it reads: "I will ease you." Blessed relief. When a penitent-seeker lays the hand of his faith on the Lamb of God, what a ton weight of anxiety, guilt and dread seem to be lifted off in an hour. And perfect rest is found just in proportion as we trust ourselves wholly to Jesus. There is room on his bosom for us all.

2. But who comes here? A wretched, loathsome leper, covered with scales and scurf. He is crying out: "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst." There is strong faith in that prayer. Jesus looks at the miserable sufferer, and, with a single touch of his omnipotent hand, he says: "I will. Be thou clean." Immediately the leprosy is cleansed. This is the "I will" of healing. So the loving Savior is healing now, in our congregations, all manner of shocking moral diseases. A few evenings ago I heard a converted inebriate speak with grateful joy of what the grace of Christ had wrought for him. His drunkenness had shut him out of clean society, like a leprosy. Now he is sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in his right mind. The devil has been cast out of him. A total abstinence pledge was the instrument of good to this reformed man; but the converting grace of God was underneath it and gave it permanence. So the multitudes around us diseased and dying from sin my Savior stands ready now to answer their request, penitential cry with his prompt "I will. Be thou clean."

3. Let it be observed that nearly every promise of our Lord is conditional. He will do his part, but not when we refuse to do our part. Look now at the third light on the candlestick. It is the "I will" of confession. It depends on a condition. That condition is that we make frank, manly, outspoken acknowledgment of loyalty to Jesus, in the face of scoffs or silent sneers. "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my father which is in heaven." When Christ bestows conversion he demands confession. There is too much concealment and compromise even with the best, and what shall we say of those moral cowards who carry dark lanterns and try to slip along stealthily to heaven by a back road? Are they quite sure that Jesus will own them as his on the day of his magnificent triumph? But to all those who fearlessly acknowledge him, whether at the martyr's stake or under the daily martyrdom of bitter opposition in the household, the shop, the store or the social circle, Jesus gives the precious assurance: "I will never be ashamed of you." Even to insignificant little children and me will the King say, in the day of his coronation: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom I have prepared." Who then will be afraid to stand up for Jesus?

4. There is a fourth "I will" that shines very brightly on its candlestick. It is the promise of usefulness. "I will make you fishers of men." The true Christian is a true worker. Not only are the best fishers to be found among the followers of Christ, but every follower should be a fisher. The modest disciples angle quietly in sick rooms, like Charlotte Elliott in the dairyman's daughter. Some, like Spurgeon and Newman Hall and Finney, draw huge nets to land, filled with the multitude of fishes. Out of a New England common school goes young Dwight L. Moody to sell boots and shoes in Chicago, inspired with pity for the outcast, the uneducated man begins to fish for poor ragged children and newsboys. He studies God's word industriously and becomes a lay preacher. To-day our Bro. Moody is shaking all Scotland with the most wonderful work since the time when Whitefield preached on the banks of the Clyde. When the Master says, "Follow me and I will make you fishers," he engages to give the motive, which is love; the skill; which is prayer-directed tact; and the reward, which is a crown of glory. Try it and see.

Now comes the fifth of Christ's "I wills." It is a very precious one, the promise of help. We read that chapter of milk and honey, the fourteenth chapter of John. "I will not leave you orphans; I will come to you." A sad pity is it that our translators turned Christ's word orphans into their own word comfortless. For a soul bereft of a Savior would be orphaned indeed. But to all his own blood-bought, believing children Jesus sweetly says: "I will come to you!" He comes by his Spirit, as a helper, as a strengthener, as a comforter. Let me set this cheerful candlestick right in the center of some sick chamber, or of some dingy, uncarpeted room of utter poverty. It is a candle that never goes out.

6. The next "I will" reaches out into eternity. We find in Christ's intercessory prayer for his own this wonderful prediction and promise of the family gathering that shall yet take place in heaven. "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am." Paul got a blessed glimpse of this home-coming when he cried out: "I desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better." The glorious truth of full adoption shines out in this passage with heavenly luster. If Jesus says to me, "I will place you just where I am," then away with fears, away with doubts, away with miserable murmurings forever.

7. The last of Christ's "I wills" reaches out to the whole world. It is his universal welcome. "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." If you say, I am too guilty to come, Jesus responds: No! no! You shall not be cast out. If you say that you are too weak or too wicked to come, Jesus is beforehand with you and stops your mouth in advance. Christ's offer of eternal life is to every sinner on the globe. Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. For no man need perish for want of an atonement. Ho! every one that thirsteth, let him come and have life. Yes, he may have it more abundantly.

Now, reader, I have presented to you the seven glorious "I wills" of Jesus Christ. Are you ready to meet them with an honest, humble, resolute "I will" on your part? Suppose that, with the divine assistance, you reply: I will take Jesus at his word. I will accept his invitation and come to him for relief. I will seek healing from him and be whole. I will confess him as my Redeemer and my Friend. I will become an useful fisher of my poor, lost fellow-sinners. I will have Jesus for my daily helper. I will secure a place in that household of light and glory. I will follow Christ. Does your heart give back these answers? Then, my friend, these seven candlesticks of Christ's unchanging love and grace shall shine on your daily pathway with increasing brightness, until you see him as he is, on the throne of his glory. Your "I will" joined to his "I will" secures your salvation.—Independent.

Dr. Lyman Beecher as a Revivalist.

With a full and intimate acquaintance with his work, it is my settled conviction that his great power consisted in his strenuous and persistent efforts in revival of religion. This seemed to be his natural element. I have heard him say "that one revival of religion would do for a place what science and learning and legislation and eloquence never did. It would convert the vilest neighborhood into the loveliest brotherhood." This was his way of curing error.

He has said "that one powerful revival of religion in a great city would accomplish the overthrow of more error and the propagation of more truth in one month than ages devoted to literary acquisition and logical discussion." This was the spirit with which he entered upon his work in Boston. He seemed to talk and pray and weep and work with this one design—the conversion of souls to God. He used every instrumentality, and yet he seemed to depend upon God as if he had no doubt that he should receive the blessing. He used to say that he had spent one-third of his days in revival; that he had never seen a revival come unexpectedly; that he had never had one without seeking it, and that he had never sought one in vain.

Dr. Channing, as the leader of Unitarianism in Boston, was at that time delighting the citizens of that place with his liberal sentiments, his refined doctrine and his beautiful style. Dr. Beecher was looked upon as the champion of orthodoxy. Some of our boys who had once been members of Unitarian congregations went to hear what he would say about Dr. Channing: "He said nothing about him," they declared afterward, "but he said something about us. He poured down upon our hearts a mass of burning thought. He held up to our view pictures of loving truth. His powerful reasoning and striking illustrations were brought home to our hearts with such terrible earnestness that we forgot the controversies of the city, and only thought how we might settle the awful controversy between our own souls and an offended God."

But it was not merely his thrilling and forcible truth. He seemed to magnetize the church and enlist all their powers in the work. I remember well his deep emotion and his marked wisdom. I have seen him weep like a child over a single convert. His inquiry meetings were most delightful. He did not confine himself to personal conversation, but he would often rise, and in the most forcible and convincing manner remove an objection that had been presented to him. Thus it was that scores and hundreds were led to Christ and brought into his church. But his great soul was not confined to his church. He lived for the cause of Jesus. Frequently some of the best members of his church would be engaged in forming colonies. Two fine churches were soon erected in this way. When Dr. Beecher first came to Boston there were five orthodox churches. In eleven years there were twelve. These revivals and this unexampled increase of orthodox churches went on through the State. In this work Dr. Beecher was pre-eminently a powerful agent.

In reviewing this revival work we find that Dr. Beecher was converting error in magazines and in occasional sermons. But in his regular services he was aiming his blows with terrible effect directly at the sinner's conscience. He went right on "calling sinners to Christ," unaffected by the opposition of errorists or by the coldness of conservatives who feared that he was going too far and too fast. Hard hearts were broken and the power of the Spirit was felt. The champions of error were astounded and baffled. They were totally unprepared for this aggressive Napoleonic, or rather Pauline, style of Christian warfare.

Dr. Beecher is dead, but his mighty work is going on. Multitudes of his brightest converts are filling places of trust and power in the churches. Great numbers of his spiritual seed are preaching the everlasting gospel. Other influences he set in motion will go on multiplying down to the end of time. His funeral on Wednesday last was to me one of the great occasions of life—an era—a stopping-place in life's pilgrimage. Precious memories came thronging over me. His great life-work passed before me. Oh, how small and dim did all else seem but soul-saving.

And now from that hallowed scene I have come back to my pastoral labors with a higher estimate of the greatness of my work, with a deeper consecration of my soul to God, and with a fuller determination to strive and cry for the outpouring of God's Spirit and the salvation of perishing souls.

Ministers of Christ, we have before us the career of a man who was eminently successful. We state the secret of his power. His one absorbing purpose was to serve God. He preached to save men. Relying upon God's Spirit, he went about this simple work with the most terrible directness, intensity and persistence. This was the secret of his transcendent power. But few ministers of Christ have Dr. Beecher's talent. All can have his spirit; all may have his singleness of purpose.—N. Y., in the New York Evangelist.

Just a Few Stitches.

Dot is a four-year-old household pet, who, from her babyhood, has been taught to take all her little cares and perplexities, joys and sorrows to Jesus. She does this in such simple faith that her mother hears little more of her prattle than he who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me."

Dot had been strictly taught to keep the Sabbath day holy; but one Sunday morning she was missing, and was at last discovered sewing on her doll's clothes.

"Why, Dot! don't you know it is wicked to sew on doll's clothes on Sunday? Jesus will be sorry."

Dot paused in her work—there was a struggle between the flesh and the spirit—dollie needed that garment very much. The small brow was wrinkled and clouded as she poised her needle in thoughtful attitude—only a moment; then the brow cleared. Dot was very human.

"I dess he won't be angry. Anyhow, nezer you mind, I'll fitz 'at."

She threw down her sewing, and ran to the window, peered up into the sky, as was her custom when talking to Jesus—heaven and Jesus are real to Dot.

"Jesus, you nezer mind; it's dest a few stitches."

O little Dot! Crystal mirror for all humanity.

A Christian broker dips just a little into Wall street gambling pools. "Never mind, Jesus, ——."

A Christian minister takes a few privileges like "other" men. "Never mind, Jesus, ——."

A Christian editor allows in his columns questionable matter. "Never mind, Jesus, ——."

A Christian father gratifies his appetite with what is "not good for boys." "Never mind, Jesus, ——."

A Christian mother ambitiously pushes her daughter into irreligious but "good" society. "Never mind, Jesus, ——."

God's children, great and small, presume on his love, and spare the little foxes. "Never mind, Jesus, it's just a few stitches."—Mary L. Sherman.

CARE FOR THE EYES.—It is well known to those who make it a business to sell glasses that the sight begins to fail about the fortieth year. The first sign is a disposition to hold things at a distance to see them well, as in reading. The circumstance may alarm one, thinking disease surely is upon him. Eyes are put out by false notions upon this thing. Resort is often had to artificial helps, as globes, manipulations, eye-washes, and perhaps salves. In the first place, the reader should ascertain whether his age is not the natural cause. He should then procure a glass adapted to his sight, in such a way that he can see easily and readily what he could not before. Such glasses preserve the sight by preventing the necessity of straining; and glasses are always better than no aid at all.—American Journal of Health and Medicine.

A LADY residing in the southern part of the city hailed a passing car with her little son, the other morning, to see him safely on the horse car for a trip to the business portion of the city. He stepped on board and scrambled for the front of the car, and as he was going his mother said: "Why, arn't you going to kiss your mother before you go?" The little fellow was so delighted at the prospect of a ride, and in such a hurry, that he hastily rejoined, looking back excitedly: "Mr. Conductor, won't you kiss mother for me?" And of course the passengers couldn't help smiling.

THE Lord would not suffer any that were fearful and faint-hearted to fight his battles on earth against earthly enemies, lest they made others faint like themselves. Can we therefore think that he will entertain faint-hearted soldiers in his spiritual battles against spiritual enemies, in which combats his own honor and his children's salvation are so deeply engaged?—William Gouge.

Scientific.

IN ORDER to preserve meat for great length of time Dr. Enderman recommends that the meat, having been first cut into thin slices, be dried at a temperature of about one hundred and forty degrees Fahrenheit, and afterward ground to a powder and inclosed in sealed cans.

THE Challenger has been making deep sea soundings off Lisbon with considerable success. One day a common fishing trawl was lowered to the bottom, a depth of three-quarters of a mile, and on its being again hauled to the surface not only did it contain in great abundance beautiful specimens of coral and sponges, but several deep sea fish were found. These latter arrived at the surface nearly dead, the expansion of air in their bodies on being relieved from the pressure of the water at such depths proving sufficient to tear them open.

THE RAYS of the sun are now generally believed to exhibit three forces: light or luminous power, heat or calorific power, and actinism or chemical power. Whether these are regarded as distinct forces, or only as modified forms of one, the three are essentially dissimilar, representing respectively the heat-giving, the light-giving and the chemical rays of the sun. The chemical principle of the sun's rays is relatively most active during the spring; as summer advances this power diminishes, and the luminous force increases, while in autumn the calorific radiations are relatively increased. Thus the conditions of the sun's light are varied with the varying seasons to suit the necessities of vegetable life.

DR. B. A. GOULD has been making use of an invention of Lewis M. Rutherford to obtain photographs of the Southern heavens. Prof. Pierce writes on the subject: "This addition to astronomical research is unsurpassed by any step of the kind that has ever been taken. The photographs afford just as good an opportunity for new and original investigation of the relative position of the near stars as would be derived from the stars themselves, as seen through the most powerful telescopes. They are indisputable facts, unbiased by personal defects of observation, and which convey to all future times the actual places of the stars when the photographs were taken." Seventeen maps have been drawn, on which many more stars than were previously known have been noted.

TWO YEARS SINCE Prof. W. B. Carpenter asserted, in opposition to Captain Spratt, the existence of an underground saline current from the Ægean into the Black sea, it being agreed that there is a constant surface current flowing in the opposite directions. Otherwise the river water from the Danube and other large streams would wash out the salt, leaving the Euxine a fresh-water lake. But Captain Spratt explained the continuance of the saline character by a reversed surface current in the winter, when the winds forced the waters of the Ægean through the Dardanelles and Bosphorus. The hydrographer of the Shearwater has recently shown that at the depth of eighty feet there is an underground current opposed to that on the surface; for a heavy drag suspended from the steam-launch in the lower current was impelled northwesterly so strongly that the boat itself made its way against the surface current, and the rate of progress was greater than the usual speed of the steam vessel.

WAVES OF SOUND AND OF LIGHT. In the case of a sound wave—moving one thousand one hundred feet a second, whatever the wave length—if the length be diminished more vibrations enter the ear in the same time and the pitch rises; if it be increased less vibrations enter and the pitch lowers. Light waves are strictly analogous; whenever any one of the colored waves which form white light is lengthened, its color changes toward the red end of the spectrum; when it is shortened, toward the violet. Hence change of pitch in the case of sound, or of color in the case of light, is evidence of motion, either to or from the observer; which it is depends on whether the wave is lengthened or shortened. Now, while the motion of a star at right angles to the line of sight is easily detected and measured by the telescope, motion in the direction of this line is capable of measurement only by the spectroscope; if the motion be diagonal, then by both of these instruments together. Hence the motion of a fixed star in space, or of a whirlwind on the sun, may be measured by the change, in refrangibility, which certain lines in the spectrum undergo.—Scientific American.

THE LAUGHING PLANT.—In Palgrave's works on Central and Eastern Arabia we read of a plant whose seeds produce effects similar to those of laughing gas. It is a native of Aralda. The seed pods are soft and woolly in texture, and contain two or three black seeds of the size and shape of a French bean. These seeds, when pulverized and taken in small doses, operate upon a person in a most peculiar manner. He begins to laugh loudly, boisterously; then he sings, dances and cuts all manner of fantastic capers. The effect continues about an hour, and the patient is uproariously comical. When the excitement ceases, the exhausted exhibitor falls into a deep sleep, which continues for an hour or more; and when he awakes he is utterly unconscious that any such demonstrations have been enacted by him.

NEW REMEDY FOR INTERMITTENT FEVERS.—Dr. Declat thinks he has discovered a remedy superior to Peruvian bark for intermittent fevers. It consists of a subcutaneous injection of water, containing the one-hundredth part of phenic acid. With adults he usually administers two injections of three grammes each, giving, at the same time, phenicated sirup internally, and phenicated lotions externally. He says he has found it "successful in every case," and that it should be used even before trying other remedies.

Religious Intelligence.

THE Christian Intelligencer states that it finds the record of a single week to be a total of over 8,000 admissions to the churches in some four or five denominations.

THE non-Christian natives of Bengal have enthusiastically adopted the celebration of Christmas, and many of them outdo their European neighbors in preparations for the social festivities on that day.

THE Congress of the republic of Chili is discussing a bill providing for the disestablishment of the Roman Catholic Church—that is, it is proposing to separate Church and State, adopting the example of the United States.

FROM the west bank of Makensie river, near the Arctic ocean, a missionary of the Church Missionary Society reports in regard to the Loucheux Indians: "Each day I spent in the Loucheux camps was like a Sunday, as the Indians clustered around me from early morning till late at night,—learning prayers, hymns and Scripture lessons as I was able to teach them."

MISS SARAH NORRIS, the lady physician who joined the Malratta mission of the American Board, last year, writes from Bombay that her work is opening up wonderfully. Many of her patients are women of high caste, who would never see a male physician. One of them was brought to her from a distance of two hundred miles. Both Hindoos and Parsees have received her kindly.

ONE of the most thoroughly practical movements of the day has just been inaugurated by the New York Association of Sunday School Teachers. On Tuesday afternoons, at four o'clock, at the old Fulton Street church, they hold a meeting of superintendents to study the next Sunday's lesson. Thus at a business center, after business hours, and in a business-like way, they attempt to help superintendents to do their business more effectually.

THE London Methodist estimates that American Methodism has been largely recruited by emigrants from England. It says there is an incessant drain on this account; in one circuit, for instance Cambrone—during the last year, 100 members have been lost from this source. The Methodist estimates that 130,839 Methodists have emigrated to the United States, from England, within the last thirty years, which fact will aid to account for the small increase of English Methodism.

REPORTS are given in recent numbers of the Sunday School Companion of prosperous Jewish Sunday schools in Galveston, Texas; Donaldsonville, La.; Charleston, S. C.; Richmond, Va.; Allegheny City, Pa.; New York and Albany, N. Y.; and New Haven, Ct. The interest in Sunday school work is on the increase among the Jews generally. The names of scholars in the synagogue schools counted specially meritorious by their teachers are to be published from month to month in the Companion.

THE Bishop of Iceland has issued a pastoral, ordering a service in the 300 churches of the island on the second day of August, in commemoration of the thousandth anniversary of the first settlement, and of the grant of a new constitution by the King of Denmark, which goes into effect at the date mentioned. The ringing of the bells is to commence at six o'clock the evening previous. The lesson selected for the day is Psalms xc, 1–4 and 12–17. One of the verses is: "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night."

THE PAPAL CONSTITUTION.—In regard to the circular of Cardinal Antonelli, stating that the bull published by the Cologne Gazette was apocryphal, the North German Gazette says: "Apocryphal in the meaning of the Roman See does not infer either fabrication or supposition. The Congregation of Rites in 1632 resolved that no declaration merited credence unless duly signed and sealed. Consequently everything is styled apocryphal which is not published officially—the question of authenticity being beside the matter; wherefore Cardinal Antonelli has confined himself to showing that the document in dispute was not published in official manner."

AN English Wesleyan, writing of the Moody and Sankey revival work in Scotland, says: "There is one striking peculiarity of the case. Mr. Moody is the preacher—perhaps we should rather say the exhorter—of the movement. Mr. Sankey, one of his converts, is its singer. Accompanying his singing by an instrument called a reed organ, he utters forth, in a very articulate form, certain novel hymns or religious songs, which, on any congregation unfamiliar with the deeper, truer, universal poetry of Charles Wesley, exert a strange but easily explicable fascination, and beyond doubt contribute largely and usefully to the general impressiveness of the service. What God cleanses we dare not call common."

CALIFORNIA.—The Congregational church at Oakland has a Chinese Sunday school, with an attendance of from 65 to 70 Chinamen. At its fourth anniversary, recently held, about 150 Celestials were in attendance; among other exercises there was an original address by Gu Gam. He told of going, after he had learned to speak English, into a church in San Francisco one day, and there hearing a remark from the preacher that the conversion of the Chinese was a hopeless task. Discouraged at this official decree of reprobation, he went no more to church for four years; but on going to Oakland he found a place where different views were entertained regarding the future of the Chinaman, where he was himself converted and enlisted in the Sunday school work.

THE Presbyterian Monthly Record gives valuable statistics of the foreign missionary laborers sent out from this country and of the incomes of the boards which support them. The income of some of the minor societies is only estimated. From these statistics it would appear that our country sends out 574 Protestant missionaries and supports its Protestant missions with an income of $1,704,085. The five societies having the largest number of missionaries are the Presbyterian, 136; the American Board, 133; the Methodist, 107; the Baptist Missionary Union, 52; the Episcopal, 38. This includes the missionaries laboring among the Indians and Chinese in California, but not those employed in Europe. The largest incomes were: Presbyterian, $442,595; American Board, $431,844; Baptist Missionary Union, $216,100; Methodist, $153,465; Episcopal, $181,881. Among the Indians (and adjacent white settlers) 62 missionaries are laboring, of whom the Methodists have 20, the Presbyterian Board 12 and the Episcopalians 9.

DR. WENGER, of Calcutta, the learned translator of the Scriptures into the Sanscrit, has published, in the Christian Spectator, some suggestive notices of the difficulties attending the work of the biblical translator in India. He has been able to find no word in the language which expresses with sufficient force the biblical idea of the one only God. Again, he finds no good, current term for "conscience." Two or three which are in use break down as soon as such a phrase as a "pure" or "good conscience," or an "evil conscience," is to be translated. Nor is it easy to find terms for moral "good" or "evil." "Evil" is often rendered by a term which means not good; and "good" by one which means little more than benevolent, or else respectable. In these cases and many others the translator must do the best he can for the present, until Christian ideas shall have become so extensively familiar to the native mind that the right terms can be discovered.

THE INDIANS AT CHURCH.—A lady, writing from Lapwai, Nez Perces Indian Reservation, says: "It is a pretty sight on Sabbath morning to see party after party of Indians on horseback, dressed in their gay-colored blankets, descending the winding trails on the steep mountain sides, to attend church. Some of them travel ten or twelve miles to church, and a more attentive congregation could not be, and, as in more civilized communities, the women outnumber the men. They sing hymns translated for them into their language, and their earnestness and apparent devotion atone for lack of melody in their voices, for they sing in a way that is peculiarly their own, and which it is impossible to describe. In their prayers they are very fervent, and display none of the hesitation and backwardness which we sometimes see in devotional meetings among our own race. They never pause for a word, but pour out their hearts with the true eloquence that is born of earnestness."

AN occasional act of heathen cruelty occurring at the present time in India shows how great the deliverance is which the gospel is working out for that land. At Mulkapur, in the protected State of Kalapur, two persons, one of them a priest, recently decoyed a child twelve years of age into a heathen temple. Here they murdered him and then burned his body with betel-nuts and camphor before the image of the Goddess Karle, in order to induce the Deity to reveal to them hidden treasures in the neighboring hill. The crime was detected, the remains of the child were discovered by his parents, and the British authorities had the priest tried and executed. Near Mulkapur, where the cruel deed was done, stands the old fortress town of Panalla, in which the Presbyterians are about commencing a mission. One of its towers was built over the remains of a maiden buried alive, in order to make it impregnable; and within its walls still stands the stone image of the Goddess Karle, before which multitudes of human beings, especially women, were sacrificed.

THE dedicatory services of the new Brooklyn Tabernacle, Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, pastor, took place on Sunday evening, February 22. It stands on the site of the old edifice, destroyed by fire December 22, 1872, on Schermerhorn street, near Nevins; is constructed of brick and stone; is one hundred and fifty feet long by one hundred and twelve feet wide, and will seat four thousand six hundred people. Staircases outside the main walls lead to the galleries, and altogether the edifice has twenty-two entrances and exits. The organ is a very large one, its combinations having a compass of sixty-four registers and three thousand and ninety-four pipes. The manuals, registers and combinations are operated by pneumatic action, the wind being supplied by a hydraulic engine, with a lifting power of three thousand pounds. At the dedication it was announced that the debt of the Tabernacle was $35,000, $65,000 having already been provided for, and subscriptions having been started, the whole balance was raised on the spot.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE GALLICAN AND ROMAN LITURGIES IN FRANCE.—The Pall Mall Gazette Paris correspondent says: "The Archbishop of Paris has ordered a reform in the church service, which is not without its political significance. Ever since the year 1735 the Gallican liturgy has been in force in the capital and many parts of France, but Monsignor Guibert has directed that it shall be replaced by the Roman liturgy. According to M. Edmond About the former was much more suited to the spirit of the age and the country, a double merit which has led to its condemnation by many Ultramontane bishops. It is supposed that Monsignor Guibert has simply obeyed orders from Rome in this matter. As for M. Edmond About, he regrets the condition of elderly priests suddenly called upon to break the habits of a lifetime, and of religious booksellers who will be left with the old Gallican liturgies, missals, etc., on their hands. The archbishop, be it remarked, has selected M. Mame, of Tours, and M. Le Clere, of Paris, to print the new liturgies, etc. M. Edmond About hints that it is not likely that these publishers should have been accorded this monopoly without a quid pro quo."

The Risen Savior.

Christ's resurrection is not made as prominent in the preaching and religious thought of the day as it should be. The well-worn line of argument by which the fact is established, and by which the objections of infidelity and skepticism are met, need not be always stated, although the frequent use of it in the way of evidence would no doubt be productive of good. If Christ rose from the dead, further demonstration of his claims as the Son of God and the Savior of the world, is needless. This crowning miracle is adequate to seal and confirm the gospel as of God. But it is rather with reference to its application to the devout and believing, and with reference to its lessons to those who accept Christianity, that we think there is a lack of fullness and emphasis. As a source of edification and comfort to Christians, and as rich in spiritual instruction to those who do not question the truth of revelation, it might be made more distinctive.

"Jesus and the resurrection" were the burden of the first preaching, and in the Epistles a risen Christ is constantly kept in view. His resurrection was to the apostles the pledge of a general resurrection. Paul seems to argue from Christ's resurrection, as something conceded, to that of the race, of which some doubted. "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen?" And again he reiterates: "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised?" Not alone as to the fact of his own resurrection, but also as to the nature of it, does the believer find light in the resurrection of his Savior. In no merely spiritual or metaphorical sense is it written that "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth." Respecting the body, as well as the soul, Christ declares himself to be "the resurrection and the life." The history is ample in its details and unmistakable in its meaning. The Lord's resurrection was literal; it was of the body, and he came forth in a nature and form to be apprehended by the senses and to be recognized by his disciples. As the first fruits of them that slept, his resurrection must be a truthful exhibition of all, so far as it is a literal raising up of the material body. Then, further, the believer is to be conformed to his Lord in the glorious transformation. His body is to be raised in such glory and power as was that of Jesus. He looks for the Savior "who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

The believer's hope of a future life of blessedness is most strongly rooted in the fact that the Lord is risen; as witness Peter's jubilant exclamation: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." All other grounds of hope, all other assurances, were as nothing compared with the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The belief in a future life was held with some degree of confidence by the wisest heathen. Certainly and grandly does it appear in the doctrines and experiences of the Old Testament; but this ground of assurance was a new birth—something exceeding and transcending all that had hitherto been revealed. The incorruptible inheritance is thus connected with the Savior's resurrection, and the Christian's hope of life derives its fullest and crowning inspiration from it. It is remarkable how intimately and vitally the Savior's resurrection is connected with the deepest spiritual life of the believer. The indwelling Spirit is a reminder and pledge: "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." The faith of the heart which is unto salvation apprehends the resurrection—that Christ "was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification." The condition is thus expressed: "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." When the troubled and tempted child of God is directed to the sure refuge from condemnation, he is pointed to a risen Savior. "Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." Paul, in the midst of a passage wherein he declares his purpose and aim to attain to the righteousness of faith, and to be found in Christ, not having his own righteousness, which is of the law, utters these rather remarkable words: "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

Much more to the same purpose might be cited to show the prominence which is given in the New Testament to the resurrection of Christ, and how completely the fact penetrates the faith and spiritual life of the early Christians. Beyond its uses for purposes of evidence to convince the skeptic of the truth of the gospel, and to establish the claims of Christ as the divine Redeemer, is this of spiritual enrichment to the believing heart. To the devout it not only demonstrated the truth of Christianity, but it entered into the very essence of experience, and was an element of power in the daily religious life. Besides correcting erroneous views, and restraining wild and foolish speculation, it belonged to the profoundest realizations of revealed truth. It was not only a stupendous miracle, but it gave to the soul a risen Christ, a living Redeemer, and a Savior who was felt to be the resurrection and the life. To know him savingly received its complete fulfillment in knowing the power of his resurrection. "Risen with him" not only indicates the believer's hope of a bodily resurrection, but it is the incentive to heavenly-mindedness and holy living. He should be constrained by it to set his affections on things above, and to walk worthy of his immortal birthright by having his conversation in heaven.

Bismarck's Defense.

Bismarck is charged with acting against the principles of toleration in his conflict with the papacy. It should be remembered that Catholics are committed to intolerance by the principles which they avow. The church with them is above the State, the Pope is infallible and dictator of the world, and all must yield in things civil, as well as ecclesiastical, to the Pope or be damned as heretics. Where they have the power Roman Catholics tolerate nothing but Catholicism, and to resist their claims as the rightful and only religion is sufficient to raise on their part the cry of intolerance and persecution. Bismarck, in the following brief paragraph, explains and vindicates his course. His words are few, but forcible and comprehensive. He says:

I acknowledge it as my duty to respect the dogmas of the Catholic Church as dogmas, and I never have interfered with anybody for believing in them. But if the infallibility dogma is so interpreted as to lead to the establishment of an ecclesiastical imperium in imperio, if it occasions the setting aside of the laws of this country because unapproved by the Vatican, I am naturally driven to assert the legitimate supremacy of the State. We Protestants are under the conviction that this kingdom of Prussia ought not to be ruled by the Pope, and we demand that you, the Ultramontane section of the Roman Catholics, respect our convictions, as we do yours. Unfortunately, however, you are accustomed to complain of oppression whenever not permitted to lord it over others.

A Generous Deed.

Under this head the Galveston Christian Advocate speaks of a recent donation to the St. James church of $5,000. We wish Bro. Ayres would move to New Orleans, or that we had here a few like him. We have two new churches which need to be built immediately, and should like to find men like Bro. Ayres to take hold of the enterprise with hands, purses and love and faith. The man who builds a church in a large city is doing something worth while for the world, and also for Christ. The Galveston Christian Advocate says:

At the first Quarterly Conference for St. James church, Galveston, our venerable brother, David Ayres, sent in a communication, in which he stated that, in addition to his gift of the lots, which cost $2,000 in gold, and his subscription of $5,000, he gave to the church the additional sums he had advanced toward the building, amounting to near $5,000. This makes nearly $12,000 one brother has given to this church. Bro. Ayres has just been in, and says this additional offering is as cheerfully given as the others, and intimates that, if life is spared, he will do still more for the church he loves so well. We trust he will be spared many years to see the upper room completed and hundreds of souls converted in it ere he dies.

Letter from China.

Brethren and Friends, Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

Twenty years ago a call from the mission-field of China came into our church. In response three young men and their wives were accepted as missionaries for that field, and at the hands of our good Bishops, some of whom are now in the spirit land, the brethren received their ordination, and in a short time set sail from New York, under the supervision of the late Dr. Jenkins, for Shanghai, which place they reached in safety after a voyage of one hundred and thirty-five days. Of that missionary company three have passed beyond the river of death, one obliged to return to his native land and there still remain three as helpers in God's work among the heathen of China—one a widow, Mrs. J. (Independent,) doing what she can for Jesus; the other two are myself and wife, still servants of the Church South, and trying to do what we can to promote the cause of God among these people. Bro. Allen, who came after us, is yet in China, but in the employ of the Chinese government, and preaching on the Sabbath. Want of help demands that we present ourselves to you for immediate attention.

Our cry for help is, first, to send us at once three God-loving and capable men to join in the work. Want of men and means to carry on and extend this work has been the one great barrier to success. Owing to the great troubles which arose and hung like an angry cloud over our native land for so many years, the church was unable to send help, and their missionaries in China were necessarily compelled to obtain a support as best they could. But now, things having changed for the better, we desire to present to you, in a brief manner, the claims of this great and important mission work among the heathen of China. Unnumbered thousands all around us know not the blessed plan of salvation, and but few men to make it known to them. Unless the seed is sown we cannot expect the fruit of it. The word must be preached, and the glad news of gospel salvation must be made known before those in darkness and in the shadow of death can be brought to know their sinfulness and their need of saving grace.

Shall we not some day hear great voices in heaven saying: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever," and "these from the land of Sinim" shall come to give glory and honor to him who is Lord over all? Yes, they shall come from China. To-day we rejoice to know there are many Christian men and women in China who were once in darkness, and in their blindness bowed down to wood and stone. Now the angel of the everlasting gospel is driving back the cloud of darkness which has so long overspread this benighted people. The blessed name of the world's Redeemer is being proclaimed far and wide to China's millions.

My circuit is three hundred miles in extent. To make this tour, giving a day or two to each station, takes me from home and the work here more than three weeks.

Our first want, then, is three men and their wives—one for Kanding and Nazlang, twenty-five miles from Shanghai; one for Soochow and Qunsau, about eighty miles distant; and one for Woosih and Chang Chow, one hundred and fifty miles distant.

Our second want is funds for their and our support, and for the extension of the work.

Our third want is funds to build churches—two in Shanghai, one in Nazlang, one in Kanding, one in Soochow and one in Woosih or Chang Chow. We are in great need of men. Can we have them? I would like to enter into detail and give full particulars of the work, but I fear it would not be read. I hope all our papers will copy and bring before our people this one subject—the work of evangelizing China. What can be done to prosper this glorious work? Your hearty aid and support, brethren, will do it. The missionary cannot do his work well unless he has the hearty co-operation of the Christian Church at home. Come to our rescue and help us. Come, help save these perishing millions for whom Christ died. Give of your means to aid in the spread of the gospel, and the Lord will abundantly bless you. Time flies, and we shall soon be removed to give place to others. May the Lord help us to work, and do all we can to forward the glorious cause of our Redeemer, is my earnest prayer to our God, who will direct all to his glory and honor. I am yours in the love of Christ, J. W. LAMBUTH.

Forgetfulness of Sin.

The commission of sin is great folly. This proposition needs no proof. It is self-evident. "Sin is the transgression of the law." To transgress law is to do violence to our own interest. It is to subvert the order of peace. It is the one only thing that destroys happiness. It is the one only thing putting man out of harmony with God; and to be out of harmony with God is to be out of harmony with self and all vital surroundings. "Fools" only "make a mock of sin." The man who commits sin makes a mock of sin. The man who commits sin is therefore a fool. He must be spiritually demented.

But if to commit sin is folly, to forget it is still greater folly. To take poison into the system is madness. The madness is doubled in refusing the antidote. "If any man sin, he hath an Advocate with the Father." He has an Advocate only as he remembers his transgressions. "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." To "regard iniquity in the heart" is, in one sense, to forget the commission of it. It may be added, without violence to the spirit of the words above, "the Lord" can "not hear me;" for "if we confess," remember "our sins," the Lord is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. This is the condition of pardon. A scriptural remembrance of sin implies a scriptural sorrow for sin. There is, therefore, hope for the man who remembers his transgressions. And, on the other hand, no hope for the man who forgets his offenses; for in this the only opening for the approach of deliverance is closed. The poison shut up in the system must work its end, unchecked by the antidote. Hence the prophet says: "Now their own doings have beset them about." The reason is found in this: "And they consider not in their hearts that I remember all their iniquities; they are before my face." If there is more hope for a fool than for a man wise in his own conceit, there is more hope for the beasts that perish than for a man who remembers not his transgressions. It is the strongest expression of contempt for the Almighty. It is to forget his attributes. It is to consider him altogether such an one as man himself. More, it is to outrage his long suffering and compassion. "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." Not to remember sin is to gather presumption from a redundancy of mercy. Moral obtuseness comes on; the sensibilities are blunted; the way for a continuance in sin widens and solicits. It smooths the road to death. Job prays: "Make me to know my transgressions and my sins." So ought all men to pray. The antidote to such a strange and dangerous stupidity of soul is prayer, preceded by earnest thought. The sinner must think of God's goodness, which leadeth to repentance. He must think of the "exceeding sinfulness of sin"—of its fearful import, of what it cost to forgive sin. He must turn his eye within and hold counsel with his own heart. He must measure the distance sin has placed him from God. He must look to Christ as the only name under heaven given among men whereby he can be saved. He must look to him now—consider his as urgent a case as the dying thief. He must not pause for compromise or longer time, but now is the accepted time. Then will his peace flow as a river. Joy and gladness will spring up in his heart, and songs of deliverance linger upon his lips. Blessed is the man whose sins are forgiven, whose iniquity is hid. Oh, may our hearts be moved to a penitential remembrance of sin. Amen.

MEXICO, 1874.

OUR friend and brother, W. W. Harper, Esq., for the past thirty-five years a citizen of Greenwood, Caddo parish, Louisiana, writes us of his removal to Columbia, Missouri. Bro. Harper is an old and useful member of our church, and a valuable citizen. His removal will be regretted by all. May God go with him, and bring him at last to the home of the blessed.

WE ARE often more ashamed than grieved and humbled for our sins. Our own consciousness of them, and of God's being privy to them, does not pain us near so much as it would to have them known to others; see, therefore, whether what you call your penitence is not more pride than anything else.—Thomas Adam.

History Travestied and Tortured.

Mr. Froude wrote a history some time since, largely devoted to an effort to prove that Henry the Eighth was not quite the lecherous and bloodthirsty ruffian he was generally believed to be; and other writers have exerted their ingenuity to show that Richard the Third, instead of being a wry-necked and cruel murderer, was comely and amiable. Copying this example, we learn from Fraser's Magazine and the English Independent that the "Christian Brothers," as certain English and Irish Jesuits style themselves, have prepared and are engaged in the work of still further editing and publishing a series of "Lesson-Books" intended for Roman Catholic children and youths at school, which are to be a species of "erasers," intended to rub out from the pages of history all those blots with which it has been defaced by the superstition or the sanguinary cruelty and intolerance of Roman Catholics.

The aim of these astute Jesuits is to create a denominational literature and place it in the hands of all their school children, in which the Romish Church is represented as having been distinguished ever by meekness and long suffering, by tolerance and brotherly love, and by an ardent admiration for and patronage of literature and science; while it is further shown to have been uniformly met by unprovoked cruelty, oppression, and the densest and most obstructive ignorance at the hands of Protestants. They dwell on the harshness of the English penal laws to Irishmen, and suppress the story of the massacres of Protestants. They take credit to Cardinal Langton for acting with the English nobles in opposition to King John, but say nothing of the fact that he was suspended by Pope Innocent the Third for the stand which he made, or of the further fact that this same Pope declared Magna Charta null and void, and mathematized all those who had taken part in wresting it from the tyrant. The "persecutions" under Elizabeth are grossly magnified, but the facts, to quote the language of Dr. Dollinger, that "a succession of Popes sanctioned the assassination of heretical sovereigns, and that one actually instigated attempts upon the life of Queen Elizabeth," are sedulously concealed. The "burnings" of the Protestant martyrs by Mary are softened down into mere "severities," the details of which are mendaciously suppressed, and even these are attributed to the civil authorities, who, it is alleged, were "influenced by political, not religious motives," in the face of the well-known historical fact that Romish archbishops and bishops, composing an ecclesiastical court, consigned the martyrs of that day to the flames. It is claimed that the fifty thousand persons who were hung, beheaded or burnt to death in the low countries on account of their religion only suffered the natural consequences of a civil rebellion against their sovereign; and also that "religion had nothing to do with the massacre on St. Bartholomew's day;" but they say nothing of the motives which led Philip to destroy the Protestants in the low countries, or of the fact that Pope Gregory issued a bull approving of the massacre on St. Bartholomew's day, and exhorting Charles the Ninth to complete the work which he had so well begun; nor that the cruel slaughter was depicted on the walls of the Sistine chapel, nor that a medal was struck by the papacy in honor of the event. But even this miserable travesty of history seems tame alongside of the efforts of the "Christian Brothers" to paint the terrors of the Inquisition in enchanting colors. With unparalleled mendacity and audacity combined they undertake to show that the terrible imprisonments, mutilations, tortures, autos da fé and other atrocities of the priests and Jesuits who inspired and controlled the Inquisition were simply "abuses," which must be ascribed "to the civil, but not to the ecclesiastical power," notwithstanding the infamous rescript of Innocent the Eighth: "We enjoin and command the said secular officers, under penalty of excommunication, that within six days after they shall be legally required, they regularly execute the sentences pronounced against heretics, without seeing the said processes carried on by you, and without allowing any appeal."

We are curious to know if this scandalous and unblushing perversion of historical evidence is to be repented in this country; and whether the children of the Romish Church in the United States are also to be nurtured on an aliment composed of impudence and fraud. As the old Inquisition tortured and killed its victims, so this new Inquisition puts history to the rack and the thumbscrew, and crushes out of it all the truth that gives it any vitality.—Christian Intelligencer.

A CORRESPONDENT in Louisville informs us, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, that our church in that city is in a good condition. Dr. Sehon, who has known Louisville a long time, thinks it was never in a better state. The preachers work incessantly. Dr. Rivers, e. g., preaches frequently three times on Sunday, and invariably attends his Sunday school. He preaches and lectures incessantly, attends funerals, visits the people, and studies for the pulpit with great application. And so of the others. We are sorry that the health of Bros. Morrison and Strange is not good—they need rest. Our city pastors, who attend to all the claims made upon them, must be abundant in labors. But for that matter, where is the pastor, in town or country, who has not his hands full if he makes full proof of his ministry? We learn that a Quakeress, Mrs. Hunt, draws considerable crowds to her preaching in Louisville. Our readers are aware that the Quakers "liberate" women, as they express it, to preach, not construing Paul's prohibition as it is commonly understood.

THE actions of men are like the index of a book: they point out what is most remarkable in them.

Constantinople Bible House.

The Bible Society Record of February 19 says:

The following are the terms in which the last annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society speaks of the new Bible House in Constantinople. The Rev. S. B. Bergne, secretary of that society, had visited the East and spake from his own personal observation:

"Another proof of the power which Protestant Christianity has acquired in the Turkish empire has been recently afforded in the completion and opening of the new Bible House at Constantinople. The project is wholly due to the original suggestion and subsequent exertions of the Rev. Dr. I. G. Bliss, the agent of the American Bible Society for the Levant. The society which he so ably represents was united with your own in the joint occupation of premises in Stamboul, and this joint occupation will be perpetuated in the new building. The funds necessary for the purchase of land and the erection of a suitable structure have been almost entirely raised in America. Your committee advanced £1,000 to facilitate the progress of the works, but this is to be regarded merely as the payment of rent in advance, and will in time be gradually extinguished. The property is essentially American, and is a remarkable testimony to the energy and success with which the missionaries of that country have labored for the spiritual regeneration of Turkey. The erection of the Bible House constitutes a sort of epoch in Christian work in Constantinople. The dream of such a structure in the very heart of the Moslem population of the capital, at the period indicated in the foregoing observations, would have been as visionary as castles built in air, for no Christian was allowed even to reside in Stamboul, and the Golden Horn separated by its wide water-passage the two classes of the population. The position of the building is most eligible. Not far distant from the former Bible depot, it occupies a much higher elevation, and is consequently much more conspicuous. It is clearly visible from the Great Bridge, and is a striking object in every point of view. It is built of stone, and in this respect there is scarcely an erection in Stamboul at all to be compared with it. It is four stories high, and by its elevation contrasts with the dwarfish houses by which it is surrounded. In the mode and materials of construction due care has been exercised to guard as far as practicable against fire—a calamity of somewhat frequent occurrence in Constantinople; the entrance hall is paved with marble; and, in Eastern fashion, a water fountain is in the center. Above there are the national arms of America carved in stone. The ground floor is partly occupied with the open depot of the two Bible societies; there in the successive stories there are the offices and warehouses of the American and British and Foreign Bible Societies; accommodation for translators and the publishing department of the American Board of Missions, apartments for carrying on the process of electrotyping; a spacious hall for missionary conferences and religious services, etc. The rooms which serve as stores for the Bible societies communicate with the basement by a patent lift, thereby saving an immense amount of manual labor. At the rear are a series of printing offices, which will be found a great practical convenience. Among the arrangements is a well-appointed postoffice, available for all the societies combined in the occupation of these premises, and every facility thus afforded for the dispatch and receipt of letters, a matter of some importance, as the Turkish postoffice never undertakes the delivery of letters. The entire cost of the erection, including the value of land, has been $67,000 in gold, and it is no small honor to the liberality of American Christians that they have so willingly furnished the funds for bringing this noble enterprise to a successful completion. It is not to be supposed that the work was accomplished without difficulty. Various attempts were made to embarrass or frustrate the execution of the design when its real nature became known, but these were in time overcome by patience and resolute perseverance, and the finished Bible House in Stamboul may be regarded in the light of a grateful 'Ebenezer,' raised by those whose works of faith and labors of love God has so graciously honored."

FURTHER particulars from Ahualuleo, Mexico, says the Christian Union, respecting the assassination of the Rev. John L. Stevens, one of the missionaries of the American Board, make the outrage one of the most dastardly that has occurred anywhere in recent years. It appears that on Sunday morning, March 2, a Catholic priest in the place delivered an incendiary sermon, in the course of which he advocated the extermination of the Protestants. This so excited his hearers that an armed mob of about two hundred people proceeded to Mr. Stevens' residence in the evening and, with cries of "Long live the priests!" broke into his house, and in its fury literally hacked his body to pieces. We are told in the same dispatch that a rigid investigation has been set on foot by the authorities, and that orders have been issued for the arrest of all the priests of Ahualuleo and the neighboring town of Peshitlan; but what all this will amount to remains to be seen. Singularly enough, by the same mail comes the item that the governor of the district of Mexico has determined to prohibit cock-fighting as a practice unworthy of civilized people. What would he say of the Ahualuleo mode of brutality?

THE nature of the good angels is humble, loving and kindly nature. An angel's is a fine, tender, kind heart. As if we could find a man who had a heart sweet all through and a gentle will; without subtlety yet of sound reason; at once wise and simple. He who has seen such a heart has colors wherewith he can picture to himself what an angel is.—Martin Luther.

Is Doubt More Intellectual Than Faith?

There are doubts and doubts. Not [illegible], perhaps, as is generally supposed, of those "honest" ones in which there lives, according to Tennyson, "more faith than half the creeds." It has, in fact, become the fashion in certain quarters to overcompassionate the doubter, to accredit him with a greater depth, and even with more thorough-conscientiousness than the man convinced. But with every desire to find the reasonableness of such a view, we have entirely failed to discover why the holding of a creed should imply a smaller share either of intelligence or honesty than the holding of a doubt. Credulity has its negative side as well as its positive one, and there is as much room to slip on the one side as on the other. Chaughimself the most conscientious of poetical skeptics—admits that "if on the one hand "hopes are dupes," on the other "fears may be liars," and, in short, there is no good reason, other things being equal, for supposing that the man who rejects evidence may not be quite as great a fool as the man who accepts it. Creeds, no doubt, are easily adopted. We in a sense full heir to them. They lie about us, from our very infancy, and as soon as we are able to think they are recommended to us by those whom we naturally respect. In this way it is not to be denied that we are apt to creep into them with only too little inquiry. But, on the other hand, are the great majority of doubts not only equally weak at the root, and held with infinitely more self complacency, not to say conceit? Search faith for its foundations, and in too many cases we dare say they will be found loose and flimsy enough; but subject doubt to a like scrutiny—strip it of all the mystical generalities it seeks to clothe itself in, and the pensive, practical sadness it so frequently affects—and in all, but the rare exceptions, you will find that it is neither more nor less than our old friend Sir Oracle in a new disguise.—Blackwood.

Roman Catholic Republic.

Says the New York Observer: What the Roman Catholics will do in this republic when they get the majority of voters they are now doing in one of the South American republics. A correspondent of the Cologne Gazette furnishes the substance of the following account of the republic of Ecuador:

The president, Don Gabriel Moreno, who has held his present post since 1861, is completely under the influence of the Jesuits, by whose assistance he has been enabled repeatedly to triumph over his enemies. All the schools in the country are placed under the direction of the Jesuits. The most important professorships are held by members of the order. In the present Congress all opposition has long ceased; the members do not even dare to make suggestions, and they simply execute blindly and humbly the wisdom of their lord and master. At their last sitting they were compelled to dedicate the whole of the country to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, to add a new holiday to the numerous ones already existing, and to vote a yearly subsidy of at least ten thousand pesos to the prisoner in the Vatican. The importation of foreign books is strictly prohibited, and all books and pamphlets published in the country are subject to a severe censorship. As this regime is only maintained by a force of three thousand bayonets, the correspondent thinks that, sooner or later, a sanguinary reaction will be sure to set in and sweep away both Garbriel Moreno and his Jesuit friends.

ABOUT A NEWSPAPER.—The Louisville Courier-Journal has the following sensible remarks regarding the management of a newspaper: "Some people estimate the ability of a newspaper and the talent of its editor by the quantity of original matter. It is comparatively an easy task for a frothy writer to pour out daily a column of words—words upon any and all subjects. His ideas may flow in one weak, washy, everlasting flood, and the command of his language may enable him to string them together like bunches of onions, and yet his paper may be a meager and poor concern. Indeed the mere writing part of editing a paper is but a small portion of the work. The care, the time employed in selecting, is far more important, and the fact of a good editor is better shown by his selections than anything else; and that, we know, is half the battle. But, as we have said, an editor ought to be estimated and his labor understood and appreciated by the general conduct of his paper—its tone, its uniform consistent course, its ulus, manliness, its dignity and, its propriety. To preserve these as they should be preserved is enough to occupy fully the time and attention of any man. If to this be added the general supervision of the newspaper establishment, which most editors have to encounter, the wonder is how they find time to write at all."

DIRECT TRADE WITH EUROPE.—It requires no very great amount of financial sagacity to perceive the gross and stupid disregard of commercial economy for a city the exports of which are not second in importance, even though they may be in quantity, to any on the continent, to obtain the bulk of its imported merchandise through other and distant cities. The freight on goods from Liverpool is but little more than from New York. The insurance is the same. There is no more difficulty in obtaining credit in Europe than in Northern cities. The increase of our import trade will proportionately increase our exports. It will increase our shipping, bring capital to our aid, and it will save many millions of dollars to our merchants and their customers annually if they will import direct the European manufactures which their customers consume. In connection with the above we are glad to note the movement of leading business men of the city to establish a Direct Trade Company, auxiliary to a company established in Great Britain, to promote direct trade with the Mississippi valley. By calling at the office of the agent of the above company, Dr. Thomas D. Worrall, Nos. 21 and 26 Camp street, full particulars may be obtained in reference to the association. We sincerely hope that every well-organized movement of the kind will meet a hearty support.

J. B. WILKINSON, JR., GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANT, 28 PETERS AND 4 CLINTON STREET.—We are informed that Mr. Wilkinson belongs to one of the old families of the State, his great grandfather, General James Wilkinson, having fought in the Revolution, and was prominent in the negotiations for the transfer of Louisiana to the United States. In the decay of the sugar planting interests Mr. Wilkinson has left the occupation pursued by his family for generations and embarked in mercantile life. We are assured of his integrity, and that parties intrusting their goods to him will have every point and cent duly accounted for. Attending solely to the commission business, he has but the interests of his patrons to look after, and guarantees that trusts confided to him will not be neglected.

FANCY AND STAPLE DRY GOODS. W. H. Peters, Esq., has bought out the entire stock of the large establishment of Mr. S. H. Kreeger, and will carry on the business at Mr. Kreeger's old stand, 591 Magazine street, where he invites all his friends and the old customers of his predecessor to call and acquaint themselves with his stock and prices, with which he has no doubt they will be satisfied. His advertisement will be found elsewhere.

GROCERIES.—John McMains, Esq., at 572 and 574 Magazine street, has a large and varied assortment of choice groceries, and we think we can fully guarantee the most polite attention to customers. Mr. McMains has another house, located at No. 40 Washington, corner of Fulton street. We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Mr. McMains, which will be found in our columns.

COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS.—The card of Messrs. Bush & Levert, cotton and sugar factors and commission merchants, No. 31 Perdido street, appears in our advertising columns today. The senior partner of this firm has been known to us for many years as a reliable and clever gentleman, and an excellent citizen, and we have no doubt that business intrusted to the firm will be faithfully attended to.

INSURANCE.—The Home Mutual Insurance Company, established twenty-two years ago, is deservedly regarded as one of the safest and best in New Orleans. The board of directors is composed of men of experience, good judgment and successful financiers. The officers are well selected. Our estimable fellow-citizen, J. B. Woods, Esq., is president. See their advertisement elsewhere.

THE $20 Beckwith Sewing Machine has, so far as we have heard, given full satisfaction, and fully met the expectations of its inventor and agents. Mr. Edward Thompson, the general agent at New Orleans, is one of our most worthy citizens. His office is 91 Baronne street. See advertisement.

MME. SOPHIE, 13 Baronne street, has the honor to inform the ladies that she has just received a very elegant assortment of new styles of summer goods, which will be sold at low prices. Orders for dressmaking and millinery generally will be promptly filled at moderate rates.

POYDRAS MARKET BAKERY, Otto Engelhardt, proprietor, 226 Poydras street. Families supplied with fresh bread every morning.

THE Lady Cheap John, Mrs. D. J. Loewenfield, No. 549 Magazine street, is offering bargains in boots and shoes.

AT No. 580 Magazine street Messrs. Levy Bros. are in receipt of all the new styles of dress goods, etc.

MOTT'S LIVER PILLS.

MOTT'S LIVER PILLS.

An old physician once said that nearly all diseases originate from A DISEASED CONDITION OF THE LIVER; and this statement is true, although it may at first seem like an exaggeration. When the Liver is out of order the whole system and every organ and function suffer more or less in consequence. In the incipient stages of the disease a man

DOES NOT KNOW WHAT AILS HIM.

He is moody, restless and despondent; and that is the time to take a SIMPLE REMEDY that will restore him to health

IN A SINGLE DAY, and prevent a whole train of diseases that may follow,

MOTT'S LIVER PILLS Cure torpidity of the Liver,
MOTT'S LIVER PILLS Give tone to the Stomach,
MOTT'S LIVER PILLS Cleanse the system of bile,
MOTT'S LIVER PILLS Drive out febrile affections,
MOTT'S LIVER PILLS Strengthen the whole system.

MOTT'S LIVER PILLS regulate the Liver, and are more reliable as a Liver medicine than any of the mineral preparations that DO MORE HARM THAN GOOD.

For sale by all druggists. Price, 25 cents per box.

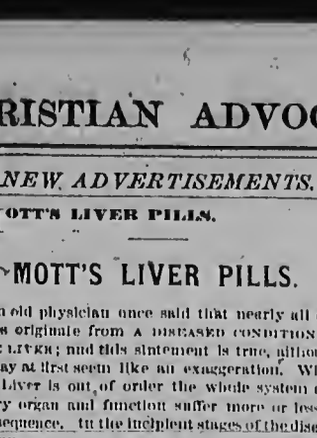
JUSTLY CELEBRATED.



WITE PLANTER ATTACHMENT,

THE RECENT INVENTION OF J. B. UNDERWOOD, of Fayetteville, N. C., is unquestionably the Greatest Labor-Saver of the Age. With ONE MAN and ONE HORSE it does the work of from SIX to TWELVE men and from TWO to FOUR horses. It CHOPS and BARS both sides, WEEDS and HILLS the cotton at one operation. After which it is converted into a most excellent CULTIVATOR, for use between the rows throughout the season. This machine has been tested upon a growing crop, and proved a thorough, practical SUCCESS. It bears the highest TESTIMONIALS from our best cotton planters. It will soon become as indispensable to the cotton planter as the cotton gin or press. It has taken the grand sweepstakes prize, the GOLD MEDAL, at the Georgia State Fair as the latest and most valuable improvement in agricultural implements, and the first premium wherever it has been exhibited. Active and reliable AGENTS are wanted in every town and county, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Applications for agencies should be made without delay. Retail price of machine, without attachments, $35 and freight. A most excellent COTTON PLANTER and GUANO DISTRIBUTOR has been added to the machine. The best and most reliable in use. Price, $15 extra. For circulars and further information address JOHN W. SOLE PROPRIETOR OF a most effectual, reliable and entirely safe remedy for Chills and Fever, etc. Sold under full guarantee.

ABRAMS' CHILL TONIC,

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.

THIS MEDICINE, FOR THE CURE OF

DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA

and all diseases of the Bowels, is without exception the most valuable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most acute attacks. For infants its use is recommended in preference to the death dealing "Soothing Syrups," etc. No household should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.

A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from

Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis,

and all Pulmonary affections. It is specially adapted to the relief of Hoarseness, and all diseases of the Throat caused by a recessive flow of the color. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Bull & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION,

Scrofulous and Tuberculous affections, Rickets and all complaints characterized by deficient nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach, in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.

This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is

Unrivaled as a Rubefacient,

and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the extremities should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

THE GREATEST

MEDICAL

DISCOVERY

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder-humor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the bowels and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is

Raw and Inflamed,

your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful. As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,

DONALD KENNEDY.

Price, $1.50 per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE BEST ADVICE THAT CAN BE given to persons suffering from

DYSPEPSIA, BILIOUS COMPLAINTS,

CONSTIPATION, COLIC, SICK HEADACHE,

Fever and Ague, Nervous Debility,

or of any disorder of the Stomach, Liver or Kidneys, is to tone, cleanse and regulate them by the use of

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills.

They act very mildly, yet thoroughly restore the functional action of the Digestive Organs and the intestines, and renovate the whole system, imparting a good appetite and healthy assimilation of food. They produce neither Nausea, Griping nor Debility, and may be taken at any time, without change of diet or occupation.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye

possesses qualities that no other dye does. Its effect is instantaneous, and is so natural that it cannot be detected by the closest observer. Being harmless and easily applied, it is in general use among the fashionable Hair-Dressers in every large city in the United States. Price, $1 a box. Sold everywhere.

The Child's Corner.

THE LADY-BUG AND THE ANT.

BY MRS. SIDDURNEY.

The lady-bug sat in the rose's heart
And smiled with pride and scorn,
And she saw a plain-dressed ant go by
With a heavy grain of corn.
So she drew the curtains of damask round,
And adjusted her silken vest,
Making her glass of a drop of dew
That lay in the rose's breast.

Then she laughed so loud that the ant looked up,
And, seeing her haughty face,
Took no more notice, but traveled on
At the same industrious pace;
But a sudden blast of autumn came
And rudely swept the ground,
And down the rose with the lady-bug bent,
And scattered its leaves around.

Then the homeless lady was much amazed,
For she knew not where to go,
And hoarse November's early blast
Had brought with it rain and snow:
Her wings were chilled and her feet were cold,
And she wished for the ant's warm cell,
And what she did in the wintry storm
I'm sure I cannot tell.

But the careful ant was in her nest,
With the little ones by her side;
She taught them all like herself to toil,
Nor mind the sneer of pride;
And I thought, as I sat at the close of day,
Eating my bread and milk,
It was wiser to work and improve my time
Than to be idle and dress in silk.

A Sea Voyage.

BY JENNIE LOCKHART.

Several years had elapsed since my last story, and mamma decided to take me across the ocean to visit my brothers and sisters, who were at boarding school.

The vessel was a large one, with a nice cabin, and Captain Farnsworth as kind as he could be. Mamma, Mamie and I had the cabin all to ourselves. Mamma was sick, and Mamie would read; so poor little me was left with my doll for company, except when the captain would take me on deck. One day he called me in a great hurry to see a school of grampus. I did not know what a grampus was; but there they were, close to the vessel, about twenty young whales coming up out of the water, one after the other, and spouting up high jets of water every time they turned over (they seemed to me to turn over.) I was perfectly delighted, and asked the captain where they went to school. He said they were only called a school because they kept together all the time, and behaved in so orderly a way. Isn't that a lesson now for little boys and girls?

Another time he called me to see some porpoise, which are round, black things, smaller than the grampus, but which move along in about the same way. They sometimes go quite near the shore, and if you have ever been at Long Branch, just before a storm, you may have seen them, about a mile out from the shore, coming up steadily one after the other, so that you could count them.

The first part of our voyage was delightful, and some days were so calm that I had splendid romps with the captain; but the sailors say a storm always comes after a calm, and it proved so in our case. Just as we were counting the hours before we would see land it began to blow fearfully; the waves got oh! so high; the ship tossed about and plunged dreadfully, and we were very much frightened. I hardly knew the captain, who gave his orders to the men in such a deep, stern voice that it made me tremble; yet the storm was so great that he could hardly be heard. The sails were torn from the masts, and at last the masts were cut away to save the ship, and the hatches were battened down to keep the water out. I did not know the danger then; but the same dear Savior who was with his disciples in the ship was watching over us, and commanded "the winds and the waves to be still," though we could not hear him.

The winds went down, our cabin door was opened, and what a sight met our eyes—pieces of masts and sails all about the deck, and the poor ship rolling from side to side and almost unmanageable. The captain soon rigged up some jury-masts, and headed again for the land, which they made out to be Newport harbor. Then came the greatest amusement to me—to see the small boats coming alongside, and boys, with fruits of all kinds to sell, throwing them up for the sailors to catch.

Steamers and ships were all around us; but you may imagine how forlorn we looked, all tattered and torn, and how anxious we were to get on shore after such a voyage. Everything looked so beautiful it seemed almost like fairy-land to me. I had been looking forward with much longing to be on land once more, and to see this country, so strange and new to me, and my anticipations were more than realized. Now, my darlings, in this voyage of life are very many delightful days; but the storms will come, and very often the last part of the voyage is the most stormy; but if we love Jesus we will long to get home to that beautiful city, more beautiful than anything we can imagine—our port of peace.—Christian at Work.

Little Katy's Present.

It was not a very pretty thing to give away, I am afraid you will think, children, and so I shall not tell you what it was just yet, but wait till you know a little about Katy, and then I think you will agree with me in admiring the present she sent me.

Katy is a little Irish girl of about twelve years now, just old enough to be going to school still and having a good time after it, playing a good deal and working a little, and getting ready for the hard lot sure to come to her by and by. And so she did, till her kind, hard-working mother died two years ago, and left her with the care—open your eyes wide now—yes, left her with the care of a family of ten!—her father and nine children, herself included. Now what do you think of that? Do you not think she is a right brave little woman to keep up her courage and cheerful heart, while her small hands are busy all day with cooking the food and sweeping the house, and trying to keep the little brothers and sisters tidy enough to go to school? More than this, tired and worn as she must be, she cannot give up all learning herself, but attends quite regularly an evening school, and is making good progress in her studies.

Now I am not afraid to tell you how her grateful heart showed itself, for I am sure you would not laugh, though you may smile and say, "Poor little Katy," when you hear it.

One autumn morning her aunt, who works for me, came in with such a big bundle in her arms she could scarcely hold it, saying, as she laid it down: "There, ma'm, is Katy's present to you sure, with her love, and she hopes you'll be having as kind a friend if you are sick and in trouble as you were to her poor mother when her last sickness came."

As I took up the two fine cabbages, and put them carefully away, you can believe that I felt more like tears than smiles, for I loved and honored that mother, ignorant and uncouth though she was, she was so faithful in her work for me and others, as well as so devoted in her love for her children, and I knew well what a terrible loss she was to them all.

So, dear favored children who read this little story, will you learn a lesson of little Irish Katy in being brave under heavy burdens, cheerful under bereavements and grateful for kindness shown?

"Inasmuch as ye do it unto one of the least of these, ye do it unto me." Christian Weekly.

WAITING FOR THE SHADOW.—The people of the East measure time by the length of their shadows. Hence, if you ask a man what o'clock it is, he goes into the sun, stands erect, looks where his shadow ends, then he measures the length with his feet, and tells you nearly the time. So this illustrates the passage in Job vii, 2: "As a servant earnestly desireth his shadow;" for a workman, wishing to be through his toil, says: "How long my shadow is in coming!" If he is asked, "Why did you not come sooner?" he replies: "Because I waited for my shadow."

Farm, Garden and Household.

FILBERTS.—We were surprised, on visiting one of our Broadway fruit shops, to find fresh filberts, imported from Kent, in England, selling with their heavy green husks on for eighty cents per pound, and this has been the average for several years. Why should not our farmers in the Middle and Southern States grow filberts? The climate which will produce good peaches will also produce filberts; and all our light tobacco lands in the basin of the Chesapeake are as well suited to their growth as the soil of Kent, and certainly at the prices ruling now in New York, or at even half these prices, filberts would prove the most profitable product within the whole range of agriculture. Nor is the adaptation of the soil and climate of our Middle States to the growth of these nuts at all problematical, for they have been grown in a small way on some of the old homesteads in Virginia for more than a hundred years.—Turf, Field and Farm.

VEGETABLE ENEMIES.—To destroy bugs on squash and cucumber-vines dissolve a tablespoonful of saltpeter in a pailful of water, put one pint of this around each hill, shaping the earth so that it will not spread much, and the thing is done. Use more saltpeter if you can afford it; it is good for vegetable, but death to animal life. The bugs burrow in the earth at night and fail to rise in the morning. It is also good to kill the "grub" in peach-trees—only use twice as much, say a quart or two to each tree. There was not a yellow or blistered leaf on twelve or fifteen trees to which it was applied last season. No danger of killing any vegetable with it; a concentrated solution applied to beans make them grow wonderfully.

RESTORING FROZEN PLANTS.—In case of frozen house plants the following method of treatment is said to restore them uninjured: Allow the plants to remain where they were frozen; darken the room as completely as practicable, and sprinkle them with cold water direct from the cistern. A few drops of camphor put into the water will render it all the better. Do not allow the room to become warmer than forty-seven degrees for twenty-four hours. Although the water may freeze in drops on the leaves when sprinkled, the plants will come out unharmed if this treatment be strictly adhered to.

THOSE twin devils, rum and crime, are usually closely connected, and inflict upon the world a double curse. The frenzy of drunkenness prepares for deeds of violence and the shedding of innocent blood. And no age or character is a shield from the brutal rage of an intoxicated man.

INTERESTING TO INVALID LADIES.

HARLEMVILLE, COLUMBIA CO., N. Y., July 9, 1873.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D.—Dear Sir: Your favor is just received. I intended to have written to you several weeks since concerning the improvement in my health, which is now very apparent. I have used one bottle of Favorite Prescription with the best results, although I will admit I was somewhat discouraged after its use (for a short time only.) I took it under very disadvantageous circumstances, having the supervision of the house, and during the season of house cleaning I was obliged, through the incompetency of help, to do more than I ought, and, of course, suffered dreadfully—ill-fed when I should and to have raised my hand, and did all I could to bring "order out of chaos;" but upon laying aside all cares and continuing the remedy, I find myself, after using less than one bottle, to be so much benefited that I have discontinued the use, with no return of the symptoms of which I wrote you. I have suffered terribly, and what added to my distress was the consciousness of not procuring relief from ordinary sources; at times it seemed almost impossible to stand, so great was the distress. All of those severe neuralgic pains have disappeared. They were so bad at times I could hardly walk without some external pressure. They seem to have left me like magic suddenly, and have had no return; all other symptoms have been removed. The severe weakness and faintness have disappeared, and I can go up stairs with comparative ease now. I would have informed you ere this of my improvement, for I appreciated it, but I was fearful it was only transient benefit I was receiving; but I think sufficient time has elapsed to consider the beneficial results permanent. Accept of my best wishes for your future success and your kindness in advising me.

Very truly, MRS. M. NETTIE SNYDER.

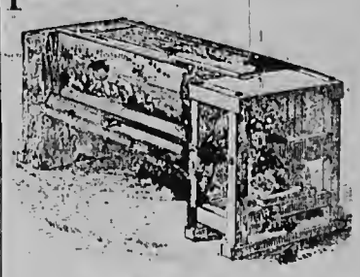
IMPROVED



EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the planters on planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. It has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on hand in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-seventh ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales... 7,573
Lake	150
Arkansas	886
Tennessee	446
Mobile	526
Texas	133
Total	9,714

On Saturday the market opened under the depressing influence of unsatisfactory telegrams from Liverpool, where it was reported dull at previous rates, with sales of only 10,000 bales, instead of at an advance, with a better demand, as many anticipated, and New York reported dull and easier. The movement was consequently without any spirit, and continued sluggish throughout the day. Operations were also restricted by factors and buyers being more widely apart than usual in their views, and the sales were consequently confined to the limited amount of 2,050 bales, the smallest business reported for some time. Low ordinary sold at 10c., barely good ordinary at 13¾c., strict good ordinary at 14¾c., strict good ordinary, high style, at 15c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 15c., low middling at 15⅞, 15⅝@15¾c., and strict low middling to middling at 16c. On Monday the movement commenced with a moderate demand, but under a decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool with sales of only 10,000 bales, and a reduction of 1-10 ₰ cent. in foreign exchange, buyers claimed concessions which most factors were unwilling to admit. This checked the movement, and the sales during the morning were confined to about 1,000 bales, mostly at easier prices, without establishing a quotable decline, after which, with a rally in exchange, buyers came forward more freely, and the entire business summed up 4,500 bales, closing at a partial decline of ⅛c. On Tuesday the demand was slack, and the business was confined to 2,350 bales. Prices exhibited increased irregularity, desirable kinds commanding disproportionably high figures compared with the general run of the supply.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 9,900 bales, against 20,600 for the corresponding time last week and 21,450 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,093,339 bales, against 1,023,629 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 34,635 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 101,980 to Great Britain, of 80,324 to France and of 60,660 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Low ordinary	9⅞ @ 10¼
Ordinary	11⅝ @ 12

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

Special Notices.

NOTICE.—To the Preachers of the Mobile District.—Our District Conference will embrace the third Sabbath in April, the services commencing on Wednesday night previous. It is hoped that there will be a general attendance. Bishop Marvin will be with us. I hope the brethren will have taken their collections for the expenses of the delegates to the General Conference before that time. J. HAMILTON.

THE PREACHERS' MEETING of Meridian district will be held at Meridian, Mississippi, on the ninth of April, at nine o'clock A. M. Question for general discussion: "Do the Scriptures warrant the conclusion that an adult may pass through the process of regeneration without being conscious of it?" Itinerant and local ministers are requested to attend.

General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR.
A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the Kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the Lives of the Bishops will be published in the DAILY; also a Pen-and-Ink Sketch of the Members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the gravest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the master-minds of the church

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 3.—Additional dispatches from Yokohama state that the eruption of a volcano at Furslyama, about twenty miles from the new capital, took place on the eighth of February.

The third annual exhibition at Yeddo was opened on the first of March, within the walls of the Mikado's former residence. For the first time the interior of the Imperial dwelling has been accessible to the public.

The Japan Mail has published a long and violent attack upon the United States minister to Japan, based upon the brief paragraph in a Washington paper of January 9, purporting to give the substance of a private letter from Mr. Bingham. That gentleman is understood to disclaim any knowledge of the extract in question.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 3.—There was a light frost this morning; no damage done.

The officers of the State Grange, in session here for two days, adopted a resolution looking to co-operation with the Georgia Grange in the matter of direct trade with Europe. A plan was proposed for immigration, which, it is believed, will result in success.

PHILADELPHIA, April 4.—Last night a large meeting of Germans, who are opposed to the Sunday liquor law, was held, William Hollman presiding.

It was for the purpose of effecting an organization which will support for office no candidate who does not pledge himself to repeal the present law relative to liquor.

NEW YORK, April 4.—A large meeting in the interests of cremation was held this evening. Letters were read in favor of and in opposition to the proposed scheme from J. W. Watson, Charles A. Dana, Rev. O. B. Frothingham, Henry Bergh, D. D. Field and others. Resolutions were adopted advising the formation of an association for promoting cremation and securing its practical application, and that a society shall be formed on a broad basis, without distinction as to creed, profession or nationality.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Senator Pratt's Fine house here has been sold in bankruptcy proceedings.

Secretary Richardson will stick, if he can.

NEW YORK, April 6.—Ex-Judge Edmonds, a well-known lawyer and Spiritualist, is dead.

MEMPHIS, April 6.—A special from Jackson, Mississippi, to the Appeal, says the Legislature adjourned sine die to-day, after passing a bill requiring a majority of males over twenty-one and females over eighteen years of age in the city, town or township to sign a petition for license to sell liquor before such license shall be issued. The Governor immediately thereafter signed the bill.

NEW YORK, April 7.—The Herald's special from Mexico, under date of the second, says: The revolutionary movement in Tampas against the Governor has been suppressed. Six of the assassins of the Rev. Mr. Stephens have been condemned to death. The trial of the priest Achon and other parties implicated in the outrage is still pending.

Congress opened yesterday.

Peace prevails throughout Mexico.

NEW HAVEN, April 7.—The election has resulted in a sweeping Democratic victory. The returns received by the Palladium office, a few towns being wanting, give Ingersoll a majority of 5,976 over Harrison, Republican, and a majority of 1,669.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, April 1.—Peter Andrew Hansen, German astronomer, is dead.

HAVANA, April 6.—The new Captain-General, Jose de la Concha, arrived here to-day.

LONDON, April 7.—Additional dispatches from Melbourne give some particulars of the escape from New Caledonia of Henri Rochefort and companions. It appears they obtained permission from the authorities to go on a fishing excursion, and when they succeeded in boarding a vessel and stowed themselves away in the hold, where they remained during the departure of the vessel, when they made their appearance on deck.

MADRID, April 7.—Serrano has begun a furious cannonade on the Carlists' position before Bilboa. The fire is not returned. Large numbers of Carlists are deserting. It is expected that Serrano will make a general assault very soon.

The crevasse which broke on Sunday at Bayou Lalourche appears to be quite serious, there now being seven plantations under water. The break, which occurred almost in front of D. Jameson's plantation, was at first about twenty feet wide; this, however, increased until now it is one hundred and fifty, the water rushing through like a mill-race. From the officers of Morgan's Louisiana and Texas railroad we learn that the crevasse is some three miles on the other side of Thibodaux, and on the opposite side of the bayou, the water flowing into Lake Des Allemandes and over toward the Mississippi river, the following plantations being now under water: Robert Jones, Dixie, Lassegne, Bordeaux, Estate Bros., Highland, Mrs. Jones, Meyers & Frost, D. Jamesoneau, Frosclair, Fisch, Brand and Rogers. No work is being done, and the whole country, it is said, will be under water if the break is not in some way repaired, as the water is still very high, with no prospect of falling.

The Congregational Council.

The most notable assembly of Congregational ministers and laymen ever gathered in this country has done its work and become a matter of history—a stride in that march of events which God directs, and no mortal's might can stay or divert.

The particular history to which the council stands related is well understood. A member of Mr. Beecher's church (Theodore Tilton) was commonly reported to have made statements most seriously injurious to his minister's reputation. For this offense of slander he was regularly cited before the Plymouth church. He did not deny that he had made the injurious statements; on the other hand, he professed himself ready to vindicate any act of his for which he might now be arraigned. But he claimed at the same time that he was not under the jurisdiction of the church which had arraigned him, since he had, by his own act in withdrawing from its ordinances four years before, severed all connection with it. The church, under Mr. Beecher's advice, accepted that plea; and though the member's name had stood upon its roll till that moment, so that as a member he had been charged and cited, the church resolved by an immense majority that the name be erased. Of course at that point all inquiry concerning his reputed slanders ended; and with it perished Mr. Beecher's opportunity to convict his slanderer, and to vindicate his own suffering reputation.

The neighboring churches of Drs. Storrs and Budington, astounded at such a method of solving such a problem, expostulated with the Plymouth church for its departure from the well-established and most necessary usage of the Congregational churches. And when their expostulations were resented on account, as it was claimed, of some imlecorum or arrogance in their tone, they asked the Plymouth church to unite with them in calling a council which should review and pronounce upon the matter in dispute. Failing to secure any early acceptance of this proposal, or any evidence that it would ever be accepted, the two churches above named called the council which has now acted and dissolved.

It was a body of men notable for numbers, ability, dignity, piety and candor. They came from every part of the Congregational Church; and, as Dr. Storrs declared in the most emphatic and convincing expressions, they were selected with no respect whatever to the particular leaning which they might have to one side or the other of the question at issue, but only for their fitness to represent with weight and fairness the great body of Congregational churches.

This council began its sessions on Tuesday night of last week, with a most courteous request to the Plymouth church that they meet the council by delegates, explain their view of the matter in dispute, and so consent to the council's ultimate decision. This request was declined on Wednesday morning in a "protest" previously prepared and printed, though not till that time adopted by the Plymouth church. The council was thus restricted to such information as it could receive from this protest and from the committees of the churches which had called it.

It accordingly listened in public sessions to the two committees; and then, with closed doors, according to established usage, considered what action it became it to take. The result, reached after two days and a half of earnest discussion, is the fullest approval of the position of the two churches, that the dismissal of the arraigned member of the Plymouth church on the plea that he had already effected his own separation from that church was incompatible with the Congregational idea of church membership.

We were sure in advance that no other decision could be reached by so competent and candid a council. The fact that a large number of its members gave unmistakable signs of their special personal regard for Mr. Beecher adds weight to the action which reflects so severely upon his church and himself. For the question now takes a definite form which it will never lose: What was it that stimulated the Congregational members of Plymouth church and its intelligent Congregational pastor to arrest that investigation at the cost of such an infringement of unquestionable Congregational law? Men do easy things under small motives, but difficult things under great ones. The departing council, in spite of its soft words, leaves an endless emphasis on the question: Why was this rugged adventure ever attempted?—Christian Intelligencer.

THE King of Persia once ordered his vizier to make out a list of all the fools in his dominions. He did so, and put his majesty's name at the head of them. The King asked him why, to which he immediately answered: "Because you intrusted a lac of rupees to men you don't know to buy horses for you a thousand miles off, and who'll never come back." "Ay, but suppose they come back." "Then I shall erase your name and insert theirs."

CALCUTTA.—Reports from the famine-stricken districts show a continued improvement in the general situation. The authorities are now in a condition to hope that difficulties are over, except in the northwestern portion of Tirhoot, where over five hundred thousand persons are yet dependent upon the government for food. The spring crop has yielded well, except in Tirhoot.

The General Minutes.

The book editor, Rev. Dr. Summers, says: We have had no little trouble in procuring returns from the Annual Conferences to make up the General Minutes. We have taken great pains to secure correctness—writing letters to procure statistics—adding up, correcting and verifying all the figures, so that they may be depended upon as far as the returns are trustworthy. We are sorry to say that some of the reports are imperfect—e. g., those of baptisms, especially of infants. We hope our pastors will pay more attention to this subject, and report not only all they baptize themselves, but all who are baptized by others within the bounds of their respective pastoral charges. There were moneys contributed to the cause of missions which passed into the treasury besides what went through the Annual Conferences, which are not reported in the General Minutes. We hope the figures will be tripled next year. We must put forth greater efforts in the cause of missions. We hope all our friends—especially all our ministers—will procure copies of this highly suggestive annual. We thank God most devoutly for the gratifying increase in the ranks of the ministry and membership of the church. We append

There are defects in the Minutes of some of the Conferences, which the editor vainly endeavored to supply. The reports of baptisms are very imperfect. The transferred preachers are reckoned as 331; those of the 11th reserves to which they now belong. The preachers who were discontinued this year (89,) and counted among the traveling preachers, though many of them are also reckoned with the local preachers. The colored members, for the most part, have no connection with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, organized by our Bishops under the authority of the General Conference. They are reported in their own Minutes, hence the apparent decrease in that department.

The Bible Abroad.

EGYPT.—Dr. I. G. Bliss, the agent in the Levant, sends us the journal of Giurgus Nakkor, who has been laboring as Bible distributer in Egypt. We insert elsewhere some extracts. They show something of the state of mind in that country on the subject of Christianity, and afford abundant proof of the great need of a freely circulated Bible. Dr. Bliss also writes us from Alexandria, sending a more general account of Bible work in Egypt. The statements are worthy of consideration.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Mr. Milne still finds encouragement to prosecute his work in Uruguay and the Argentine Confederation. He has extended the work into the camp, or country towns, with considerable success, and found good results, not only in the books distributed, but also in finding many persons religiously impressed in reading them.

PORTO RICO—FAJARDO.—A letter from this island shows a good work in progress there. It may be remembered that in a former number mention was made of a box of Bibles and Testaments received at Fajardo, the first that had ever appeared there. They were in part distributed, the rest remaining still on hand, waiting an opportunity for distribution. The effect was most salutary. Of this our correspondent gives gratifying information in a letter lately received. Fajardo is a town of less than 6,000 inhabitants, among whom there are forty Protestants, the rest being Roman Catholics as far as they are anything. There is a desire for a Protestant place of worship and a call for aid from our country. If any desire to aid in that work we should cheerfully give information about it.

RUSSIA.—This society continues to labor in Northern Russia, in the Baltic provinces. By a communication from George H. Prince, Esq., who kindly acts as our agent there, we learn that the work is widening and deepening in that region. The past year, however, there has been a drawback from the want of books. Owing to this, the entire circulation has amounted during the year to only 1,250 volumes. But measures are on foot to remedy this difficulty. The agency has undertaken to print an edition of 10,000 copies of the 12mo Testament and Psalms, in Reval-Esthonian, as a commencement of the work authorized by the board of managers, as stated in the Record of September last. The printing of the Old Testament must be deferred for a time, until the revision, under authority of the Synod of the Lutheran Church, is completed. But there are indications of a growing demand for the Scriptures, and it is believed that the new books, when ready, will have an extensive and rapid circulation.

CENTRAL AMERICA—PANAMA.—We have recently received a communication from Mr. William L. Thompson, of Panama, to whom we have sent books for distribution. He teaches school, and distributes the books we send without charge. He writes us encouragingly of his work. He says: "My work is going on slowly, but steadily and surely, and I now hope by the grace of God to succeed. I must also state that I do believe the time is approaching fast for this people." He has been five years in his present employment, during which period he has circulated a great many Scriptures and tracts, which appear to have been greatly blessed.

ITALY—ROME.—By a communication from Rev. H. C. Waite, of Rome, we learn good results from the work authorized by the American Bible Society. Already 5,500 copies have been circulated, of which 5,000 were Gospels, 500 Testaments and 200 Bibles. Mr. Waite says: "The result of the work among the soldiers, due to daily Bible reading, accompanied by the efforts of a faithful evangelist and colporteur, has been the conversion, since a year ago this month, of more than 150 men, of whom 115 have been received into an independent [illegible] them."—Bible Society Record for March.

THE SCANDINAVIAN SEAMEN.—The chaplain of the Scandinavian Seamen's Friend Society has addressed the following note to those who assisted the movement on Monday evening, March 30, in behalf of establishing a bethel:

Out of a full heart I desire to return my personal thanks to the many friends who so kindly greeted the Scandinavian Seamen's Friend Society upon their first public appearance last evening, at the Congregational church, corner of Prytania and Calliope streets.

Your presence, dear friends, apart from your generous contribution, encourages the heart of those in whose welfare your interest was manifested; and we shall go forward with renewed zeal and energy, assured, as we now are, that we are sustained by your Christian sympathy and prayers.

To the pastor and people of the Congregational church especially, and to the reverend clergymen who advocated our cause so beautifully and so effectually, I am requested by the Scandinavian seamen now in port to tender humble acknowledgment. May our God reward you and prosper the seamen's cause.

SPECTACLES.—When spectacles were first introduced it was considered fashionable to wear them, even by people who were not in the least near-sighted. In Spain they formed part of the costume of every well-bred person. This absurd use of glasses was meant to increase the gravity of the appearance, and consequently the veneration with which the wearer of them was regarded. A young monk having, through the assistance of his family, caused his convent to succeed in an important law suit, thought himself liberally rewarded when the prior, after having embraced him, said, to testify his gratitude: "Brother, put on spectacles." The glasses of spectacles were proportioned in size to the rank of the wearer; those worn by the Spanish nobles were as large as one's hand. The Marquis of Astorga, Viceroy of Naples, after having had his bust sculptured in marble, particularly enjoined the artist not to forget his beautiful spectacles!

BEWARE OF HIM.—A man calling himself J. P. Kelley, and claiming to be a convert from Romanism. He says he wishes to lecture on Romanism, without pay; that he was a deacon in that church, and was disgusted by the doctrine of infallibility; that he is of Irish descent, born in Chicago, and educated in Wisconsin, at a Jesuitical college. Let him pass. He will not do.

Centenary College and J. H. Keller Again.

MR. EDITOR: I am just in receipt of the April number of the Kinderfreund, published in your city, for circulation among the German children, by the Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens.

I can't read a syllable of the German language, but fortunately pictures mean the same thing in German that they do in English.

As I opened the neatly-printed sheet, and saw the handsome vignette, with different groups, representing children at prayer, coming to the Savior, and being taught in the Sunday school; then, further down, the goddess of the flowers scattering her bright gifts along the pathway of life, where are seen joyous birds and sportive lambs; then, on the inside, various cuts of creatures and things so arranged as to give delight and provoke inquiry—I thought surely here is a thing of beauty and benefit to the children for whom it is intended.

Turning over to the fourth side of the paper, imagine my grateful surprise to see an artistic wood-cut, representing to the life Centenary College of Louisiana, with its name written both in English and German text, with an appropriate article accurately representing and heartily commending the institution to the German population.

This is the work of our brother, J. H. Keller, who, already having taken stock in the college to the amount of a handsome donation, and having been well pleased with the advancement which his own son Albert has made here, wishes his countrymen to avail themselves of the opportunity for their children.

No doubt this flattering notice will increase our patronage among the German population, from whom we have already a goodly number. Quite an interesting feature of the daily college exercises is the large class of young men, some of German, some of English parents, who are pursuing the study of the German language.

Bro. Keller has been our benefactor also in another very material matter, viz.: in remedying the acoustic properties of our large audience-room. You, Mr. Editor, as well as every attendant on the college commencements, will remember how the large Romanesque dome caught up the tones of the speaker, and sent them echoing above the reach of the audience. Bro. Keller had the matter under careful inquiry for some time, and before the March exhibition he made us a visit for the especial purpose of remedying this defect.

By an ingenious arrangement of cord and pulley he has suspended hangings of cloth gracefully from the center of the dome to the capitals of the Corinthian columns, thus quite effectually breaking the waves of sound. The success of the experiment was proved at the late March exhibition. Never was like occasion so satisfactory; and the universal opinion was that it was owing to the increased facility with which the speakers could be heard.

You will be pleased to know that we are going steadily forward, with one hundred and one students, and an occasional renewal of the work of repairs.

TESTIMONY AND ARGUMENT.—Testimony is like an arrow shot from a long bow; the force of it depends on the strength of the hand that draws it. Argument is like an arrow from a cross-bow, which has equal force, though shot by a child.—Bacon.

Catechisms and Institutes.

MR. EDITOR: I write again, not merely for the writing, but for the great importance I attach to the subject. I am very much obliged to Bro. Rush for his help. He has, however, misunderstood me as to our standard works. I simply meant to say we might extract from them enough of the controversy upon the old issues to answer our present demands. I agree with Bro. Rush that Christianity, like the sun and earth, was finished in creation. But man was made to progress in politics, science and religion. I do not believe that when Mr. Wesley extracted or compiled our articles of religion, and dogmatized our General Rules, that the subject of Christianity was exhausted. Mr. Wesley did a great work, and the marvel is that he brought to light so much truth, surrounded, as he was, by old monkish and Calvinistic teachings. Mr. Wesley says: "We have leaned too much to Calvinism." Christianity, to the human mind, is like the traveler who starts from the sea-coast to the Alleghanies. He goes down about as many hills as he goes up, and yet when he reaches the top of the mountain he is more than three thousand feet higher than when he started. The angels had not fathomed all the mysteries of redemption the last time we heard from them. The Bishops are continually changing the course of study for the young preachers. We are constantly changing the books and songs for our Sunday schools, and in our judgment not always for the best. All change is not progress, but often turns out to be retrogression.

The church has accepted the private labors of individuals, and pronounced their works to be orthodox. It may not be the duty of the General Conference to have written the history of Methodism in Alabama or Florida, but it is the duty of the General Conference to keep a record of their acts, and to furnish such a series of doctrinal catechisms as the children of the church may need, and whatever else may be taught in our Sabbath schools. The doctrinal catechisms and the hymns from the hymn-book should be required to be taught.

The General Conference should have compiled a well-digested book of institutes, and supplement it from age to age, as circumstances may demand. For a great church, like the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to let standards of theology not such as were picked up by our fathers, as best they might, is a shame on our progress and enlightenment. I am decidedly in favor of engaging the Northern and English Methodists in this enterprise. I hope the General Conference will ventilate the subject, and then furnish Dr. Summers with the means and authority to have the work done. The Methodist Church has developed the great truths which Mr. Wesley and others saw, in their day, through a glass darkly. The doctrines of the Methodist Church, as preached and practiced, are in harmony with the mental and moral teaching of mankind. All mental and moral philosophy, together with the moral sense of man, is in harmony with the teaching of Methodism. The whole Calvinistic system is being either changed or abandoned altogether. The Evangelical Alliance is but the evidence, outwardly expressed, of an internal consciousness of the death of Calvinism. The time is not distant when the whole Calvinist world will try, by one united effort, to force upon the Christian public a compromised Calvinism, and the whole Methodist Church ought to be able to discern the signs of the times. Perhaps there has never been a time since the days of our fathers when it was more important to indoctrinate our people than now. Other churches, seeing and feeling that they cannot much longer maintain their doctrines, will seek compromise, and it is in the midst of compromise that the truth always suffers. The Bible, philosophy, moral and mental, the actions and common sense of mankind, are all in perfect harmony with Methodism, and we need no compromise. All we want is to give to the world our doctrine, and wherever man is found to be true to his convictions he will embrace it. We proposed to the General Conference in 1866 the propriety of the catechisms and four books of Institutes. The proposition met with general favor, but the want of means was the main difficulty then.

"GO OR SEND."—Mr. Editor: Permit me, through the Advocate, to call the attention of the presiding elders and the preachers to the "prize essay" by Dr. A. G. Haygood. It is a plea for missions. Its very title is an argument: "Go or Send." This work is opportune, a word in season—"an apple of gold in a picture of silver." It is an array of principles and facts, of labors and results, which confounds every objection, and ought to silence every fault-finder. The work on our hands as a church, the appropriations by the board, the assessments on the Conferences, all make light necessary to our people. Diffuse it by circulating this little book. We all need stirring, and this is the stone to agitate the waters. The land is naked not from barrenness, but for lack of seed. Here is one that will germinate and tiller, and bear a head on every stem. Send for a supply, brethren, and scatter them broadcast among the people. They will promote faith, encourage hope and enlarge the collections.

For THE ADVOCATE.

MAKE OUR MOTHER HAPPY.

BY C. B. POLEY.

Brothers, make our mother happy!
Make her sing, instead of sigh.
For the mournful hour of parting
May be very, very nigh.

Brothers, make our mother happy!
Many griefs she has to bear,
And she wearies 'neath her burdens;
Can we not these burdens share?

Brothers, make our mother happy!
Prompt obedience cheers her heart,
While a willful disobedience
Pierces like a poisoned dart.

Brothers, make our mother happy!
On her brow the lines of care
Deepen daily—don't you see them?—
While your own are bright and fair.

Oh, begin to-day, dear brothers!
Listen when your mother speaks;
Render quick and sweet obedience;
For your highest good she seeks;

Loves us better than all others—
For our sakes herself denies;
She is patient, prayerful, tender,
Gentle, thoughtful, true and wise.

Never while we live, dear brothers,
Though we search this "rounded earth,"
Will we find a friend more faithful
Than the one that gave us birth.

Terms of Membership.

REPLY TO DR. PIERCE.

MR. EDITOR: In the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of March 19 appears the third number of Dr. Pierce on the "Terms of Membership," in which he replies to an article published recently in the St. Louis Advocate. In this reply the venerable doctor makes some heavy personal thrusts at "Mr. West." These personal thrusts are not arguments upon the merits of the question, and I shall attempt no direct answer to them further than to say that the insinuation of my utter obscurity made in the use of the word "guess," and the declaration that my "opinion is not worth a gnat," put me on the vantage-ground of having no reputation to sustain, and relieve me from the temptation to decide the questions at issue upon my own ipse dixit. The article which I wrote for the St. Louis Advocate was in reply to one from the pen of a preacher in his first year. The doctor evidently confounds some things which appeared in the St. Louis Advocate, from another writer on the same subject, with the contents of my article. I may be excused for saying that for Dr. Pierce I have respect amounting to more than reverence. His name with us is a household word. I would as soon think of tearing a leaf out of the Bible in anger as saying or doing anything intentionally to wound Dr. Pierce. I have had the pleasure of hearing him preach a good many times in the last fifteen years, and think him, next to the Bishop, the greatest preacher now living. But the question before us is, as he says, "of exciting interest." In this reply I shall reproduce, in substance, a portion of my article in the St. Louis Advocate.

The question now before us is this: Does the law of the Methodist Episcopal Church South require that an individual shall be justified and regenerated, and shall give assurances of the attainment of this justification and regeneration before he is received into full connection in the church? I take the negative of this question. A justified and regenerated person is entitled to membership, and may be received into full connection, other things favoring. But one who has never given any assurance of regeneration, and who knows nothing of the joy of sins forgiven, may also be received into full connection in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. I do not deny that the law requires a preparatory examination into the spiritual condition of candidates for church membership, and that it requires satisfactory assurances of the genuineness of their faith and of their willingness to keep the rules of the church.

In support of the negative of the question above stated, I give here the whole law on the subject. In the General Rules we read this constitutional provision: "There is only one condition previously required of those who desire admission into these societies—a 'desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from their sins.'" Again, on pages 103 and 104 of the Discipline we read: "When persons offer themselves for church membership, let the preacher in charge inquire into their spiritual condition, and receive them into the church when they have given satisfactory assurances of their desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from their sins; and also of the genuineness of their faith, and of their willingness to keep the rules of the church. When satisfied on these points, let the minister bring the candidates before the congregation, whenever practicable, and receive them according to the prescribed form."

The prescribed form, found on pages 202–207 of the Discipline, contains the following, and all that it has on the points before us. The minister addresses the candidates:

"Dearly beloved, you profess to have a desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from your sins; you seek the fellowship of the people of God, to assist you in working out your salvation. I therefore demand of you:

"Do you solemnly, in the presence of God and this congregation, ratify and confirm the promise and vow of repentance, faith and obedience, contained in the baptismal covenant?

"Ans. I do, God being my helper.

"Will you be subject to the discipline of the church, attend upon its ordinances and support its institutions?

"Ans. I will endeavor so to do, by the help of God."

This is all the law in the case. Here are all the conditions, terms and requisitions of admission to membership. There are other things required afterward in order to retain membership. In all that I have quoted there is not a word, as I maintain, said about justification and regeneration as pre-requisite to admission into full connection; not a word about an experience of converting grace. I did say, in substance, that the expression, "and also the genuineness of their faith," is the only passage which could, in the extremity, be caught at to support the position that the law requires assurances of regeneration before reception into full connection. Dr. Pierce has produced nothing but this expression in defense of his position, and thereby concedes that there is nothing else in its defense. I did say that this expression, "the genuineness of their faith," certainly has reference to the creed or doctrine of the candidate, and not to the work of regeneration. For so saying the doctor now applies to me the not very flattering term of "poor greenhorn in church matters." I sought, in my "one-idea view," to so interpret this phrase as to harmonize it with the constitutional provisions of the General Rules and the other parts of the Discipline on the subject. As I find immediately connected with this phrase, the giving of satisfactory assurances of a desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from sin as expressive of the limit of the spiritual attainments required, I cannot think it a mere repetition or addition on the same point. And I now say again that it refers to the creed or doctrines of the candidate. But as my "opinion is not worth a gnat," I shall give authority for this position. Before quoting the authority for this, it is necessary to state that at one time the Discipline required the examination of the candidate on his willingness to keep the rules, and the genuineness of his faith, to take place before the congregation.—See our Discipline of 1854. Bishop Baker wrote and published a work on the Discipline. It has been in use, and has been considered of value. The Southern preachers consulted and followed it more or less, though much of it was obsolete with us, until it was superseded by Bishop McTyeire's most excellent Manual. Baker in this work says: "Since 1840 it has been required that the applicant pass a satisfactory examination before the church, respecting the correctness of his doctrine and his willingness to observe the rules of the church."—Page 24. Mark, Bishop Baker here refers to this very law and regulation made in 1840, that very law which Dr. Pierce refers to as made in 1840, and applies it to the correctness of the doctrine of the applicant. Will the doctor reply to Bishop Baker as he did to "Mr. West:" "Poor greenhorn in church matters?"

The doctor says the "old rule," "Mr. Wesley's condition," "a desire to flee from the wrath to come," etc., "was absolutely annulled," and that "the phrase—a desire to flee from the wrath to come, etc.—was unwisely retained after the adoption of the condition in 1840." I am "greenhorn" enough in "church matters" to believe that the sole condition in the General Rules could not, under the fourth restrictive rule governing the General Conference, be legally annulled except by a three-fourths vote of all the Annual Conferences, and I am just poorly enough posted in Methodist history to believe that such a vote was never taken and never acted upon. I believe, therefore, that the condition of Mr. Wesley, set forth in the General Rules, has never been annulled, and that it is in force to-day.

Dr. Pierce says: "If he (Mr. Anson West) had kept himself well posted on Methodism he would have known there never was a time when the Methodist Episcopal Church in America expressly provided for the incorporation of penitent sinners into the true membership of the church." I will meet this by quoting Dr. Pierce. He says: "But after fifty-six years' use of Mr. Wesley's only condition for admittance into his societies, our General Conference saw that it would not do as an only condition to admit members into the Methodist Episcopal Church upon." "Under the old regime it was manifest that there was a constant accumulation of legalized members in the church that had never experienced justification by saving faith." This is to the point. According to Dr. Pierce, here quoted, there was, for fifty-six years, no legal barrier to the reception of unconverted persons into full connection; and under that regime they accumulated legally members that had never been justified. I believe this testimony of Dr. Pierce. I believe that, from the foundation of the Methodist Church in America to this day, her authorized preachers have, knowingly and of set purpose, according to the legal provisions made, taken members into full connection with no higher attainments in divine grace than simply "a desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from their sins." I have seen many members received into the church, and by different preachers, but I have never heard one Methodist preacher say to a candidate: "I cannot receive you unless you assure me that you have been converted." I will say I think the door of the church ought to be guarded. This much on the question.

The doctor demands that we point to an instance where the apostles baptized any but believers. I suppose he means justified believers. I will not attempt to do this, but quote him a paragraph from Dr. Summers. In his work on baptism he says: "We do not mean to say that no one is eligible to baptism who has not an assurance of the pardon of his sin and the regeneration of his nature, through faith in Christ and by the power of the Holy Ghost. Far from it. Of course those who enjoy the witness of adoption are proper candidates for the ordinance; but so also are all those who do not enjoy it, yet are desirous of attaining it, and are seeking its possession. Indeed baptism is admirably suited to their case. It symbolizes the grace which they seek, and thus assists them in their efforts to acquire it; the ordinance thus proves a means whereby the penitent subject receives the inward and invisible grace which it is designed to represent. Thus, while Cornelius and his friends first obtained the gift of the Holy Ghost, and then received the ordinance which represents it, the thousands of penitents at Pentecost are exhorted by Peter to receive the ordinance in connection with repentance, in order to obtain the spiritual benefit."—Pages 21 and 22. I leave Dr. Pierce and the Baptists to controvert this position of Dr. Summers.

More Wonders.

MR. EDITOR: The article headed "Singular Phenomenon" reminds me of something similar, and with your permission I here detail what I heard. Many years ago I and my wife occupied a small cabin at Cooper's Well, in this county (Hinds.) There were among the many visitors to that watering-place a gentleman and his wife, residents of Warren county, Mississippi. Our families visited; in fact Mr. and Mrs. Tom Evans had been old acquaintances and friends of my father, and as such we were soon pleasant acquaintances. The subject of the marvelous sprang up one day, and Mr. Evans told us this singular story. He said that owing to his wife's bad health he had determined to buy a small tract of land some miles from his plantation, and in a less malarious district than that in which his plantation was located.

He employed a carpenter, and had a small house built, and as soon as one of the rooms had been completed, and a chimney had been built to that end of the building, he moved his wife to her new home, hoping thereby to greatly improve her health. He had taken with him one servant, a colored woman, and his buggy and horse. The room was cozily fixed up, the colored woman occupying an out-house, and the carpenter, with a blanket or two, made his bed on the work-bench in an unfinished portion of the house.

Now for the story. After all had retired, the first night, to their beds, something frightened the carpenter so as to make him run, screaming, into the private room of Mr. Evans. Mr. Evans tried to quiet him, thinking it was all the result of nightmare, but nothing would satisfy the poor man unless Mr. Evans would get up and light a candle. This he did, when, strange to tell, they all saw falling from the new ceiling any quantity of lumps of dirt or clay. This fell upon the floor perpendicularly. The horse was frightened and run from an adjoining small pasture lot, and made his way into the unfinished building. These lumps fell throughout the night. They covered the nice white bed-spread and the new floor. Mr. Evans thought it was some arrangement of the colored woman. The next day he sent her off with his wife. The carpenter left soon, and Mr. Evans got some of his neighbors to come to his house before nightfall and search everywhere and every place, and even to surround the house before night, and sit in close proximity to each other, and with several dogs; but still for several nights these things occurred, and the floor was covered, as usual, with these pieces of falling dirt. A stone fell down the chimney, which required the united strength of two stout men to lift, and which could not, owing to its size, be forced up the funnel of the chimney. Mr. Evans intended, among others, to have this singular phenomenon witnessed by the Rev. C. K. Marshall; but owing to Mr. Marshall's absence from Vicksburg, or for some other reason, Dr. Marshall, I think, did not see it.

Well, this is or was Evans' version of the matter, corroborated by his wife. They were members of your church, were good people, reliable in every way, and looked upon as being as little tinctured with the marvelous as any persons.

Years rolled away, and the story, though not forgotten by me, had left but a vague impression on my memory, when one evening a carriage drove up to my gate, and I soon recognized my old friend Evans, who was taking his poor invalid wife to Coor's Spring, in Copiah. He had called to stay over night with us. He returned to the carriage and brought his poor sick wife to the house, holding her in his arms as you would an infant. She was placed upon my wife's bed, and after the administration of a little stimulus, a cup of tea, and rest, she revived so far as to wish to talk of matters past, present and future. Though my wife and I had implicit confidence in the veracity of both of these people, still it was so strange, so out of the usual course of things, that we concluded to learn from this dying woman what she had then to say about this singular thing, which years before she had said she witnessed. My wife brought up the matter, not, of course, in a doubting manner, and we had from Mr. Evans and from this lady, who fearlessly stood upon the very brink of eternity, a confirmation of the whole story and an assurance of its entire truth.

From that day to this, though I have never seen these strange sights, I read, study and wonder, but never doubt but that there are more things in this world than were ever dreamed of in our philosophy.

I was glad to see that Mr. W. C. Menefee has called the attention of the scientists of your church to this matter. Until these things are investigated, and the causes—which, I have no doubt, are the operations of some natural laws, to us as yet unknown—set forth, the ignorant will be led astray.

Now, in reference to this Evans matter, I believe it as firmly as I believe anything. I have heard persons say it was supernatural, was the devil's work, etc. If we only understood the matter, it would, in my mind, be no more mysterious than the ticking of a telegraph machine in your city when operated upon, through the wire, from Jackson, Mississippi.

Very respectfully, H.

Hot Springs, Arkansas.

MR. EDITOR: On the thirtieth of January we arrived in our new field of labor. In surveying the ground, and taking in, as far as possible, what was to be done, we soon saw that all could be told in one word—much. Last year nearly in the year, the church, standing near one of the principal hotels, was burned by a fire that broke out in the hotel, consuming several houses at the same time. An effort was made to rebuild it, but for some reason failed; so then our field lay in this way: no church-house, prayer meeting nor Sunday school; nothing but a lot. The prayer meetings had gone down. The Sunday school not into winter quarters, but into a union Sunday school. Of course everybody knows what it resulted in. They found better and cheaper papers than were published at Nashville. They were published in Boston, and were non-sectarian. What they have done we don't know—only our own papers were not used. If we were called upon to give a correct account of that school, we would say: Stifled by the atmosphere of a union Sunday school.

We found that the Episcopal church had no pastor, and was undedicated. So we asked and obtained permission to use that until they called for it, or we rebuilt ours. One difficulty was overcome. The next was to get all the church to work. We have a good prayer meeting, and all see and feel "how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in" prayer. We organized a Methodist Sunday school on the first Sunday in March. Now we have seventy-five names on our roll. We met with opposition, of course. The best way to overcome that is to introduce the Magazine, Visitor and Our Little People. If they don't overcome the opposition and build up a Sunday school, don't appoint any committees or offer any prizes, nor go into a union school. We are at work now getting up means to rebuild our church. We have only fifty members, and to build a church that can accommodate residents only we could do; but for the visitors we are not able. Will all our friends who read this help us some? We need help, and if you cannot give us much, we will thank you for little. Any amount sent to me will be acknowledged either by letter (privately) or in the ADVOCATE.

Last year Dr. Greene made a call for help for us, and a man living north of Mason and Dixon's line sent him one hundred dollars. Will some who live south do as much, or all they can? Dr. Greene has returned, and is rendering us no little assistance in preaching and planning for our new church.

A Plea for Good Singing.

A writer in the Edinburg Review makes the following comments on the singing of Mr. Sankey in connection with the revival work in Scotland:

If the visits of Messrs. Moody and Sankey were to have no other result, it would not miss of doing good, should it be the means of elevating the only part of worship in which the people take an audible share into the proper place—not an expedient for giving the minister a breath till he resumes the next part of his duty, but an integral and important part of the service. Of course the singing in our religious meetings, even at the best, is a different thing from Mr. Sankey's singing. As the old woman excused herself for hearing Dr. Chalmers reading a discourse by saying, "Ay, but it was fell readin' thon," so we may say of Mr. Sankey's singing—it's fell singing. Mr. Sankey has a magnificent voice, clear, sweet and melodious; and his feeling of the truth and beauty and solemnity of what he is singing communicates an indescribable pathos and tenderness to his utterance. Then he has learned to perfection what is so carefully attended to in American schools and is so little regarded here—distinct utterance. Most vocalists, unless you know what they are singing, might as well be warbling "ful-lal-lal" all through the piece. You can follow every syllable of Mr. Sankey's singing. Any prejudice there may be against "singing the gospel" will thaw and resolve itself into a pleasant dew as soon as he opens his mouth. Why should there be any prejudice? For generations most of the Highland ministers, and some of the Lowland ministers too, have sung the gospel—sung their sermons, aye, and sung their prayers too. The only difference is that they sing very badly and Mr. Sankey very beautifully. He accompanies himself on "the American organ," it is true, and some of us who belong to the old school can't swallow the kist of whistles yet. It may help us over this stumbling-block if we consider that with the finest voice and ear in the world nobody could maintain the proper pitch of a melody, singing so long as Mr. Sankey does. And then the American organ is "only a little one." When a deputation from the session waited on Ralph Erskine to remonstrate with him on the enormity of fiddling, he gave them a beautiful tune on the violoncello, and they were so charmed that they returned to their constituents with the report that it was all right—"it wasna' wee shifu' fiddle'" that their minister operated upon, but a grand instrument full of grave, sweet melody. I'm afraid some good true-blue Presbyterians will be excusing Mr. Sankey's organ, and themselves for listening to it, by some such plea as that."

SINGULARITY.—Any kind of singularity implies of necessity a certain discharge of vital force. The wheels of life run smoothly just in proportion as we are ready to take a large number of things for granted, and to accept established conventions for no other reason than that they are established. As soon as anybody acts on principles peculiar to himself, even in the smallest trifles, a certain amount of friction is set up, and frequently a disproportionate waste of thought and temper.—Saturday Review.

Obituaries.

DIED, of smallpox, at Rose Hill, Covington county, Alabama, Mrs. ELIZABETH BRANDON and three of her children—W. C. BRANDON, aged twenty-one years; BENJAMIN, an infant six months old, and MATTIE, seven years old. The smallpox came into this much-beloved family in this way: Bro. Brandon's son (W. C.) went out to Texas in 1872, and returned in November, 1873. While on his way home to see his father and mother, and brothers and sisters, he caught the smallpox in some unknown way. After he arrived at his father's, at Rose Hill, Alabama, he was taken ill, and for several days no one knew what was the matter, until the physician decided that he had the smallpox. He lingered until December 15, when he died in great peace. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church during the year 1871. He said he had not lived as exemplary as he ought, but that the Lord had reclaimed him; and he died happy, telling his father to meet him in heaven. He was much beloved by his friends, and now they have to mourn his loss. But their loss is his gain.

Bro. Brandon's wife, who had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church for twenty-one years, died December 28, 1873. She caught the smallpox while she was ministering to the necessities of her son in his last illness. She was nearly thirty-nine years of age; and died happy, saying: "I know that my Redeemer liveth," etc. Her infant (Benjamin,) six months old, died first. She soon followed after.

Mattie died December 30, aged seven years. She was kind and affectionate to all, and was an obedient child to her parents. Little Mattie was also a little Sabbath school scholar. She is gone to rest. So have her mother, her brother and the babe. Nine of Bro. Brandon's children had this contagion, six of whom did not die; and while we deeply sympathize with our much-beloved brother, yet we feel that God has been gracious to him in permitting the rest to live. The righteous are taken away from the evil to come.

B. G. BLACKWELL.

MRS. MARY A. LANE died in New Orleans, February 7, 1874. She was the daughter of John and Sarah P. Mayfield, and was born in Franklin county, Georgia, April 10, 1805. She was married to Colonel J. W. Lane April 25, 1825. Under the influence of early religious training, and reared by pious parents, she embraced religion when a mere child, and at twelve years of age became a member of the Methodist Church. I am not informed of the time when she came to New Orleans, but it must have been at least thirty years before her death. When I first became acquainted with her, in 1853, she was greatly afflicted, having lost her husband but a few years previous, and being almost blind from sorrow and weeping. She was, however, then resigned and happy in the comfort of the Holy Spirit. God had visited her while on a sick-bed with a remarkable manifestation of his love, and she evidently enjoyed entire sanctification. Her sight gradually improved, and for many years she was able to see the faces of her friends, and to read her Bible and other books. She fell, during the twenty years that I knew her, a quiet life, reading much, and most devoted to her church and its various means of grace. Her membership was in the Felicity Street church of New Orleans, and it had come to be her religious home—a consecrated spot where she ever longed to be. For a year she had been absent from the city, and, believing that her end was at hand, she returned, that, as she said, she might spend her last days near the church she loved so well. Her last and fatal attack was sudden, and of such a character that dying words could not be uttered. None can doubt her perfect readiness for the summons. In her experience love was made perfect. It was manifested in her life, it shone in her saintly face, it was in all her conversation. In the social meetings of the church her prayers and experience were always edifying, and in the retirement of her home it was a privilege to hear her talk of the Savior and the communion of the Spirit. We have never known a more womanly Christian. Humility, meekness, delicacy and sweetness were perfected and beautified by the grace of the gospel; and the refinement and tenderness which were natural to her were heightened and adorned by the renewing power of religion. Hers was indeed a most lovely and attractive type of Christian character, and one of the noblest exhibitions of devotion and faithfulness. Like many others of whom the world is not worthy, she was called to suffer. She passed through deep afflictions, but they wrought in her a glory which appeared in exceeding brightness while she lived, and which will cause her to shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of her Father. Such fruits of grace and of sanctified suffering as she exhibited are passing fair, and are calculated to lift our conceptions of divine love and the power of the gospel to the very highest point of wonder and gratitude. Blessed are all such lives and all such memories! They are the riches and glory of the church militant, and the grandest demonstration of the truth of the gospel of the Son of God.

LINUS PARKER.

AMONG the last words of Sister PAROLE REBECCA MCHENRY, she requested that we should write her obituary, and also that of her brother, JAMES M. NABORS, who died a few months previous, and to have them published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. After we have preached that there is power in the gospel to dissipate the fear of the consequences of death, it is a means of greatly increasing our faith and confidence in the truths which we have declared to witness the demonstration of them in the death scene of an intimate friend.

Sister McHenry died in DeSoto parish, February 27, 1874, aged thirty-one years. James M. Nabors died in Mansfield, Louisiana, of yellow fever October 31, 1873, aged twenty-one years.

Colonel James M. and Caroline Nabors, their parents, lived in Sheffield county, Alabama, where they were born and raised. Sister Mellbanks was educated at Summerfield, Alabama, where she graduated in 18[illegible]. She removed to Arkansas in 18[illegible] and was married to Thomas McHenry in 1861. He was killed in 1864, in Georgia, while in the Confederate service. She came to Louisiana in 1866, where her mortal remains rest. She was adorned with a finished education, but her most brilliant adorning was imparted to her by the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, which she professed at the early age of thirteen years; and then her pious example and wholesome religious counsels, during her whole life, adorned her profession. In the school-room during the week, and in the Sunday school on the holy Sabbath, where she often acted as superintendent, she imparted an influence which still lives and will long live in the hearts of the young whom she instructed. Her consumption was quickly developed and her decline was rapid; but she was ready. She died a most happy and triumphant death, exulting alike over the gloom of the grave and the terrors of death. A few of her exclamations, when far out into the Jordan of death, while looking heavenward were: "O heaven! Green pastures! Crystal fountains! No more sorrow! No more suffering! God himself shall wipe away all tears from our eyes." Little Tommy, her only child, (twelve years old, she has left. The Lord takes care of him, and many will respond: Amen.

James was her favorite brother, and she his best earthly friend. He joined the Methodist Church, in Shreveport, in 1871. A short time before his death he wrote to his sister that he had been praying earnestly, and believed that he had experienced a change of heart, and that his fear of death was removed, which he often repeated while on his death-bed. Though so young, he had acquired good business habits and considerable character as a merchant, in which business he was engaged when he died. He was liberal in benevolence. He had accumulated, by his personal efforts, several thousand dollars, which he left, by will, to his sister and nephew.

Sister and brother lie side by side in Mansfield cemetery. While we write pleasant memories cluster around our pen. But you have no space for long obituaries, and tears are in our way; so we must part awhile.

J. P.

MISS R. FANNIE MARTIN was born in Natchez, Mississippi, October 6, 1811, and died of consumption in Jackson, Mississippi, March 1, 1871.

Her religious experience was unique and affords a valuable illustration of the grace of God in the salvation of sinners. At the time of her conversion her father lived in Lauderdale county, Mississippi. The circumstances attending it can be best described in her own language. I quote from a letter now before me, written March 3, 1873:

"Some time previous to the [illegible] I began to feel sad and lonely. There seemed an emptiness in all around me. Nothing gave me any pleasure. I followed my usual round of dancing and card-playing, but they did not fascinate me as formerly. I felt a longing for something else. What it was I could not tell. One night in June, 1865 I [illegible] not remember what time in June, and I have always regretted that I did not fix it in my mind,) we had all retired very early, but I could not sleep. I was restless and uneasy. It seemed to me I was the most miserable being in the world. Suddenly I seemed to hear: 'Why don't you go to Jesus? He died for you as he calls you. Why don't you go to him?' In a moment I was in the attitude of prayer, making the first earnest petition I ever made in my life to God. How long I remained there I cannot tell you. I know I arose a changed being. I felt that I had found a friend in Jesus, and that he was my Savior. I determined to devote the rest of my life to his service, and to give up every hinderance to my piety. I was anxious to join the church and be baptized, but there was no church or minister near us than Meridian; so I had to wait. This troubled me, for I wanted all who knew me to know that I was done with the world and was going to serve the Lord. In January, 1[illegible] we moved to Jackson, Mississippi. As soon as I could I went to the Methodist church. The pastor soon came to see us. I told him my desire to join the church, and the next Sunday night, February 11, was set for me to do so. Never did church bells sound so sweetly to me as they did that night. I was received on trial and the fifth of the following May was baptized and received into full connection by Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt."

All who knew Miss Fannie will remember her intense piety, her consistent life, her uniform zeal for the church. She highly prized all the public, social and private means of grace, and was a faithful Sabbath-school teacher as long as her health allowed her to attend the Sabbath-school. She was instrumental in bringing her sister, Mrs. Stange, into the church, who preceded her to the better land about three months. They were devoted to each other in this life; and are they not the same in that peaceful clime where no sorrow is?

Her brother writes me as follows: "Sister Fannie knew that she could never get well, and said that she was willing to die. She was conscious, and knew everybody that came to her bedside, to the very last minute of her life. Bro. Galloway was with her in her last moments. She died as she had lived—a Christian."

THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 1874.

Ed Kavanaugh.

The pure, the bright, the beautiful,
That stirred our hearts in youth;
The impulse to a worthless prayer,
The dreams of love and truth;
The longings after something lost,
The spirit's yearning cry;
The strivings after better hopes—
These things can never die.

The timid hand stretched forth to aid
A brother in his need;
The kindly word in grief's dark hour,
That proves the friend indeed;
The plea for mercy, softly breathed,
When justice threatens nigh;
The sorrow of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.

The memory of a clasping hand,
The pressure of a kiss,
And all the trifles, sweet and frail,
That make up love's first bliss;
It with a firm, unchanging faith,
And holy trust and high,
These hands have clasped, those lips have met,
These things shall never die.

The cruel and the bitter word,
That wounded as it fell;
The chilling want of sympathy,
We feel, but never tell;
The hard rebuke, that chills the heart,
Whose hopes were bounding high,
In mute, unlasting record kept—
These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand
Must find some work to do;
Lose not a chance to waken love—
Be firm and just and true;
So shall a light that cannot fade
Beam on thee from on high,
And angel voices say to thee
These things shall never die.

All the Year Round.

The Typical Old Maid.

There are women with whom marriage forms no part of their plan of life. Nature has provided them with a temperament fitted for independence, and benignantly denied them attractions which might have interfered with their vocation. It is said of such women that they ought to be caught young to make tractable wives; but such women fulfill their purpose best single, and in that state rarely give rise to no regrets of misfit. Take, for example, Miss Priscilla, in Silas Marner—that picture of burly cheerfulness, undisturbed by the deceptions. She herself, the gentleman of her acquaintance, and the reader who recognizes the truth of the portrait, must all be of one mind as to her fitness for the calling she chose for herself, and for no other. Witness her satisfaction, not assumed, in her own plainness, and her endless comprehension of the Miss Lapps in her profession of that satisfaction. "I am ugly—there's no denying that; I feature my father's family; but, law! I don't mind, do you?" Witness her native antagonism to the opposite sex: "I've no opinion of the men, Miss Gunn. I don't know what you have. And as for getting and stewing about what they'll think of you, from morning to night, it's a folly no woman need be guilty of, if she's got a good father and a good home. As I say, Mr. Brace-your-own-way is the best husband and the only one I'd ever promise to obey." And again, her congratulating self-heresy to herself, as a birthright and vocation, reproaching her pretty sister for sitting on an addled egg (an unpromising choice) forever. "One old maid's enough in a family of two sisters; and I shall do credit to a single life, for God almighty meant me for it."

The highest type of old maid has made no sacrifice, nor is she in any sense a victim, for marriage, as a state, is not necessary to her idea of happiness; but she has none of that antagonism toward half the human race which Miss Priscilla makes her boast; nor is she one who has set herself against marriage, or whom no man has ever wished to marry. She is the woman who has never met her ideal, and who has never been cunningly persuaded to accept anything short of it.

Some women—the charming woman, for example—have not been allowed to keep their ideal. They have lost sight of it in finding themselves the ideal of some one else. Our typical vista has never been a charming woman, though she may have many excellent gifts and graces. Women are so made, happily for men, that gratitude, pity, the exquisite pleasure of pleasing, the sweet surprise of finding themselves necessary to another's happiness (or being flattered to the notion,) altogether obscure and confuse the judgment; they either forget their ideal altogether, or think they have found it in the very commonplace mortal who is their choice. But to some women this does not happen. The natural instinct to please is not strong in them. They only care to please where their taste and judgment approve, and their manner is cold or indifferent in general society.

It is not at all necessary that this unattractiveness should have to do with a conscious want of beauty. A beautiful woman, as far as color and outline constitute beauty, but failing of bewitching qualities, may repel admiration by indifference, and live to glorify the sisterhood to which her manner devotes her; but it is the woman of commonplace exterior and sensitive mind that is most commonly left alone with her ideal.

We believe that almost any woman who is not what is called "particular" may marry, if she chooses—that is, if she does not speculate upon herself, or share the world's unfavorable view of her personal pretensions. Again, persons of simple character, who don't think much about themselves, but enter cheerfully into the scene around them, pleased, amused, contented, have an unconscious attractiveness quite independent of laws of beauty. But our typical old maid is not intellectually simple, but complex, however mortally she is above worldly schemes for her own settlement in life. The present, except under circumstances of rare occurrence, does not engross her or absorb her interest. She has a mind looking before, after and about her—unless, indeed, she has benevolent plans of usefulness which concentrate her attention on some object—a posture of mind and body, we should say, which further removes woman from her bewitching attitude than any other. Whatever her interests and occupations, her own life, and what she is to make of it, is a present question with her. She does not wait for marriage to solve it; she feels it in her own hands. She has never met her ideal, or, if she has seen what might have been such, she has recognized an impossibility—constituted as she is—which must keep her apart from it. In good time she makes her destiny, her choice. She will indeed be nobody's idol. Nobody will love her best. No one will find out graces hid from the common gaze, but which she does not therefore believe non-existent. She will occupy no such place in society as, under favoring circumstances, she believes she could fill. She will preside over no home, constitute no family center and guide; she will miss what some, perhaps most women, consider the prizes of life, as well as its work and raison d'etre. But for all these prosperities she finds in her own case equivalents. She knows—her observation tells her—that the drawbacks to them which other women are blind to put up with, cheerfully ignore, ride over by a strong will, or by acts which she cannot approve, would go far to neutralize them in her case. She perceives, in fact, that these things are not for her. One prosperous, comfortable and blooming friend, for example, has a husband whose faults and disagreeable qualities would keep her ashamed and miserable. Another lives in ease and wealth, but has no control over the wealth she lives in—has to ask her husband if she wants five pounds for her own purposes, with a chance of being questioned or even refused. Another, a doting mother, has children whose weak health or unpromising tempers would hold her in gnawing anxiety. Another's time is taken up by pleasures or cares or business, which would all be to her an intolerable bondage.—Blackwood's Magazine.

David Friedrich Strauss.

With the death of David Friedrich Strauss a period in theological history may be said to close. He had outlived his literary fame, and had seen the rise and fall of his brilliant application of the mythical theory to the gospels. And yet it must be admitted that he has rendered indirect service to Christian learning by the vigorous defenses of truth which his "Life of Jesus" called forth.

David Friedrich Strauss was born in the kingdom of Wurtemberg in the year 1808. At the University of Tubingen he was the room-mate of our own Dr. William Nast, the founder of the German Methodist missions in the United States. In the year 1835 he published his "Life of Jesus Critically Examined," which may be said, by its audacity and yet great ability, to have astounded all Europe. The investigations into the sources of ancient history had long before led to the conviction that much of it was purely legendary, that poetical feeling had clothed the facts in ideal hues, and transformed men into gods and heroes. It was asked boldly: Why is not this true of Bible as well as other history? What reason is there to believe that the Scripture narratives are not mostly myths? The question was not, however, first asked by Strauss, nor was the mythical theory first applied by him to Scripture. He was but one of a school of theologians; his distinction is that he has followed out the theories of the school with greater fearlessness than any other writer of his time.

He had one great advantage in the fact that the theological world was just then wearied out with the absurdities of the rationalists and their method of Scripture interpretation. The rationalistic writers, starting with the assumption that the New Testament is historically true, but that the supernatural in it is all a mistake, had turned the whole record into nonsense. Whatever natural explanation could be plausibly suggested was foisted upon the history so as to put the supernatural out of sight. As a matter of course, some of these explanations were most ludicrous. It came at last to this: that it was far easier to believe the gospels taken in the supernatural than in the rationalistic sense. The former could be done, at least, without the stultification of the believer.

At this point Strauss used his advantage with terrible power; and the destruction which he visits upon the rationalistic interpretations is absolute. After him the rationalists are scarcely heard of. His own views that the gospels are the product of a mythical investiture of the facts, to which the disciples were prompted by their long-cherished dreams of a Messiah, he defends and enforces with great power, and in a style of crystal clearness. He is met, however, at the threshold of the discussion with a difficulty which he tries in vain to surmount. Myths belong to primitive ages only, in which no written records exist. For the growth of fabulous accretions upon history mankind must be dependent upon tradition, and the faculty of wonder must wholly dominate over the understanding. But Jesus lived at the very time of the culmination of ancient civilization, when literary production was active; when Roman roads, Roman arms, Roman culture had made of the world one society or state. The conditions for the growth of a Christian myth in Judea or Galilee were wholly wanting. Any tendency in that direction must have been instantly checked when it came into contact with the cool, logical habits of thought prevalent in the Roman world. We cannot imagine the clear, hard-headed Saul of Tarsus as likely to be imposed upon by a fable, especially when he could verify the essential facts of the gospels by appealing to living witnesses. Nor could Luke, who, as a physician, was a man of some culture. Does any one suppose that Paul's mental plane was that of child-like wonder, on which alone myths can flourish? Strauss tried to make the world believe this, but he totally failed.

We owe to Strauss, however, the great attention which, since 1835, has been given to the Life of Christ. Unwittingly he has been the occasion of the creation of this most valuable literature. Neander's answer appeared in 1837. As Strauss had demanded that all Christian prepossessions should, in this investigation, be dismissed as unscientific, Neander, at the very opening, claimed that the only work of science is to distinguish "the prepossessions which an inward necessity constrains us to recognize," from those which are subject to the will. Among the former he places our sense of dependence upon God, and our destination "to apprehend his revelation of himself in creation, nature and history." Rejecting thus the indifference of criticism, he still applies to the New Testament records a true critical spirit.

But the weakest point of all in Strauss' system of thinking was that, after having destroyed, as he supposed, the gospel history, he tried to hold the Life of Jesus as ideally true. What he meant by this it is impossible to tell. It seems that, like other destructives, he stood aghast at his work when it was done, and tried to reconstruct the idea, out of which, to the best of his ability, he had taken all the fact. So true is it that the idea of Christ is for the human race indestructible. How is it so many fail to see that this itself is a presumption of the truth of the history?—Methodist.

Permanence of Stones and Gems.

The characters graven on the rocks in a valley of the Sinaitic peninsula are still quite legible, though they must be of great antiquity, if not the actual workmanship of the Israelites during their wanderings there. One reason, and apparently a just one, assigned for the commandments being written on stone is that their permanent obligation might be thus indicated. But in many cases even the rocks themselves, by the long-continued action of air and moisture, undergo a gradual decay, and as they crumble down they often liberate, in all their integrity, the gems which had previously been imprisoned in their substance; and thus these gems are frequently proved to be more enduring than even the rocks themselves. Perhaps from a consideration such as this some of the Jews believed that the stones on which the Ten Commandments were engraved were not portions of an ordinary rock, but tablets made of some costly gem. If we look at a gallery of antiquities we cannot fail to observe that while the glass of the ancients has undergone every kind of change, the gems retain their integrity, and in some cases, as, for example, in that of the sard, even the original polish—a fact which Pliny had observed, for he declares that the sard retains its high polish longer than any other gem. A necklace of emeralds has been found among the ruins of Thebes; and even the engravings executed on gems by eminent artists in ancient times have lost nothing of their sharpness and elegance.

This character of permanence is in some instances strikingly illustrated even as regards color; thus the lapis lazuli, on which the ancients used largely to engrave, and which was also employed as a pigment under the name of ultramarine, is so unalterable in color that this very excellency proves a disadvantage in old paintings, for while the blue colors have faded it still retains its original freshness and brightness, and by its perpetual youth and unfading charms destroys the harmony of the painting. Zirconia, again, is the most infusible of earths, and is the main constituent of zircon or hyacinth; and the indestructible nature of the sapphire is the reason why it is used for drawing gold and silver wire through, because it is found that the holes do not enlarge, and thus the same thickness of wire is constantly secured.—Christian Treasury.

Dr. Guthrie's Method of Pulpit Preparation.

I used the simplest, plainest terms, avoiding anything vulgar, but always, where possible, employing the Saxon tongue—the mother tongue of my hearers. I studied the style of the addresses which the ancient and inspired prophets delivered to the people of Israel, and saw how, differing from dry disquisitions or a naked statement of truths, they abounded in metaphors, figures and illustrations. I turned to the gospels, and found that he who knew what was in man, what could best illuminate a subject, win the attention and move the heart, used parables or illustrations, stories, comparisons, drawn from the scene of nature and familiar life, to a large extent in his teachings, in regard to which a woman—type of the masses—said: "The parts of the Bible I like best are the 'likes.'"

Taught by such models, and encouraged in my resolution by such authorities, I resolved to follow, though it should be at a vast distance, these ancient masters of the art of preaching, being all the more ready to do so as it would be in harmony with the natural tone and bias of my own mind. I was careful to observe by the faces of my hearers, and also by the account the more intelligent of my Sunday class gave of my discourses, the style and character of those parts which had made the deepest impression, that I might cultivate it.

After my discourse was written I spent hours in correcting it, latterly always for that purpose keeping a blank page on my manuscript opposite a written one, cutting out dry bits, giving point to dull ones, making clear any obscurity, and narrative parts more graphic, throwing more pathos into appeals, and copying God in his works by adding the ornamental to the useful. The longer I have lived and composed I have acted more and more according to the saying of Sir Joshua Reynolds in his lectures on "Paintings," that God does not give excellence to men but as the reward of labor.—Extract from Autobiography of Dr. Guthrie.

The late Bishop Wilberforce was a skilled extemporaneous preacher. Being once asked if he did not use "notes," he replied: "Never." "But," said one of those by, "you always carry your sermon-case with you into the pulpit, and open it there with care, as if about to make use of its contents." "Yes," he said, "but generally there is nothing inside!"

Folks Who Get Their Backs Up.

I am aware that this caption is more expressive than polite. I would have spared the sensitiveness of my friends, and have shunned the weapons of unfriendly criticism, if I could have found another popular phrase equally true to the idea. The attitude is protestant and admonitory. It indicates grievance, and is declarative of war. It is common. There are a great many such folks in the world, and a large proportion in the church. You will find them in the Sunday school. The atmosphere of the choir is especially conducive to this deformity. Here it is generally chronic and continuous. Occasionally a deacon is afflicted by it, and I have seen an arched vertebra in the pulpit. A few Sundays since I saw a teacher lording down his class-book, and give a most splendid specimen of it, because the superintendent suggested, for the comfort of a crowded school, a more subdued tone in teaching; and a week or two after a superintendent was all up because of some criticisms on his management, and prepared to resign immediately, at the risk of throwing the whole school into confusion.

It may be that the deacon fancies that some matter of church business has been done and he has not been consulted (and of course deacons should be consulted), and immediately there is seen a spinal curvature that is formidable to behold. Some downy gossip has floated into the ears of the leading sister of the church with regard to her management of the last festival, and forthwith an ungracious bend diversifies the prevailing fashion, and you will hear in the prayer meeting something about "not wanting to be in anybody's way, and a willingness to let anybody take the lead, and somebody will be sure to follow."

Perhaps a hint has been dropped that the pastor's presence would be agreeable a little more frequently in the houses of the poorer members of his flock, or a glint of a suggestion with regard to the style of preaching, and immediately there is a rise in broadcloth that will require much coaxing and patting to reduce. Leading sopranos and tenors are greatly afflicted with the feline peculiarity.—Silverpen.

Nathan Rothschild, of London.

The high priest of the Exchange was not happy even in the midst of his overflowing coffers. Naturally enough he had few friends and numberless enemies. In his later years he suffered from constant dread of assassination. He was always receiving threatening letters, declaring that his life depended on his sending certain sums of money to certain addresses. He scented murder in every breeze, suspected poison in every cup. In sleep he had nightmare visions of crouching things; in waking hours he started at every unexpected noise.

One morning two strangers were announced as having important business with the banker, and they were shown into his private office. He bowed to them and inquired the nature of their negotiations. They bowed and said nothing, but advanced toward him, thrusting their fingers nervously into their pockets. Rothschild's alarm was excited at once. They must be searching for concealed weapons; their bearded faces made it clear to his frightened fancy that they were homicidal ruffians. He retreated in terror behind a large desk, seized a ponderous ledger, hurled it at their heads, and screamed "murder" at the top of his voice. A small army of clerks poured into the room, and laid violent hands on the strangers, who proved to be wealthy Polish bankers bringing letters of introduction to the physically timid lion of loans. Embarrassed by his auriferously august presence—what is there in a breathing money-bag capable of inspiring awe?—they forgot their speech and their common coolness of conduct. They were nearly as much terrified as the renowned Israelite, and, as it was their initial visit to England, they imagined at first that all foreigners were deemed robbers and desperadoes until the contrary was established.

The wretchedly rich Nathan never went out alone after dark, never entered an unlighted room, had servants within call of his bed-chamber, slept with loaded pistols under his pillow.—Harper's Magazine.

ESQUIMAUX MARRIAGE CEREMONIES.—In an account of the marriage ceremonies of the Esquimaux, given by Dr. Hayes, he says: "The match is made by the parents of the couple. The bridegroom must go out and capture a polar bear, as an evidence of manly courage and strength. Then he is told he can marry, if so inclined; and, like most bachelors, he is generally so inclined. He sneaks behind the door of his inamorata, and when she comes out he pounces upon her and undertakes to bear her away to his dog-sledge. She kicks, bites, screams and breaks away from him. He chases her, and the old women of the settlement come out with frozen strips of sealskin and give her a thwack. After running the gauntlet of these old women, she falls down exhausted and surrenders. The bridegroom then lashes her to his sledge, and, whipping up his dogs, they fly over the frozen snow, and the wedding is consummated."

WISDOM OF SILENCE.—A courtier of Alexander the Great paid a visit to the studio of Apelles, the celebrated painter, and was received with the consideration due to his rank. This excited his vanity, and unhappily he talked about the art of painting, exposing his ignorance in a variety of questions and criticisms. Apelles interrupted him at length in a low voice: "Do you see those boys that are grinding my colors? While you were silent, they admired you, dazzled with the splendor of the purple and gold with which your habit glitters; but ever since you began to talk about what you do not understand, they have done nothing but laugh at you."

Religious Intelligence.

DR. TALMAGE'S church in New York has received two hundred and seventy new members by conversion.

THE Observer says the fund for the relief of Presbyterian ministers is exhausted, and cases of great interest are importunately pressing.

THE contest with the Jesuits is severe in South America. They are contumacious still, and the Bishop of Pernambuco has been sentenced to four years' imprisonment for continued resistance to the laws of the State.

THE London Mirror says it has had the pleasure, during the past year, of recording the distribution of no less than eighty donations of £1,000 each, and one of £5,000, to London charities, in addition to a multitude of sums of a smaller amount.

IN California church property is taxed. The measure was adopted originally on account of the vast estates held there by the Catholics at the time of the cession of the territory by Mexico to the United States. The Protestants accept the situation without complaint.

REV. PAOLO GRASSI, canon of the Basilica di Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome, has renounced the Romish faith, and been baptized and admitted to the Lord's Supper in the Baptist chapel at Rome. It is stated that attempts have been made by papists to poison him.

THE Protestant Episcopal Mission Board during 1873 sent out fourteen ordained missionaries—one to Africa, one to China, four to Japan and seven to Hayti. A missionary physician was also appointed for Japan, a lady to Africa and two native Chinese as missionaries at Shanghai.

TIDINGS continue to be received of the progress of Protestantism in France. Even the political papers are noticing that in Lyons the Roman Catholic populations are sending their children to the Protestant schools until they overflow, and new schools conducted by Protestants are being opened.

THE theological school of the Madura mission has for thirty years been located at Pasumalai, near the city of Madura. Nearly two hundred and fifty of its pupils have been engaged as preachers and teachers in evangelizing their countrymen. It was at this school that the Scriptures were translated into the Tamil language, after more than ten years of labor.

THE new premises of the Fiji Islands Training Institution, of the Wesleyan mission, were opened at Navuloa in March last. About 4,000 chiefs and people, from all parts of the group, were present. An address was made by the King, who "rejoiced greatly in the institution." The number of pupils this year is 55. The number of nominal Christians in the group of islands has risen 109,000.

THOSE who have been aware of the [illegible] several German missionaries at Kumasi (Commassie,) the capital of Ashanti, will rejoice to hear that one of them has been released, and sent to sue for terms of peace with the English army, which, according to the most recent telegraphic reports, was only a day's march distant from the Ashantee capital. Other dispatches state that all the captives have been released.

THE Baptist Missionary Magazine makes the following comparison between the contributions of leading denominations to the foreign mission cause: "In 1870 the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions received $1.08 per member, the American Board $1.03, Reformed Church .33, Episcopal .31½, Methodist Episcopal .23½, Baptist .19 4-5." The reason of the relatively small figures for the Baptists is that they have a large Southern and Western membership, not yet educated to support foreign missions.

PAUL EMANUEL HYACINTHE LOYOLA is the name of Pere Hyacinthe's son. He was recently baptized. Supplemental to the baptism, the forehead and breast of the infant were anointed and signed with the sign of the cross. Salt was put in the mouth, and a bit of saliva on the ears and nostrils. A white robe was placed on the child, and a small lighted candle in his hand. A curious Old Catholic baptism, and one that could scarcely be distinguished from any that might have been administered by a genuine priest of his holiness Pius the Ninth.

THE CHRISTIANS IN BOSNIA.—A Vienna correspondent says: "The political questions arising out of the persecution of Christians in Croatia and Bosnia have been finally and satisfactorily settled. The Porte has released and granted a free pardon to the Christians from Banyalouka confined at Serngevo, though there is said to have been damaging evidence against them. The Christians from Gradisca who have fled into Austria are amnestied by the same decree. Their permission to return into Turkey is, however, made dependent upon their petition to the provincial Turkish authorities."

THERE are more Mohammedans in Bengal than in the Turkish empire, while there is in the former country no political restraint to keep them such. The Calcutta Bible Society has recently been encouraged to make new efforts in circulating the Scriptures among the Mohammedans. It having been discovered that many of them are silently interested in finding out what Christianity is, and that the Bible is being read in places where no missionary has ever preached. This is an encouraging offset to the fanatical Mohammedan revival in late years. Nor are Mohammedans the only ones thus affected. "At the late meeting of the Calcutta Missionary Conference," says the Free Church Record, "the conviction was generally expressed that the Spirit of God is working in the hearts of the people in not a few places which the missionaries are not known to have visited. The simple reading of the Scriptures is often leading to much inquiry." It is becoming quite common to meet with or to hear of believers unconnected with any of the missionary societies.

A STATUE of the martyred Bishop Patteson has been placed in Christ church, Sydney, on the north side of the chancel. This cenotaph is of that kind usually known as an "altar-tomb," and is from the chisel of Mr. Apperley, of that city. The pose of the incumbent figure and the general effect remind the spectator of the cenotaph or altar-tomb of Bishop Broughton in St. Andrew's cathedral. It bears in old English letters these words: "John Coleridge Patteson, D. D., first Bishop of Melanesia. Killed at Nukapu, Santa Cruz Islands, 20th September, 1871." At the head: "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep;" and at the base: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." The Bishop is represented as lying upon a mattress, his head reposing upon a cushion, and his uplifted hands folded as in prayer. The episcopal habit, as retained by the Anglican Church, has been skillfully treated. The sculptor has also been successful in reproducing the face of the Bishop, having secured a strong likeness, and at the same time preserved the characteristic gentleness, earnestness and indomitable resolution, blended together in his features.

METHODISM IN BALTIMORE.—As a matter that may be of interest in connection with the celebration on Sunday, February 8, of the centenary anniversary of the completion of the Dallas Street Methodist Episcopal Church, some facts about the establishment of Methodism in Baltimore, brought out on the occasion, are given. John King was the first man who preached Methodism in this city, five years before the assemblage of the first Annual Conference. His first pulpit was a blacksmith's block, at the intersection of Front and French streets. His next sermon was from a table at the corner of Baltimore and Calvert streets. The first Annual Conference of Methodist preachers in America was held in Philadelphia, from the fourteenth to the sixteenth of July, 1773, consisting of ten preachers, and the membership was then 1,160, half of whom were in Maryland. Among the appointments to Baltimore by that Conference the first name is that of Francis Asbury, who afterward became a Methodist Bishop. In November, 1773, he laid the corner-stone of the Strawberry alley (now Dallas street) church, and it is undoubtedly the oldest original meeting-house in the city. On April 18, 1774, the Lovely Lane chapel was started. In this chapel, a few weeks before the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the Annual Conference was held, with 25 ministers and a membership of 4,921. The first General Conference assembled within its walls on Christmas day, 1784, and here Asbury, the pioneer Bishop of the Methodists in the New World, received his ordination. The first Light Street church was dedicated by Bishop Asbury on the twenty-first of [illegible] October, 1797, and was rebuilt ten months after, and stood for more than seventy years. It was removed for the opening of German street. Bishop Asbury dedicated a large number of churches, and many structures reared at the present day bear his name. It is stated that in the Methodist Episcopal Church at this time there are now 70 Conferences, 22,560 local and traveling preachers, and about 1,500,000 members.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

THE Church Missionary Intelligencer gives an account of a journey to one of the famous Hindoo places of pilgrimage—Amarnath, in Cashmere. The road leads through a succession of valleys, which grow higher and more Alpine in their character, among rocks and beside glaciers. After laborious and dangerous travel among precipices and through unbridged mountain torrents, where some of the weaker or more aged pilgrims are apt to succumb and die, the towering Himalayan mountain is reached on which Amarnath is situated. The object of the pilgrims in making their journey, which has frequently extended over thousands of miles, is to have a "darshan," or sight of the deity, the merit of which lies in following certain difficult paths in approaching and retiring from Amarnath. Having arrived at an elevation where the cold becomes very trying to the pilgrims from the plains of India, the last ascent is made over about a mile of snow, and the cave of Amarnath is reached. The cave is only an exposed hollow in a gypsum rock. The sight of the "darshan," or Hindoo deity, Shiva, consists of three things: a mutilated black stone image of the bull of Shiva; a huge block of ice, clear as crystal, on which a blanket is spread and the offerings of the pilgrims laid, in sums small and great; a number of pigeons in the holes of the rock, one or more of which fly out as a party of pilgrims shout some sacred phrase in the cave, and herein lies the climax of the "darshan." The money which is gathered is divided between the Rajah of the province, the Pundits and the half-naked ochre and vermillion-smeared Togees, or devotees of Shiva, who, continually intoxicated, boast of their poverty, chastity and life of prayer and praise. On the day which the missionary who made the journey spent near the cave of Amarnath some seven thousand pilgrims, from the Rajah's son down to the coolie carriers, were encamped on the plain at the foot of the sacred mountain. Very few of them seemed to have any fervent desire to find and see God, their notions being of a low and sensual character. On the return from Amarnath the missionary mingled with the pilgrims, and now and then addressed groups of them, finding some susceptible hearts and some who were anxious to purchase copies of the Scriptures and other religious books, especially the "Pilgrim's Progress." Several of the pilgrims who listened most earnestly were Sikhs, whose knowledge of their own Nanuk books, from which they quoted freely, seemed to prepare their minds for the gospel.—Independent.

The Cheerful Giver.

It is said that the Jews had in the temple two chests for alms; the one was for what the law required, the other was for free-will offerings. There were those who gave from necessity and grudgingly, and others who went beyond the legal demand and offered willingly. In giving, as in other aspects of religion, it would seem that there are legalists, under the spirit of bondage to fear, who perform this duty not from love, but from a servile motive. It is something they do not enjoy, and they only touch it at all because they apprehend that their souls are in jeopardy. They grudge every dollar; they would most gladly withhold the meager offering if they did not tremble at the prospect of the final judgment. What conscience compels them to contribute is a burden, going against the grain of their feelings, and almost arousing in them a spirit of rebellion against a dispensation which places money in such vital relations to Christian usefulness and responsibility. Perhaps this legal spirit is better than absolute indifference, because there is some conscience on the subject, and this may at length yield to a higher and purer development of gospel principle.

In looking about us it is evident that much of the religious giving is from other than the best incentives to benevolence. Public opinion, the pressure of appeals under the eye and ear of a large assembly, or the printed exhibit of benefactions, induce people to make contributions, who, if no publicity were possible, would do much less or nothing whatever. Some yield merely to importunate solicitation, and part with their money in order to get rid of those who disturb their quiet and interrupt their habitual tranquillity. A moment's reflection upon the exceeding difficulty of persuading people to come anywhere near the mark of their ability, and the tremendous labor required in order to obtain any adequate support for Christian enterprises, is sufficient to exhibit the constraint and the grudging with which the most of our giving is done. It is humiliating to witness the many expedients to which the churches resort; such as attractive entertainments, and other methods sometimes of a doubtful character, for the purpose of supporting and spreading the gospel. Even religious people must be wrought up to an unusual and extraordinary pitch of excitement, and every conceivable motive and inducement must be appealed to, and the solicitations must be pressed to the verge of irreverence and impudence in order that they may be brought to the minimum of liberality. It is not seldom the case that the missionary anniversary neutralizes the spiritual benefits of the Annual Conference; and too often in our collections it would seem that success depends upon getting as far away as possible from everything that is sacred or solemnizing in its character. Can we venture in these times to tell an audience or an individual, "not grudgingly or of necessity," that we will accept of only so much as a man purposeth in his heart; and that all that men would give, because others give, and because of reputation and social influences, and the publicity of their giving, had better be retained by its possessors? The cheerful giver is he who gives "according as he purposeth in his heart," rather than according to the pressure of constraints in which there is no freeness of love. He that giveth is admonished to do it "with simplicity"—that is, with a single eye and with an unselfish purpose.

Accessory views, and motives debased by the admixture of pride and worldly ends, complicate and degrade the offering. It is not unusual to hear men tell of their generosity; and we fear that multitudes who give would give nothing if they were assured that the matter should never be heard of until the end of the world. Then, again, how much of the religious giving is done petulantly, under protest, as it were, and with a complaining spirit? Christian privileges cost too much, missions are over-expensive, these demands for benevolence and religion are too many, and the worry and burden are becoming intolerable. It is thus that many feel, it is thus that they talk. They would be glad to be rid of the whole thing. They give, but not willingly. They are under a necessity, and it is grudgingly that they submit to what they regard as unreasonable exactions. What they give is of covetousness rather than of bounty—the act gives pain most exquisite, and when done they would, if possible, recall the gift. The cheerful giver, the man with "a bountiful eye," who gives with simplicity, whose offerings are from a deep heart-purpose, and who seeks the object and the opportunity, is comparatively rare. But, if rare, the special seal of God's approbation is upon him. "God loveth a cheerful giver." How he regards the other sort we are left to infer. If he does not hate, he surely loves them less. The churl who gives stintedly and sorrowfully, by constraint and not willingly, will doubtless be rewarded according to his works. The liberal soul, to whom giving is more joyous than psalm-singing, and whom the opportunity thrills with the keenest pleasure, abides under this singular benediction: God loves him. Here is a character in which the infinite Father takes special delight, and the act and the manner of its performance have this high and remarkable commendation.

The reason of such a peculiar and exalted estimate may lie in the fact that the cheerful giver is after God's own heart, and also practically like him who gives freely and abundantly. How God gives, and with what overflowing bountifulness, and with what freeness, are seen in all his [illegible] places. "Every good and the perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights. All the wealth of creation, all the wisdom and glory in redemption, are exhibitions of God as the giver. We can hardly conceive of him otherwise than as an ever-outpouring fountain whose streams refresh the universe, and as a sun whose beams traverse all space, and break in jeweled splendor upon the most distant worlds. It is most like God to give, and altogether like him to give cheerfully. The cheerful giver therefore stands apart, distinguished by an act which is noblest in itself, and most nobly done. It is something striking, at least, if to many it be not startling and fearful, that the pen of inspiration has singled out this one aspect of Christian duty and life, and stamped it with this pre-eminence. Not to give, and not to give cheerfully, in the light of this declaration, is at once a calamity and a condemnation. There are other duties and other graces of surpassing dignity and value, but this one of giving is culled out from the illustrious company and anointed and crowned. One phase of Christian life does by no means exhaust the religious character, but the relative importance may be inferred from the declaration that "God loveth the cheerful giver." How many does God love in this way?

Letter from Bishop Marvin.

THE REVIVAL IN ST. LOUIS.

MR. EDITOR: About midwinter the most extraordinary revival sprang up in St. Louis that has ever been known in the city. It has been carried on by means of union meetings, participated in by the ministers of all the evangelical churches. These meetings are conducted in a manner altogether new to me. There has been but little preaching in the ordinary acceptation of the word. There are several short exhortations by different persons. Usually one man, who takes the leading part, reads a brief passage of Scripture and comments upon it. The comment is brief. This is not generally the opening exercise, but comes in after several short talks, interspersed with prayers and singing. After this opportunity is given for any one in the congregation to speak, especially young converts. They are expected to speak of their own experience, but sometimes they speak in the way of exhortation. Then follows what they call the second meeting, or the inquiry meeting, for it is designated by both of these terms.

At the end of the first meeting it is understood that all who desire to leave are at liberty to do so. But, as a rule, all remain; and the crowds have been very great. The largest houses have been used. The Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church South was used for some time, and it was packed on the floor and in the gallery. It is an immense structure. Yet all this mass of men, women and children would remain for the inquiry meeting.

Now about this inquiry meeting. It was a study to me at first. The modus operandi is simply this: Christian people, ministers and laymen, men and women, go through the congregation, conversing with those who are unconverted. But how do they know who to approach? Why they approach anybody, no matter who, and ask him if he is a Christian. If so, all right—no harm is done; if not, then the matter of personal religion is urged upon him. It is wonderful what courage has been developed in the people of God in this way, and what an amount of work has been done, both in the meetings and promiscuously through the city. Hundreds who have been inactive heretofore have become effective workers.

Many meetings have been held, especially for children, with wonderful effect. Large numbers of youth, I doubt not, have been truly converted, and many have come into the church.

The meetings have not been confined to churches. The two largest halls in the city, and an immense opera house, have been put into requisition occasionally, and none of them have been sufficient to accommodate the crowd. Hundreds, perhaps sometimes thousands, have been compelled to go away.

The principal instrument in the work has been the celebrated traveling evangelist, Rev. E. P. Hammond. Several of the preachers were reluctant, at first, to co-operate with him. He said and did things they did not relish. What created the greatest dissatisfaction was that he often related laughable anecdotes. But after attending a few of his meetings the most cautious began to co-operate heartily with him. They were brought to this by several considerations. In the first place, they saw that, notwithstanding Mr. Hammond often excited a laugh, and sometimes a loud laugh, by his anecdotes, yet the last impression in every service was serious, and the whole effect was to awaken serious thought on the subject of religion. They found also that in doctrine he was thoroughly evangelical. But, best of all, they found that wicked men on all sides were deeply awakened, and crying: What must we do to be saved? and many began to rejoice in the knowledge of sins forgiven. In many cases conviction was deep and pungent, and conversion clear and joyful. All the marks of a genuine work of grace, except such as the test of time only can bring out, were present.

In this state of the case all the evangelical pastors of English-speaking churches in the city came heartily into the work. I say all, but perhaps I ought to except one or two, whose idiosyncrasies often appear.

I have said that Mr. Hammond was the chief instrument of the work. It is but just to say that the way was well prepared for him. This was done by a series of union meetings which had been held in the various churches for some months before his arrival. These meetings contemplated especially the securing of a better observance of the Sabbath day in our city. But while this was the case, many of the addresses delivered were of a very awakening character. So the various denominations were already in some measure accustomed to working with each other, and there had been a great awakening of the Christian conscience, and, beyond that, some conviction of sin among the unconverted, before the arrival of Mr. Hammond.

All the churches have done nobly, and all the pastors are drawn very close together. I may mention especially one Lutheran minister, a most thoroughly evangelical man, two Baptists and all the Methodists and Presbyterians in the city. Perhaps I am a little too fast. One or two Methodist preachers, I suppose, must be excepted. But the active pastors went into it heart and soul.

I think, indeed, it would be right to accord the Southern Methodist preachers some pre-eminence in the work. They led the way in the organization of the Sabbath Association, and the Evangelical Alliance, which did the preparatory work so well. They also led in the movement to invite Mr. Hammond. Since the revival began they "have labored and have not fainted." Without stint, night and day, they have given themselves to the work. But in this they have not excelled others. Many ministers of the other churches have done all that human strength enabled them to do. It has been a glorious emulation of loving labor for souls and for the Master.

I think it likely that as many as two thousand souls have been converted, perhaps more. This is conjectural. The converts are of all classes. Some are captains of steamboats—men of the highest respectability. Some are leading merchants. Many are substantial citizens from various avocations. Many are common laborers. Many are persons who had not been in the house of God for years. It even reached the worst classes—gamblers, thieves and Magdalens. Two professional thieves I know of. One house of ill fame was broken up by the conversion of the proprietress and the greater part of the inmates. The Christian people did a very Christ-like part in finding suitable employment for these outcasts, and providing maintenance for them until employment could be found. Some of the victims of infamy had strange stories to tell. They had been inveigled into this dreadful life, not knowing at first where they were going. Some, strangers and penniless, seeking employment, had been led into these dens, supposing them to be respectable places. Once there, in sheer despair, having no place to go for shelter or bread, they gave themselves up. Some of them had left good country homes, and had come to the city, thinking to find sewing or other suitable work. One or two of these have been sent to their friends, and received by them as if they had come back from the grave.

Mr. Hammond gives no preference to any one church over another, but urges his converts to unite with the church of their choice. He warns them of the danger of attempting to serve God outside, and insists that they shall seek regular pastoral instruction.

It is now three weeks since Mr. Hammond left, and the work still goes on. There are many awakenings and conversions every week. Some very remarkable cases occurred among prominent citizens last week. This is Monday, and the meetings are going on through this week again. I have heard of new cases of awakening among business men this morning. May it never end!

At my last information there had been three hundred and forty-five accessions to our churches in the city, besides many in the country charges in St. Louis county. By this time there are several others, and the whole number, even if the work should stop now, will probably not fall much short of four hundred in the city and two hundred and fifty in the county. But the work will not stop at its present point. A good proportion of those who have joined our churches are of the class of permanent citizens.

What we want now is a high state of religious life in the church. May our pastors and people be adequate to the work of training these young converts.

ST. LOUIS, March 30, 1874.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: Bishop Keener accomplished much, during his short sojourn, in the way of business, besides bringing with him and leaving behind him, religiously and socially, gracious benedictions. Our chapel, the Capilla de San Andres, is paid for, and the receipts and deeds are in our possession. It is hard work to buy property here, and not much less difficult to pay for it after it is bought. In addition, the Bishop placed me in funds for its enlargement and necessary adornment. In a few days the work will begin. The time fixed upon for its completion is three months. So we hope, by the close of the General Conference, to have it completed, and filled every Sabbath with anxious hearers. When finished it will be one of the most attractive and convenient houses in Mexico. It occupies a corner lot, on a prominent street, within a stone's throw of the Mineria and the halls of Congress. And another not unimportant advantage: it is on the sunny side of the street. When you and your readers are better posted relative to Mexico, you will more fully appreciate this fact. There is a difference, I suppose, of twenty-five per cent. in favor of property thus situated. Besides, the Bishop took the initiative in the purchase of another piece of property, situated in one of the most attractive parts of the city. Since his departure I have carried forward his plans, and hope to have the transfer perfected before you receive my letter. For reasons quite obvious, I must not be more explicit. The bare possession of this property will give us great moral power, and, with a neat modern chapel erected thereon, will increase our influence for good wonderfully. Such a chapel will present a telling contrast to the gloomy, somber-faced cathedrals under whose shadows it will rest. I hope that some one Conference will take to itself the building of this modern Southern Methodist church in the City of Mexico, as a special privilege, in addition to regular missionary contributions. Can I count on my own Conference to be among the first to send in a bid? I would have the name of such Conference engraved upon native marble and placed in the building.

I have rented a hall, and will in a few days open another place of worship. It is centrally located, and the promise of a large congregation is good. We have added two new preachers to our list. One of them is an interesting young man, a native, who spends two hours per day at my house, teaching me Spanish, and at the same time learning English. He gives promise of great usefulness. The other is a man of settled years, an enthusiastic Mason, and was president of one of the first Protestant conventions held in Mexico. He is a man of no mean ability and influence.

Our government here, all honor to it, has done much, and gives promise of doing much more, in the direction of schools of high and low grade. I know of no government whose policy in this particular is more liberal. Colleges, high schools, schools of art and science are established here and there, affording the youth of the land full educational facilities. But though these schools were doubled in number, still there is a great work for our church to accomplish. In this field the harvest is whitest. Here we must thrust in the sickle. Let the matter of sending young men to your schools and colleges, to your Christian families and Christian influences, have immediate attention. A wonderful work has been wrought among these people.

I design opening yet another place of worship at an early day. There are people enough for many more. The difficulty does not lie in this direction. We lack men and means. I often think, as I look out upon teeming masses of people, that if our whole church could see things as we see them—the throngs and throngs of wandering, hungry, starving people, sheep without a shepherd—her missionary spirit would be mightily moved.

I am happy to say that the government gives us all the protection in its power. In its spirit and design the Mexican republic is as free and liberal as our government. It is struggling to raise, exalt and ennoble its citizens. And it is eminently worthy of the respect and sympathy of the civilized world.

I have been so much engaged in my work and in the study of Spanish that I have been unable to visit the country or surrounding cities, and am therefore unprepared to give you items of interest of a general character. The fact is, I am so drawn out in spirit toward the religious relief of these people that I have but little disposition to write about anything else.

Wishing you all prosperity in your church enterprises, I am, very affectionately, JOEL T. DAVES.

CITY OF MEXICO, February 20, 1874.

The Service of Song.

The excellent work bearing the above title is familiar to most of our readers. The author is the Rev. A. G. Stacy, is a member of the Texas Conference, and, president of the Austin Female College. Rev. B. T. Kavanaugh, D. D., writing in the Galveston Christian Advocate, recommends that the "Service of Song" be put in the course of study for the undergraduates of our Conferences. Dr. Kavanaugh says:

The book has many distinguishing features—too many to be noticed here in detail. Its style is elevated, clear and fascinating; the scope and depth of the investigation of the subjects treated of are full and comprehensive; every phase and aspect of the subjects involved have been fully considered, and such doctrines set forth, and conclusions arrived at, by a fair and philosophical course of reasoning, that cannot fail to conduct the mind of the unprejudiced and pious reader to a just and fair estimate of the magnitude of the "Service of Song" in the worship of God and the cultivation of the purest and noblest elements of our spiritual natures.

While reading these instructive and richly-adorned pages, which grow in interest upon the mind in every part, I could not resist the conclusion, as the result of my most deliberate judgment, that the "Service of Song" should be incorporated into the course of study for the undergraduates of our Conferences, to qualify them, as ministers, for a proper understanding and appreciation of this very important part of religious worship.

That something of the kind is called for, and the necessity of it is felt, is evident from the fact that, for a time, the hymn-book was made a part of the course of study! While that was the case we found but few persons who were prepared to explain the specific points to be studied, or what questions would be asked in an examination upon it. Without the aid of such a work as that now presented in the "Service of Song," not one in a thousand could possess an adequate knowledge of the subject; but, with the benefits of the extensive labors and researches of Bro. Stacy, the subject is presented in a clear and forcible point of light; and, when understood, the wonder is that so very important and indispensable a part of ministerial and Christian education had not been presented to the church long ago.

The extensive circulation and study of this valuable book among earnest Christians and ministers of the gospel cannot fail to place sacred music in a higher position than ever before, and the valuable service of sacred song will be better understood and more appreciated than in the past.

THE New Orleans District Conference opened its session in the Carondelet Street church, in this city, on Thursday, the second instant, and adjourned on Saturday night, the fourth instant. The preachers of the district were nearly all present. The attendance of laymen was not large. Bishop Keener was present and sometimes in the chair. The state of each pastoral work was inquired into, and a fair condition of spiritual prosperity exists in most of the charges. The love-feast and the sacramental meeting were well attended, and were occasions of much interest and profit. Among the visiting brethren we were glad to meet Rev. J. W. Rush of Mobile, and Rev. Dr. Marshall of Vicksburg. The following were elected as trustees of the Seashore camp meeting for the ensuing year: W. H. Foster, J. H. Keller, B. O. Rayne, Philip Hallarau, G. W. Goodwyn, J. J. Lyons, William Otis, H. C. Vaughn, John Ellsworth. Delegates to the Annual Conference: W. H. Foster, W. H. N. Mugruder, John H. Keller, J. J. Lyons. Reserves: W. B. Thompson, Rev. Lewis A. Reed.

The next session is to be held in the Louisiana Avenue church, Sixth District, New Orleans.

BISHOP KEENER preached a missionary sermon at the Carondelet Street church on Sunday morning, the fifth instant. The sermon was followed by a collection for missions. The Sunday school was pledged for $500, the Louisiana Avenue mission school for $100, and above $500 was obtained in cash and subscriptions, amounting altogether to something over $1,100. For the times Carondelet has done very well. We hope all the churches in the Conference will take their missionary collections early in the year, and do as well in proportion to their ability.

THE anniversary of the New Orleans District Sunday School Union was held at the Carondelet Street church on Sunday afternoon last. It rained hard, but the church was filled, and the exercises, consisting chiefly of speaking and singing by the children, were highly entertaining. As a fitting conclusion to a most delightful entertainment, Dr. C. K. Marshall made one of his happy impromptu addresses, which thrilled and astonished and pleased both old and young.

ENTERTAINMENT.—The ladies will give an entertainment at Minerva Hall, on Clio street, for the benefit of the Louisiana Avenue church and mission school. The entertainment begins next Tuesday night, the fourteenth instant, at half-past seven o'clock. The object should commend itself to all Christian people. The church and school are doing a great work at the corner of Louisiana Avenue and Magazine street, and are in need of help. We sincerely hope that all will rally to the aid of this important interest.

CONDITIONS OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.—We have about all and probably more on hand than we can publish on this subject. Our readers are getting tired of the discussion, and we must come to their relief by declining to publish much more in this line. Dr. Pierce has presented his views. It is fair that the other side should be heard; but we have about enough. If the discussion should lead to carefulness and vigilance on the part of pastors it will not have been in vain.

THE most gracious and extensive revival in Fayetteville station, Arkansas Conference, continues, says the Western Methodist, as we learn by letter from the veteran pastor, Rev. J. J. Roberts, who writes, March 26: "The great revival of the work of God in Fayetteville station is still moving onward. Although in the seventh week of this gracious work, the flame rises higher and higher, with no indications of any abatement of interest. Eighty-three souls have been converted and fifty-two have joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and many more will be added. Our house has been crowded to its utmost capacity for the last six weeks. I hope to be able to give some items of this great work soon. Allow me to say to all Methodist preachers: Stick close to the Discipline and all will be well." Send those items—they will be read with interest.

REV. ABRAM ADAMS writes us, says the Pacific Methodist of March 17, that Los Nietos Collegiate Institute opened with a fuller attendance of pupils than was expected—over forty were enrolled. The prospect for increase is good.

PREACHING.—The majority of persons who come to church want simple, direct, gospel preaching. This is true of men of high and of low estate. They want what comes home to their business and bosoms, what addresses their hearts rather than their heads. They are heart-hungry for God's pure word.

The Special Meeting.

The series of services appointed to be held in Galveston for the promotion of God's cause, says the Galveston Christian Advocate, were inaugurated in the Opera House on Sunday night, March 22, which was kindly tendered, free of charge. The pastors of the Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist churches closed their houses of worship, and joined with Mr. Hammond, the God-honored evangelist. The Opera House seats some fourteen hundred; but, as many stood, we suppose we are understating when we say there were full fifteen hundred in the house, and hundreds went away for want of room. Many at this meeting were deeply impressed, and said to the ministers, who conversed with them at the close of the exercises, that they desired and were resolved to be Christians.

On Monday, at twelve o'clock, there was a large prayer meeting at the Baptist church, as it is the most central. On Tuesday a crowded congregation met at the same house, and we had a precious meeting. On Wednesday, at twelve o'clock, it was pouring rain, but scores were there.

On Wednesday evening a delegation of seven ministers and thirteen laymen and ladies, all of them active workers, came into the city through the rain. The meeting was appointed at the St. John's Methodist church, as it is the largest. The streets were sloppy, our pavements are poor (an improvement greatly needed here,) but people came out until every pew in our large church was crowded. The service consisted in song, frequent brief prayers, and short and stirring addresses by various ministers. The leadership of the meeting was in the hands of Mr. Hammond, who made two or three addresses. The efforts of the night were mainly directed to a consideration of the early conversion of children. Many great facts were stated; many remarkable incidents, all pertinent to the matter in hand, were related. These exercises continued until at least half-past nine, when what Mr. Hammond calls the "second meeting" began. This "second meeting" is conducted in this way: Instead of inviting a few to come forward, and spending strength and time on them, the congregation is informed that ministers and Christians are going out into the audience to inquire of every one whether they love Jesus and are trying to serve God. All who do not wish such conversation are at liberty to go away. But on Wednesday night many remained, both children and adults. While the ministers and live Christians were conversing with and pointing many to Jesus, the choir, with many others, were singing praises. Great solemnity and spiritual power rested on the people; hundreds were in tears of penitence, concern for others, or rejoicing in Christ. Quite a number of the young found the savior precious. The meeting continued till nearly eleven o'clock at night.

THE exploring and excavating fever is very generally prevalent both in Bible and classical lands. Palestine, Jerusalem, Sinai and Troy are becoming localities of special interest, and future important revelations are expected from their direction. The ancient site of the Temple of Ephesus is also attracting attention. Mr. Wood, the Englishman there, reports the discovery in his diggings of the foundations of the great altar, and the position of the statue of the goddess. The temple is found to measure 163 feet by 342 feet. The length here given nearly accords with that given by Pliny, viz., 425 Roman feet; the ascertained width exceeds Pliny's dimension of 225 feet, which dimensions must have therefore lost something in transcript from the original. An element of great beauty had almost escaped discovery—i. e., the plentiful use of gold in the decoration of the temple. The beauty of the temple was, moreover, heightened by the use of brilliant colors, remains of which are found in numerous fragments, blue, red and yellow being readily distinguished—blue for the background of enrichments and sculpture in relief, red and yellow for the parts requiring greater prominence. The remains of a wide portico have been found surrounding the temple on three sides, and, at a distance of 70 feet on the south side has been recently discovered another temple or another building in the precise Doric style, which is now being partially explored.

THE St. Louis Christian Advocate of March 18 says: "Bishop Wightman has appointed the Rev. Dr. Campbell to the work of organizing a church in the western part of the city. A lot has been purchased at the southwest corner of Chestnut street and Leffingwell avenue, on which a church-house will be erected immediately. The congregation heretofore known as the Olive Branch congregation, and served by Dr. Campbell, will occupy the new church-house, and it, together with the house and lot, regularly become the house and parcel of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in St. Louis. The ceremonies of breaking ground for the new church were performed on Monday of this week."

WE LEARN from India that Sir William Muir has just given a reward of £100 to a Delhi Mouivee, Nazir Ahmed, for a third Oordoo novel of great ability, and purity of style and thought—Taubut-un-Nasuh, the Reformee of Nasooh. The hero is a petty magistrate, who is led to reformation of life by an attack of cholera, during which, in a dream, he dies, and is judged at the last day. He recovers and educates his children religiously. The book is a tale of domestic life unmatched for beauty, moderation and virtue in all Mussulman literature. Its moral is that religion is the root of domestic happiness.

WILSON'S Herald of Health and Home and Household Help for March has been received. This excellent monthly is published by the Southern Publishing Company, Atlanta, Georgia, at $2 a year.

HAPPINESS is the legitimate fruitage of love and service. It never comes, never can come, by making it an end, and it is because so many persons mistake here and seek for it directly, instead of loving and serving God, and thus obtaining it, that there is so much dissatisfaction and sorrow.

THE NEW YORK WATCH COMPANY, whose manufactory is in Springfield, Massachusetts, has done much to economize the manufacture of watches; and at the same time that their improvements have cheapened and simplified the construction of the machinery of the watch they have lessened the danger of getting out of repair, and greatly facilitated the repairing in case it does get out of order. One or two extracts from the Cincinnati Commercial will explain to those familiar with the subject what we mean:

"The winding parts of these watches are attached to the barrel bridge on the top plate, so that in case of repairs being needed any piece of the winding part can be taken out without removing the movement from the case, or taking off the dial. The excellence of this must be apparent to every one who, when at any distance from a great commercial center, like New York or New Orleans, for instance, has been compelled to have his watch repaired, and frequently, perhaps, spoiled in the process by half-competent workmen. In those purchased from the New York Watch Company this single expedient removes all danger of that kind. There is another improvement in the manner of letting down the main-spring, which is done by means of a pin attached to the click, and these winding parts are also so arranged that there is hardly a possibility of either the ratchet, the click or the click-spring breaking. There is a turning made in which to place the click, so that when the strain comes on it the back rests against the solid plate in such a manner that breakage is almost impossible. Further, again, if the main-spring ever does break the barrel can be taken out without disarranging or disturbing any other part of the watch; and this is an advantage the most careless can appreciate. * * * * * * * *

"There is also a novel and incomparable advantage in the potence used by this company, as it is not liable to change its position and disarrange the escapement, as is so often the case in full-plate watches, and every practical man, after a single examination, will perceive the unrivaled excellence displayed on the bearing for the lower center wheel pivot, the plate being constructed to allow a long bearing. In a word, the full-plate movement can be taken down and put up with less trouble than any other analogous movement in the world, and to this quality, which we have endeavored to particularize, the New York Watch Company owe much of their popularity throughout the Union."

The fact that these watches are kept and advertised by a house so well and favorably known for integrity, commercial honor and upright dealing as Mr. E. A. Tyler, of our Crescent City, is a guarantee that, in the estimation of this worthy gentleman, and reliable and competent jeweler, they are entitled to the claim of superiority made by the company, and demonstrated by practical tests. The advertisement will appear in our columns on the seventh of May proximo.

J. L. RICHARDS, No. 558 Magazine street, opposite the market, keeps a stock of well-assorted and choice family groceries, which he delivers free of drayage to purchasers. See his advertisement in another column.

MORE EXTRAORDINARY CURES

BY

DR. PORTER.

Evidences of the great success of the modern system of cure, as practiced by DR. PORTER, at No. 167 St. Charles street, are so abundant that the most incredulous must admit that there is something remarkable in his cures if they will but call on the parties and investigate the facts for themselves.

Only a few of the great number of cases cured by DR. PORTER have been published. No case is published unless the patient, through gratitude, furnishes his testimonial for the benefit of the afflicted, as it was through advertisements that he learned of the great cures that are being daily effected by DR. PORTER.

A Remarkable Cure of Rheumatism.

J. B. WILDER, Esq., residence 132 Spain street, This gentleman had for several years suffered excruciatingly from Chronic Rheumatism, both night and day, and for months the succession could not leave his room; was instantly relieved of pain by Dr. Porter, and all symptoms of the disease commenced to rapidly disappear. May be referred to.

A Severe Case of Rheumatism Cured in Two Days by Dr. Porter.

MRS. ELIZABETH HAYM, daughter of Mrs. Thompson (midwife,) residence No. 93 English street, between Dauphine and Burgundy streets, was almost disabled from Rheumatism; in two days after being treated by him was perfectly cured. May be referred to.

Deafness of Seven Years' Standing Cured.

MR. LOUIS PAGEL, residence 251 Gravier street, corner of Bryades, had been afflicted with deafness for the past seven years. Hearing perfectly restored by three treatments by him. May be referred to.

Deafness Cured.

MISS MARY TRAIN, residence corner of Jena and Coliseum streets, Jefferson City. Deafness of eight years' standing cured by three magnetic treatments. May be referred to.

Chronic Ulcers and Skin Disease of Fourteen Years' Standing.

MRS. JULIA A. FITZGERALD, residence No. 320 Fulton street, had been a great sufferer from chronic ulcers, scores for fourteen years, also from a skin disease; and when she applied to Dr. Porter, a few weeks ago, the lower part of one of her limbs, including a portion of the foot, was almost destroyed, and from year to year the disease was rapidly progressing. She had applied to and been treated by all the best physicians not only of this city, but of all other cities, and never obtained the slightest relief. The pain she suffered during the past fourteen years of her affliction she described as inexpressible, not having any respite from pain, day or night, until she placed her case in the hands of Dr. Porter, who, by a few weeks' treatment, has effected almost a perfect cure, and her complete and permanent restoration to health is positively certain. Those similarly afflicted should not fail to call on this lady and learn the particulars of her case.

A Remarkable Cure of Paralysis and Loss of Speech.

MRS. CATHERINE PHILPOTT, residence on Front Levee street, corner of Erato, had been suffering from paralysis of the left side also total loss of speech. Paralysis cured and speech restored by two treatments. Those similarly afflicted should call and see this lady.

Blindness Cured.

MRS. MARGARET EGAN, residence corner of Philborne and Gravier streets, almost totally blind for three years. After four treatments by Dr. Porter can see to thread a fine camporic needle. Her age is sixty-five years. May be referred to.

DR. PORTER can refer to hundreds, in addition to the above, by calling at his parlors, No. 167 ST. CHARLES STREET, many of whom he is not at liberty to advertise publicly.

Those wishing treatment should not delay until the last few days of the doctor's stay in the city, as his parlors are then generally so crowded that it is almost impossible for him to treat all who come.

SOLE PROPRIETOR OF

ABRAMS' CHILL TONIC,

a most effectual, reliable and entirely safe remedy for Chills and Fever, etc. Sold under full guarantee.

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.

THIS MEDICINE, FOR THE CURE OF

DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA

and all diseases of the Bowels, is without exception the most valuable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to Infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most acute attacks. For Infants its use is recommended in preference to the deleterious "Soothing Syrups," etc. No household should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.

A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from

Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis,

and all Pulmonary affections. It is specially adapted to the relief of Hoarseness, and all diseases of the Throat caused by excessive use of the voice. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Ball & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION,

Scrofulous and Tuberculous affections, Rickets and all complaints where torpor of the digestive nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.

This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is

Unrivaled as a Rubefacient,

and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the extremities should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

THE GREATEST

MEDICAL

DISCOVERY

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases both thunderstruck. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst Kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is

Sour and Inflamed,

your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful. As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,

WATCH WORDS.

BY ELLIS GRAY.

Three watch words brave to us are given,
To soothe in pain,
Bring hope again,
And cheer our woe
While here below—
A Mother, Home and Heaven.

By raging tempests wildly driven,
In fragile bark,
O'er waters dark,
The beacon light
That guides aright
Is Mother, Home and Heaven.

Who hath with sin for victory striven,
With fainting heart
From satan's dart,
Remembers well
The magic spell
Of Mother, Home and Heaven.

And when, through faith and love forgiven,
Death's river past,
We're safe at last,
With angel throng
We'll sing the song
Of Mother, Home and Heaven.

He Is Not Dead.

I have told you how Jesus lived and died long ago for men, and how he rose from the dead and is now in heaven. Now I wish to tell you of all that he does for you and me every day; how he speaks to us and helps us, and will help us every hour of our lives.

Perhaps you say: "Does he speak to me? And does he help me? How can that be, for I cannot see or hear him?" My dear child, every good thought you have and every good deed you do comes from Jesus, who breathes his goodness into us, and speaks to us continually in our hearts, saying: "Do this; do not do that." He speaks to us in many ways. Sometimes, when we read the story of his life, how wise he was, how powerful, how kind and how infinitely good, we feel that we should like to be good as he was. Above all, when we think of him patiently hanging on the cross, dying for each one of us—for you, dear child, as much as for any one else—then we feel a desire to be good and kind as he was. At such times Jesus is speaking to us, and saying: "Come to me, dear child, and let me help you to be like me."

Do not think, then, that Jesus, now that he is in heaven, forgets little children, or cannot speak to them. He is in your heart, always helping you. You see in a picture Jesus suffering for you on the cross, and that picture reminds you how much he did for us eighteen hundred years ago. But you must not think that when he had once done this, eighteen hundred years ago, then he was tired, and wanted to rest from helping us. It is not so. Jesus died, but he lives and works and teaches and helps us as much as ever.

In the books of the gospel there are written many stories that Jesus told his disciples. He was very fond of speaking about common things—sometimes about a farmer sowing seeds; sometimes about a fisherman catching fish; sometimes about a woman making bread, or about a number of persons going out to dine with a friend.

But do not think that Jesus told these stories once to other people that lived long ago, and now tells them no more to you! Whenever you see these common things about which Jesus spoke once, he speaks to you still, repeating the old stories, and he also tells you new stories. Year by year, as men grow wiser and better, and as we find out more and more of God's goodness and power and wisdom, Jesus speaks to us, telling new stories about God and heaven.—Parables for Children.

How the Spider Spins His Web.

Most people have too great an antipathy to spiders to spend even a few minutes in watching them. When a spider wishes to form a web, if he belongs to the race of geometrical spiders which build a wheel-shaped web, he selects some convenient place, and proceeds to lay the foundation by attaching the spokes of this wheel to proper objects; he then commences at the center formed by the crossing of these lines, and travels round and round, spinning his web, employing his feelers for guides as to distance. He always uses the outer web as a pathway, and every time he crosses one of the spokes he attaches his line to it. When he has finished he takes his position at the center, head downward, and waits for the unlucky insect, which he is sure will soon happen along. As soon as he perceives that some awkward fly has run against his delicate framework, he bounces out on him, and quickly ties him fast, hand and foot, so that he may devour him at leisure. But it is not alone for laying traps and tying fast his unlucky victims that the spider uses his web. If he wants to cross from one tree to another, or from one side of a stream to the opposite, he uses the web for a bridge. This he constructs by taking a favorable position, and then spinning a web, which he lets float in the wind. As soon as it strikes some object to which it adheres, he pulls it to see that it is secure, and then crosses on this single line. This is an achievement in engineering that far surpasses the suspension bridges built by human skill. Here is a bridge, oftentimes from fifty to one hundred feet long, spun by so insignificant an insect that we may have some trouble to find him, yet strong enough to bear his weight safely. When a spider wishes to descend from an elevation, he attaches the end of his web to some object, and then boldly launches off, spinning as he goes. When he gets down he cuts the line and leaves it, unless he wishes to return immediately, in which case he coils it up and takes it along as he ascends.

Making a Beginning.

Let us not be satisfied with talking about being good, or even trying it in a general sort of way. Let us look thoroughly over and through these characters of ours, and see what are the worst faults of them, and then turn our trying in that direction. I have known a girl who had, from unfortunate circumstances, been almost constantly found fault with, and never really helped to do better. She had to make her fight, when she finally began it, all alone.

"O dear!" she said in despair, "I don't know where to begin; it seems to me everything is wrong, from the time I get up in the morning until I go to bed at night, and the getting up is as bad as the rest, for I hate it so. I'm always late."

"Very well," said a wiser friend, "then I would begin right there, and correct that one fault; you'll be surprised to see how many weeds grow from one seed."

The girl tried it, for she was really in earnest; and to make sure of waking in season, she put away an interesting book and went to bed in season. Not being cross and sleepy, she found time to pray in good earnest, and I think that helped her to awake, suuuy and refreshed, in the morning. It was a little hard to obey the rising bell directly, and to go straight through her toilet without delay; but she did it, and had time for morning prayer, and the little golden text to carry in her heart all day.

"Most everything went right," she said to her friend at night; "it seemed as if just getting up in the morning gave me time to get hold of the right end of everything."

And I could tell you of a boy, an honest little Christian, who came to the conclusion, all by himself, that he made other people more trouble by leaving doors open than in any other way; so he set himself at work to overcome that fault. And lo! the little fellow discovered that the thoughtlessness which occasioned his fault came of selfishness. Let us make a beginning somewhere.—Little Corporal.

Farm, Garden and Household.

HOW TO MAKE GRAFTING-WAX. Thomas Matteson, of Pennsylvania, writes: "Take two parts mutton tallow, four parts resin, three parts beeswax; melt the tallow first, and put the beeswax and resin into it. When it is all melted, stir it all up and pour it into cold water and work it over. If there are lumps in it, mash them with your thumb and finger. The longer you work it the more sticky it grows. When it begins to stick to your hands, put some tallow on them. Work it till it is all as sticky as you want it. Put in a tin pan with a cover to it, and it will keep for a number of years. I think it is as good as sticking-salve to put on any sores. Some people put in more tallow than resin or beeswax, to make it softer to work in cold weather; but if there is too much tallow in it it will melt and run out in warm weather. I have had about forty years' experience in grafting, and used a number of sorts of grafting-wax. Some people put it in hot water, and make more trouble than there is need of. I wet my finger with my tongue, and don't find any difficulty in putting the wax on. I put a little wax on the end of the graft."—New England Farmer.

BROILING.—When meats are broiled on a gridiron, over hot coals, the sudden high heat applied sears the outside, which shuts in the juices, and the rapid application of heat soon cooks the meat through, if in moderately thin pieces. It is then tender, juicy and palatable. Those who never broil their fresh meat, fish or poultry, do not know the excellencies of a properly-cooked dish of animal food. Of all methods for fowl, broiling is the best, provided that the cook is active enough to handle the gridiron and meat dexterously, so as not to make charcoal of an atom, and yet quickly cook every part of meat sufficiently to suit the taste of the consumer.—Rural Alabamian.

GREENS.—In spring everybody seems seized with an appetite for "greens." The various plants sold under that title in the city markets are gladly welcomed, and the country folks send the children out to dig dandelions. It is quite safe to presume that the producer and the merchant will detect any very injurious weed, and that the cook will only need to examine with care to prevent unpleasant discoveries at the table; but among wild greens noxious plants are not infrequently gathered, and severe and sometimes fatal illness occasioned by their use.

HOW TO GET RID OF RATS.—A correspondent of Colman's Rural says: Take ten cents' worth of calomel and mix it in one pint of corn meal, and scatter it where the rats and mice will be sure to get it, and I will guarantee it to kill at least three hundred rats, or a proportional amount of mice.

BACK! BACK! COUGH! COUGH!

Cough is a symptom by which various diseased conditions of the throat, bronchial tubes and lungs manifest themselves. But whether it arises from the irritation produced in the throat and larynx by taking cold, from an attack of Bronchitis, from Incipient Consumption or from various other causes, nothing will allay it more speedily nor cure it more permanently than Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It does not matter whether it be a recent attack or a lingering cough, the Discovery is in either case equally well adapted for its relief and permanent cure. In fact it will cure a cough in one half the time necessary to cure it with any other medicine, and it does it not by drying it up, but by removing the cause, subduing the irritation and healing the affected parts. No time should be lost in commencing the use of a proper medicine for the relief of a Cough, for unless this course is pursued serious and dangerous disease of the lungs is liable to result.

DOCTORS SOON LEARN ITS VALUE.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1870.

DR. PIERCE: For the past six months I have used your Golden Medical Discovery in my practice, and in that time I have tested its merits in severe coughs, both acute and chronic, in chronic disease of the throat, severe cases of bronchitis, general derangement of the system, constipated condition of the bowels, and wherever a thorough alterative has been indicated. In all cases I have found it to act gently yet thoroughly and effectually in removing the various diseased conditions, and bringing about a healthy action throughout the system.

Yours fraternally, H. L. HALL, M. D.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established by the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters, who wish to run by horse power. All the planters in planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, giving each forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder to larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase the Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a section which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept in stock in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

On Saturday the demand was fair throughout the day and the supply moderate. Good ordinary, benders, sold at 14¼c., and strict good ordinary at 14⅞c. The movement continued checked by its being a close holiday at Liverpool, and the exchange being closed at New York, depriving us of our usual market dispatches. On Monday the market opened with an active demand, and a fair business was done during the morning, mostly at full prices, the general tendency being to an improvement, after which the movement continued to exhibit a fair degree of animation, and, although checked by moderate offerings of the kinds wanted, and by factors being more stringent in their pretensions, yet the sales summed up 6,700 bales, at about ⅛c. advance on good ordinary and the higher grades. The business included good ordinary at 14@14¼c., strict good ordinary at 14⅜c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 15¼c., low middling at 15⅛@15⅜c., strict low middling at 15¾, 15⅞@16c., and middling at 16⅛c. On Tuesday buyers came forward with unabated spirit and took 6,000 bales, partly at rather easier rates, but mostly at full prices in some cases showing an improvement of ⅛c. All grades were held by factors with increased firmness, predicated to some extent on the moderate amount offering.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,400 bales, against 10,930 for the corresponding time last week and 20,880 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,111,200 bales, against 1,045,427 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 349,791 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 89,631 to Great Britain, of 92,911 to France and of 105,969 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

WATERS' CONCERTO AND ORCHESTRAL ORGANS are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever made. The Concerto and Orchestral Stops are the best ever placed in any Organs. They are produced by an extra set of reeds, peculiarly voiced, the effect of which is most charming and enchanting, while the imitation of the human voice is superb. These Organs are the best made in the United States.

WATERS' NEW SCALE PIANOS have great power and a fine singing tone, with all modern improvements, and are the best Pianos made. These Organs and Pianos are warranted for 6 years. Prices extremely low for cash, or part cash and balance in monthly or quarterly payments. Second-hand Instruments taken in exchange. Great inducements to the trade. Agents wanted in every city and county in the United States and Canada. A large discount to Teachers, Ministers, Churches, Schools, Lodges, etc., etc. ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES MAILED.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR.
A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the Kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

It is truly a certain cure, and in our judgment the only specific ever discovered.—Rev. C. H. Ewing, Media, Pa., suffered sixteen years; became helpless. Rev. Thomas Murphy, H. VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, APRIL 16, 1874. NO. 16.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, April 8.—The General Trans-Atlantic Company's steamship Europe, reported abandoned by Cable, was reckoned one of the best and safest vessels, after the loss of the Ville du Havre. She was comparatively a new vessel, having been built in 1866, at Glasgow, Scotland. She was lengthened last year at Newcastle-on-the-Tyne, and altered from a side-wheel steamer to a propeller. Her commander was Captain Lomax, an able and experienced officer, in the employ of the company for a number of years, and has always been considered a skillful and careful navigator.

No list of passengers, nor manifest of cargo, supposed to be of the usual character on ships of this line, consisting of wines, silks, etc., has yet been received in this country. Four hundred passengers and crew were saved.

GALVESTON, April 8.—A News special from Austin says: "Last night about dusk the stage bringing the United States mail and eleven passengers, of whom three were ladies, was stopped about twenty-three miles from here by three armed men, who cut the front horses out, took all the passengers' money and jewelry, broke open their trunks, and gutted the mail-bags, taking one of them and two of the stage horses. Among the passengers were Bishop Pegg and Mr. Breckinridge, the President of the National Bank of San Antonio, from whom they took $3,000. They secured about $3,000 from the passengers. The stage was the regular four-horse stage from San Antonio to Austin. It did not reach Austin until four o'clock this morning."

LITTLE ROCK, April 8.—The Fulton Republican special says: Captain Holloway arrived here to-day from the newly-discovered gold mines on the north fork of the Ouachita, en route to St. Louis to purchase an apparatus wherewith to commence active operations. The mines are located in the mountains, near the Choctaw line, and are richer than at first supposed. Captain Holloway passed through the silver district on his way here, and reports the wildest excitement over recent discoveries.

MEMPHIS, April 9.—A telegram from Helena, Arkansas, to the Appeal, to-night, says Hushpuckana Bayou, near Sunflower, Mississippi, broke again last night. The break is now a hundred yards wide. This endangers the whole of Sunflower and Yazoo river bottoms, which are among the richest in the Mississippi valley.

BATON ROUGE, April 13.—We learn from the best authority that at 6 o'clock P. M. on Saturday a crevasse occurred at McCullen's plantation, twenty miles below Baton Rouge, causing a break two hundred and fifty feet wide and six feet deep. The old levee and batture in front checks the flow of water. The crevasse affects Ward's creek, Bayou Fontaine, and portions and river plantations to Bayou Manchac. Efforts are being made by the planters and the Levee Company to confine and close it, if possible.

FOREIGN.

ST. JOHNS, N F., April 9.—The steamer Tigress, of the Polaris expedition, while seal-fishing, exploded her boiler. Two engineers and twenty of the crew were killed. The ship is under sail for this port.

BERLIN, April 10.—A compromise has been effected on the military bill by which the most serious obstacles to the passage are obviated. The Government has accepted an amendment proposed by the Liberal members of the Reichstag, limiting the strength of the army to four hundred thousand men, and period of service to three years.

LONDON, April 11.—The funeral of Dr. Livingstone takes place on the twelfth. The government will defray $1,200 toward the expenses.

An appeal, signed by the Baroness Burdett Coutts, Messrs. Kirkmaird and Horace Waller, Sir Bartle Frere and others, asks for subscriptions for the support of the children and two sisters of the deceased, who are in straightened circumstances.

A special telegram from Calcutta to the Standard reports that the famine is everywhere under control. Large accumulations of provisions made by the government are more than sufficient to meet the demand, and further aid and subscriptions in England are considered superfluous.

VIENNA, April 13.—The Emperor has sent a conciliatory reply to the Pope's protest against the ecclesiastical bill. It is understood the opposition to the Vatican is merely formal.

The house of the Reichstag to-day passed the ecclesiastical bill, whereupon the bishops withdrew in a body.

BERLIN, April 14.—The Reichstag, by a majority of seventy-eight, has in favor of compromise amendment to the army bill. In the course of debate General Moltke said, in consequence of threats of revenge, it was necessary to keep the hand on the sword—that disarmament would be war.

"All the only sin which is unpardonable is one committed against the Holy Spirit, should affect us with fear and awe toward him. While these are necessary in order to combat sin, and while no one who is trembling fear lest he may have committed it can possibly have done the unpardonable sin, fellow from what is said of the unpardonable sin that all sins except the Holy Ghost are peculiarly sins.

The Confederate Monument.

This monument, erected in Greenwood Cemetery, New Orleans, by the Ladies' Benevolent Association, was unveiled, with impressive services, on Friday afternoon, April 10. We condense from the Picayune as follows:

Upon a high earthen mound stood the statue, a mound edged with granite, and with broad double granite stairs leading up to a paved terrace. Here, beneath the statue, each one left some memento to the dead—a cross of flowers, a wreath, a bouquet, an humble but devout offering to some dead dear one, to a lost cause. The whole mound was covered deep with these floral offerings, sweet incense to the departed.

Above, upon a lofty pedestal of pure Carrara marble, stood a Confederate soldier, "a sermon in stone," with heavy knapsack and blanket upon his back, holding his gun ready in his hands, and peering forward, as if some breaking twig whispered to him that the enemy was nigh. Around the base of the monument gathered the throng, studying with eager eyes the weary, worn, yet eager face of the soldier, as if they traced in it some husband, some loved son, whose face they would never see again, and who lay beneath this altar, in the soil of the country he had died for; or once more drinking in the well-recollected faces of Lee and Jackson, Polk and Johnston—faces photographed in every one's heart and memory—embalmed in history. There was a solemn stillness about everything; it was a time more for thought and retrospect than for idle gossip and conversation.

The busy throng never ceased to pour in; it was idle to waste time waiting till all would be congregated there—the living stream would never cease. At five o'clock precisely Dr. Palmer came forward with prayer—a prayer full of thought and eloquence—picturing the thoughts with which these soldiers had marched forth, their hopes and bright visions for the future, whose anticipations it had pleased God to postpone; and ending with a prayer that God would grant us that for which these men had lived and died—the prosperity and happiness of Louisiana, the good and welfare of the whole nation. Blessed are those who have died for such a cause, blessed those who have lived for it.

After the solemn prayer of Dr. Palmer, Mr. H. N. Ogden, the orator of the day, addressed the audience in an eloquent speech most appropriate to the occasion.

Generals R. E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, A. S. Johnston and Leonidas Polk adorn the pedestal of the capital statue. Many were those who lingered here, even for hours afterward, filled with sad thoughts, weeping over lost sons and lost hopes. To all it was a solemn scene, filling them with sentiments, religious, patriotic, loving; to many it was more than this, and meant desolation and suffering. Even the very children appeared to understand the occasion—did not break out into the noisy babbling of childhood, but remained impressively quiet and thoughtful.

The statue was erected by the Ladies' Benevolent Association of this city—an association originally formed for the relief of destitute Confederate soldiers, their widows and orphans. The association has been in existence since 1866, has assisted many sufferers, and had still sufficient money left ($12,000) to erect this monument. The whole honor belongs to these ladies, who have labored energetically in this noble and pious cause.

The Flood.

THE CREVASSE ABOVE.

By the B. L. Hodge, which arrived at a late hour on Monday night, we learn that no new crevasses have as yet been made anywhere along the river. The McCullom crevasse, about one mile this side of Baton Rouge, is over a hundred feet wide, and the one at Bonnet Carre at least two hundred feet wide and ten feet in depth. Workmen are still engaged doing everything possible on both of these, but it is not thought much can be accomplished beyond making solid the ends, so that the breaks will not increase. The water is flooding the entire country, and more than twenty-five plantations will be ruined.

THE OUACHITA RIVER.

Through a gentleman who has just arrived from the Ouachita river we learn that the weather has been terrible up there for the last month. The river from Camden down has overflowed its banks, and is rushing in a tremendous flood, raining the rich and beautiful country, and making everything desolate in the extreme. The river is full of drift, dead cattle and wrecks of every description, and hundreds of families are rendered homeless by the rapidly increasing waters, the rise being unprecedented, and rather on the increase than decrease.

Every one appears paralyzed with fear, and nothing is done to save the goods of the planters, which are swept away in many instances. This flood, which has been pouring into the Red river, and thence swelling the Mississippi—only a small portion running up through the Atchafalaya—is now on the increase, and will add to the vast volume of water at our doors.—Picayune, April 15.

A STRANGE use has been made of fish-scales, in the manufacture of waterproof materials, designed for dental plates.

THE English papers, says the Christian Union, still have much to say about the revival movement in which Messrs. Moody and Sankey, of Chicago, are taking so prominent and glorious a part. Instances of remarkable conversions are given almost without number, some of them being after this practical order: A man went to pay a debt long due; surprise was expressed at his coming on that errand, but he explained all by saying, "I was brought to Christ last week." The London Primitive Methodist of March 12 speaks of the revival as spreading over the whole city of Glasgow, where Mr. Moody now is. "Meetings for prayer are now more attractive than the theater. Business men are leaving their merchandise for the mid-day meeting, and many of them are now seeking to lay up treasure in heaven. Ministers are coming in daily from the country, some from remote parishes in the Highlands, all anxious to receive a baptism of holy fire, that they may win souls to Christ in their different spheres."

From the Work.

AMITE CITY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Permit me to express gratitude through the columns of your paper, that the friends of Christianity may see that God is demonstrating his power in the salvation of souls in many places on the Greensburg circuit. Our second quarterly meeting was held at this place on the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth ultimo. The Friday before, being a day of fasting and prayer, we held a prayer meeting at nine o'clock, which was well attended. Preaching commenced the same night. The presiding elder, Rev. A. B. Nicholson, was at his post on Saturday and preached with zeal. On Sunday morning we had a refreshing shower by way of a love-feast; after which the publisher of your excellent paper, Rev. R. J. Harp, preached a highly appreciated sermon. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was then administered. When the invitation was given, Methodists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians feasted together around the table.

Allow me to make some remarks about the Sunday schools. There are eighty-five children and teachers in this place, who have organized themselves into a missionary society, under the superintendence of Bro. C. S. Stewart, who spares no means in making it interesting to the children. In the bounds of this circuit there are about two hundred children and teachers in attendance at the Sabbath schools. It was announced on Sunday that the meeting would be continued.

We continued the services until last night. We note the result. Many gathered around the altar, determined not to leave it until they obtained forgiveness. We were kept several nights at the church until eleven o'clock. There were twenty-two conversions and sixteen accessions. The work is still going on in this community. Before closing a large number gathered at the altar to return gratitude to God for his wonderful works to the children of men. May the Lord continue the work.

Correction.

MR. EDITOR: I write to correct two errors in the published Minutes of the last Mississippi Annual Conference, held at Brandon.

The number of members of the church at Brandon is put down at ninety-nine, whereas there were in fact but eighty-two.

The value of church property at Brandon station is put down at $1,000, whereas its actual cost was $6,300, but regarded as worth, with all its appointments, $10,000.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH ON WINE. Take especial care that you delight not in wines, for there never was any man that came to honor or preferment that loved it, for it transformeth a man into a beast, decayeth health, poisoneth the breath, destroyeth natural heat, bringeth a man's stomach to an artificial burning, deformeth the face, rotteth the teeth, and, to conclude, maketh a man contemptible, soon old, and despised of all wise and worthy men; hated in thy servants, thyself and thy companions, for it is a bewitching and infectious vice; and remember my words, that it were better for a man to be subject to any vice than to it; for all other vanities and sins are recovered; but a drunkard will never shake off the delight of beastliness; for the longer it possesseth a man the more he will delight in it, and the older he groweth the more he will be subject to it, for it dulleth the spirits and destroyeth the body, as ivy doth the old tree, or as the worm that engendereth in the kernel of the nut.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.—The Rev. J. M. Buck, of Shahjehampore, India, says, under date of January 29: "You have heard of the famine. It is not confined to Bengal. In these parts the prospects are rather dark. The heavens have been shut up since September, and the 'latter rain' has thus far failed, and the prospect is that it will fall altogether. The weather has been colder than ever before known for many years, so many kinds of grain have been frost-bitten, and taking both these circumstances together the coming year looks dark; already prices are high and on the advance. The Bengal districts have drawn away an amount of our wheat, thus increasing our troubles. 'Times' are now hard for poor people. Ours are suffering with the rest, but thus far are so few in number that in case of extreme want some plan could be adopted by which they could secure a living.

THE Times of April 13 says: "The Louisiana State Agricultural College is now likely to become a practical educational fact. The board of management, just appointed by Governor Kellogg, consists of the following-named gentlemen: George Y. Kelso, Thomas C. Anderson, Frank Pargoud, Thomas Nicholson, M. D., Alfred Shaw, V. O. King, H. Bouzano, Seymour Straight, John R. Clay.

"These gentlemen are all deeply interested in the success of the proposed college, and, though representing different shades of political opinion, are likely to work harmoniously together for the attainment of a common end."

Bald Mountain.

The Holston Methodist of April 4 says: We had intended to give vent to a very learned treatise on volcanoes and earthquakes, considered in the abstract, and upon Bald mountain in particular considered in the concrete; but we have had some aches within, if not quakes without, that have admonished us to dwell very lightly upon such grave subjects. As a lighter task, we transfer the following from the Press and Herald of the twenty-ninth ultimo:

News was received in Raleigh, on the twenty-sixth instant, that the shocks on Bald mountain, the previous night, were more violent than at any time since the commencement of the volcanic disturbance.

THE OLDEST INHABITANT SPEAKS A PIECE.

Rev. John Reynolds, one of the oldest and well-known citizens of western North Carolina, informed the editor of the Asheville Expositor that about sixty-five years ago the people were terribly excited by a rumbling noise in Bald mountain (then known as Cane Creek mountain.) He stated that in addition to the noise and quaking, lights could be seen at night. The noise continued for about ten days, and then, to the joy of the people, it ceased. After the people had recovered from their alarm they came to the conclusion that the presence of minerals had caused the strange and terrible noise; so they began to explore the mountain in search of minerals, but with little success.

SCIENCE AGAIN TO THE FRONT.

Rev. J. S. Kennedy, president of Asheville Female College, publishes a letter in the Asheville Expositor concerning the Bald mountain phenomena. He alludes to the earthquakes and volcanic eruptions of former times, instancing the earthquake at New Madrid, in 1812. For several months, he says, its paroxysms continued, extending over an area of country three hundred miles in length, from the mouth of the Ohio to that of the St. Francis. The ground rose and sunk again in great undulations, and the surface is represented as bursting open in fissures, from which mud and water were thrown as high as the tops of the trees. These singular commotions continued until March 26, 1812, when the cities of Caracas and La Guayra, in Venezuela, South America, perished in an instant, under whose ruins twelve thousand inhabitants were destroyed. The New Madrid earthquake then ceased.

OUR PLEASANT LOCATION.

Prof. Kennedy then surmises that a subterranean ocean of lava extends from the volcanic district of the Chilean Andes through Mexico, and under the Gulf of Mexico, toward the Columbia river in Oregon, and may therefore have produced the disturbance at New Madrid, on the Mississippi. The hot river, known as the Gulf stream, flowing from out of the West India and mid-Atlantic earthquake and submarine volcanic region, may further indicate that the Appalachian mountain system at its southwestern extremity overlies the track or pathway of this ocean of lava. Its mighty pulsation, he says, might shake Bald mountain and other portions of this the oldest spot, perhaps, on the face of the globe.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTLESS

The professor closes with the following encouraging and inspiriting remarks, which we especially commend to the attention of thoughtless thousands who seem to think there is to be an ever-recurring to-morrow, with no swift-coming Dies Irae for them:

"If the solid crust of the earth be only from sixty to one hundred miles in thickness, and if this end of the Appalachian system be an uplifted chain of mountains, with evidences of violently disrupted strata, it is not unreasonable to suppose that our hot springs owe their heat to a deep-seated volcanic agency which has long been in a quiescent state. This state of quiescence may now be interrupted, owing to its inter-subterranean connection with some active volcanic district, and hence, too, the shakings of Bald mountain."

NAMING THE BABY.

BY E. V. S.

"What shall we name the baby?
Our baby so wee and fair,
With her azure eyes like the summer skies,
And her rings of golden hair.

"What shall we name the baby?
She is six months old to-day;
Lily or Idelle, or Rose or Nell—
What shall we call her, pray?

"A precious gift of God,
To our waiting hearts she came,
This blossom fair; and sweet and rare
Must be her earthly name."

Meanwhile she grew apace,
And the summer came and went,
With its sunlit hours and its wealth of flowers,
The gifts our Father sent.

And she lisped her first sweet words—
We listened with fond delight,
But still there came to our call no name
Meet for this baby bright.

In her snowy robes she lay—
Our darling, lent, not given!
Though our hearts were thralled, the angels called,
And she was named in heaven!

Terms of Membership.—No. II.

REPLY TO DR. PIERCE.

MR. EDITOR: The statute law of the church is, by fair construction, as decidedly opposed to the theory that converted persons only are eligible to membership as the General Rules. An analysis of the law (page 103, Discipline of 1870) gives the following points: The pastor must inquire into the "spiritual condition" of applicants. This is general, and does not indicate the "spiritual condition" necessary. This is indicated in the prescribed points of inquiry, as follows: First. To obtain "satisfactory assurances of their desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from their sins." This is in the precise language of the General Rules, and must be explained by them. Second. "Also of the genuineness of their faith." Third. "And of their willingness to keep the rules of the church." Now let the ritual of the church expound the law of the church contained in these last two points of inquiry. Four questions are asked in the formula of adult baptism. The first corresponds in order and meaning with the first point of inquiry above. The second and third relate to the "faith" of the applicant—the apostles' creed—and explains the second point of inquiry. The fourth question relates to the spirit of obedience to wholesome discipline, and explains the third point of inquiry. The questions in the form for receiving members are the same in meaning with the formula of baptism, and explain the law. The invitation to the sacramental table—"ye that do truly and earnestly repent of your sins"—tallies with everything else in our "Form of Discipline" bearing upon the point under discussion. Where, we ask, in all this is that sharply-defined experience of conversion claimed as an essential qualification for church membership? It can only be brought in by adopting a principle of interpretation that establishes a precedent for the most extravagant and violent applications of law. I must again remind the reader that this is a question of law interpretation, and not one of church wants. If Mr. Wesley and the Conventional Conference of 1808, and every General Conference since, or any of them, meant what the article under review teaches, it would be hard to find in all the history of literature a set of terms so unfortunately selected to convey the sense intended.

We urge, furthermore, an objection of a different character. One of the distinctive doctrines of Methodism is that of the "witness of the Spirit" in conscious testimony to the fact of conversion. Other churches that deny, or explain away this doctrine, need church courts to pronounce upon this fact for such as apply for membership; but Methodism makes every soul, under the guidance of the revealed word and the Holy Spirit, the judge of its own experience of grace. At what point, then, can the pastor be consistently brought in as a judge? But the theory we are combatting requires him to receive none into the church until he is satisfied of the fact of conversion. In proportion as the responsibility of deciding this question is transferred from the applicant to the pastor, in the same proportion is the danger increased that they will both be deceived.

As before intimated, this theory, it occurs to me, would apply the remedy at the wrong point. No one is more painfully sensible than the present writer that the world has broken in upon the church, threatening her every distinguishing feature. But it is assuming too much to say that even the larger portion of present worldly-minded members were unconverted when received into the church. I give it as the result of my observation that, among those who stand as a reproach and shame to the church, for every one who was received without a profession of conversion, a dozen have backslidden since they were taken into church fellowship. No; if we interpret correctly, the trouble has not grown out of receiving penitent but unconverted persons into the church, but out of backslidings in the church. During that period of mighty, aggressive power, when to be a Methodist meant something more than even a decent profession of piety, unconverted persons by thousands and tens of thousands were added to the church annually. They were placed under godly leaders, instructed and encouraged in the class meeting and love-feast, watched over by a zealous pastorate, and made to understand from the beginning that a lapse into open sin would forfeit church membership. The vitality of the church was high and her assimilating power immense. If any, simply by the limitation of six months' probation, floated into the church without the qualifications set forth in the General Rules, the fault was not in the law, but in the execution. The same want of fidelity in administering any other law would make it equally as ineffectual in guarding the door of the church.

The declension of spiritual power began with the neglect of the class-room, prayer meetings and love-feasts; the spirit of the world crept into the church, and discipline was relaxed. Backsliders, rather than members who have never been converted, are chargable with the existing evils in the church. Adjust the terms of admission, if you will, so that none but converted persons shall be received; yet if the social meetings of the church continue to be neglected, and, generally, there be not a more painstaking pastoral oversight, I have no hope of seeing the average standard of piety greatly elevated. The law governing the reception of members, as we have expounded it, would, if faithfully executed, make getting into the church about as "hard" as the Scriptures warrant; and getting out about as "hard" as would be safe for the purity of the church and the salvation of the soul. E. S. SMITH.

PRATTVILLE, Alabama.

Rev. Stephen F. Pilley.

MR. EDITOR: It is due to the memory and worth of the brother whose name heads this that a sketch of his eminent and useful life should be given in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Stephen Fatherly Pilley was born in Edgecomb county, North Carolina, July 4, 1805. Whether he left his native State before attaining his majority the writer is not informed, but he was a citizen of Alabama in early manhood. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1833, and the same year was married to Miss S. B. Graham; was licensed to exhort March 14, 1834, and just one year from that time, to a day, was licensed to preach. Thus it will be seen that very soon after he became religious he commenced the work of a public servant of the church. At the close of the year 1835 he was received on trial into the Alabama Annual Conference, and in due course of time attained to the offices of deacon and elder. His connection with the Conference continued from the time of his admission up to his death, in November, 1873. He spent fourteen years on circuits, four on stations and seven in the office of presiding elder; the other years of his ministry he held a superannuated relation, but in this labored fully up to and beyond his strength.

Bro. Pilley possessed a nature of the finest mold. His native endowments were of the highest order. The facilities and helps afforded him in early life for mental development and culture, I judge, were not very ample, but his personal exertions were such that his intellectual training was not neglected. Although he was self-educated, his attainments were characterized by great thoroughness; and the sanctifying effects of the Christian religion, as they were consummated in his disposition and character, added a most beautiful luster to his native gifts, and the intellectual manhood which had been attained by his assiduous and energetic self-training. His ingenuous simplicity of manners, as well as his fine intelligence and judicious judgment, could but render him a favorite with all who knew him intimately, and served to enshrine him endearingly in their affections. He was a master in Wesleyan theology; and in teaching it, whether in the pulpit or in pastoral labors, so brought out its salient points as to be most instructive and interesting.

Clearness and cogency characterized his preaching. The writer has heard him when he was as lucid as crystal brightness, and his reasoning was as resistless as the sweeping avalanche. His style was all his own, and it was well-nigh faultless. Had he been an aspirant for place or position, and persistent in self-seeking, he would have been prominently and conspicuously before the public mind all the while; but modesty and unobtrusiveness were characteristic traits. Others had to seek him; but he was accessible to the humblest. He was always regardful of the amenities of ministerial life, ever deferring to the authority that was over him, and scrupulously observant of what was just and generous in his relation with his peers.

He was not only taxed with the responsibilities and labors of ministerial life, but also with that of providing and caring for a large family. While the Methodist Church has no dogma favoring the celibacy of her ministry, yet its practical working has been exceedingly discouraging to ministers of large families. To serve the church under such circumstances, and at the same time rear and educate so many children as our brother had, was quite a task; yet his children illustrate most beautifully the wisdom, carefulness and fidelity which their beloved parent manifested for them. His eldest son, William, is a local preacher. The second, the Rev. Stephen A. Pilley, is a gifted and useful member of the Alabama Conference. Another, Chas. B. Pilley, has been licensed to preach, and is a student in the Southern University. One of his daughters is the wife of the Rev. Benjamin L. Selman, a worthy and estimable member of the Alabama Conference. Another daughter, now dead, was the wife of the Rev. Mr. Mathews, a minister of the Presbyterian Church. All the children living are members of the churches, and those that are not living were. I think he had thirteen in all. As to personal piety, he did not affect sanctimony, yet he was so ingenuously holy that men were constrained to do homage to the truth which he embodied and illustrated.

Despite extreme feebleness, he performed the duties of a pastor until stricken down with his last illness, which was characterized by great painfulness, disqualifying him for several days for intelligent converse with his family; but it is gratifying to know that his last distinct utterances were in earnest, fervent prayer for his church, his family and his country.

Truly was such a man a blessing to the church, to his family and to the country. Heavily are we all bereaved by his death, and tearfully do we yield him up, but rejoice to know that the peace and rest and glory are his, now and forever.

Pastoral Visiting.

MR. EDITOR: It is not my purpose in this article to say aught against pastoral visiting, or in justification of those ministers who habitually neglect it; but complaints are sometimes made against pastors for not attending to this duty that are without foundation and deserving of rebuke. There are "unreasonable men" now, as in the days of Paul, from whom we may pray to be delivered.—Second Thessalonians iii, 1, 2.

A minister's first duty is to preach the word, for which he must prepare himself in heart and mind, in order to which he must have retirement and composure. Let it always be remembered that pastoral visiting is not his only or principal duty. Though called of God to the work of the ministry, he is a mere man, subject to those feelings that are common to other men. It is not strange if he should sometimes fail or be discouraged in his work. St. Paul was "cast down."—Second Corinthians iv, 9; vii, 6.

It is in the power of the laity to facilitate the pastoral labors of the clergy, and the way to do it is indicated in the Scriptures: "And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake."—First Thessalonians v, 12, 13. Here note that it devolves upon the people to "know" their pastor, to seek his acquaintance and to cultivate his society. Note also that it is their duty to "esteem him very highly in love for his work's sake." Now suppose this to be done. A new pastor comes into a congregation. The members of the church come forward and make his acquaintance, and invite him to their homes. They show plainly that they "esteem him very highly in love for his work's sake," before personal considerations have had time to develop to win their esteem. He does not have to serve a probation among them. Will he not visit them? Of course he will. It will be a pleasure for him to do so. Pastoral visiting in such a congregation is no drudgery, and is seldom, if ever, neglected. Mind you, I do not say a pastor is justified in neglecting this duty under circumstances different from those above described. But I do say that the people are cut off from the privilege of complaining that their pastor neglects them when they neglect him. How often does a pastor leave his room and spend an afternoon in visiting from house to house, and at every step his way is hedged up. It requires an ingenious effort to introduce the subject of religion, and if he prays with the families he must ask for the privilege of doing so. He returns to his room at night with a heavy heart, feeling that he had better not have left it. Now, as little as the people may think of it, this is a true description of a great deal of pastoral visiting. The people hedge up their pastor's way, and make this duty a drudgery. Why not facilitate his labors?

W. B. LEWIS.

How Drunkards are Made.

It is a great error to assume that drunkards are made in taverns and tippling saloons only. The parlors and dining-rooms of respectable and professedly Christian people vie with these baser agencies in swelling the ranks of our large army of drunkards. Here the taste is contracted and the habit confirmed which cause thousands of young men to graduate in our grog-shops. Probably there is not a home in the land, where wine and other intoxicating beverages are habitually and even moderately used at the table, or where they form a part of the hospitalities of the house, in which some promising member of the family has not been thereby started on the downward path to a drunkard's grave, or at least to a drunkard's living death. The first step, too often, has been and is taken at home, in the house of a father or a friend. The most dangerous, the most seductive bar-room is that which is reared in the family or in the social circle.

These reflections have been suggested by an incident which we have seen related of a chief of the Creek Indians, himself a cultivated and temperate gentleman. Speaking of the temptations which beset young men, he said: "To this hour a drop of alcoholic liquor has never passed my lips, and I never was really tempted but once in my life, and that was in the city of New York, three years ago, when our delegation was taken there. We were invited to a gentleman's house and into his parlor, and the lady of the house passed round a waiter with wine-glasses, and came to me and offered me a glass of wine, and for the moment I was tempted." Fortunately he resisted the temptation which was presented to him in a way so alluring and full of peril. But how many young men, from motives of delicacy or shame, or a disinclination to appear singular, would have tasted the Circean cup and been metamorphosed into swinish drunkards? It is sad to think how many of our noblest youth are thus tempted, and who, not resisting, are thus metamorphosed.—Christian Intelligencer.

A PERSIAN SCHOOL.—A Persian school is a very funny affair. The room is generally open to the street. Looking in, one sees a lot of boys squatted on their heels on the floor round a mollah, all rocking themselves to and fro, and all repeating aloud the tasks they have to commit to memory. The result is a perfect Babel of sounds, a jumble, to those who understand the language, of verses from the Koran, drinking and love songs, from Hafiz, and heroic lines from Firdousi. These are the books most studied, and a Persian's education is pretty well completed when he can quote freely from them and talk a little Arabic. Hafiz is the favorite poet, and he is quoted and recited by all classes, as was Tasso some years ago by the gondoliers of Venice.

An Ex-Rabbi on Christianity.

Ex-Rabbi Schiamevitz, a converted Jew, is delivering a course of lectures in the Church of the Holy Innocents, New York, on the "Evidences of Christianity." The rabbi has diligently searched the Scriptures, and finds there such convincing arguments that Jesus is the very Christ, that his very loyalty as a Jew compels him to become a follower of the Redeemer. One of his lectures is devoted to the argument from Old Testament prophecy, in which he demonstrates, in a manner that cannot fail to impress the most skeptical, that not only the general fact, but the marks by which the Messiah was to be known, were explicitly detailed. The prophet Daniel foretold the time in that passage beginning: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people; * * * know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks," etc. The Jewish Church acknowledge that this prophecy refers to the Messiah. The Hebrew word translated weeks means "seven years," so that "seventy weeks" means seventy times seven, or four hundred and ninety years. The edict to build the temple was issued by King Cyrus in the twentieth year of the reign of the Persian King Artaxerxes Longemanus, two hundred and ninety-nine years after Rome was founded. Christ preached openly in the streets of Jerusalem seven hundred and eighty-two years after Rome was founded, four hundred and eighty-three years later—that is, in the seventieth week of years. Daniel said that in the midst of the last week the sacrifice and oblation should cease, which prophecy was fulfilled to the day in the death of Christ, soon after which the Romans under Titus devastated Jerusalem, making the holy place desolate. At this time the scepter departed from Judah, according to the prophecy about the coming of Shiloh. The miraculous birth of the Savior was foretold by Isaiah: "Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son and shall call his name Immanuel." The place was foretold by Micah: "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah," etc. The homage paid at his birth was foretold by David: "The kings of Tarshish and of the Isles shall bring presents, and the kings of Sheba and of Seba shall offer gifts."

Such are a few of the points touched upon by the learned ex-rabbi. Coming from a Jew, these arguments have a peculiar interest and charm to every Christian. In the present day also it is well to refresh one's faith by taking these draughts from the fountain of knowledge, and in both these respects the rabbi's lectures cannot fail to be useful.—New York Observer.

THE Roman Catholics speak of oppression on the part of the State in Germany. That is, says the Bremen Evangelist, not only comical in the highest degree on the part of those who have always oppressed others, but it is also untrue. "Die schonste Ehrensaule des Reichs der Religionsfreiheit ist umgeworfen" is the complaint of Herr Peter Reichensperger in the Prussian Parliament. It is well known that the Catholics enjoy now, as before, perfect religious liberty. Only this is denied them: To fall back upon their religion in order to withdraw from the duties they owe to the State. What is, in fact, forbidden them? 1. They cannot use the pulpit in order to incite to political sedition. 2. They are not allowed to curse any one openly, and shut him out as a leprous person from all association with his fellows. 3. They must give the names of candidates to the chief president of the spiritual courts before the bishop can appoint them, in order that the State may make objection to any candidates who are hostile to it. 4. A government examination is required of those who wish to be appointed clergymen or priests of a church supported by the State. If the State, says the Evangelist, were to require the last two from a church which made no claim, its complaints might be raised with justice. But on the part of a State church which claims certain privileges it is utterly groundless. Nor can it be looked upon as a question of conscience, since the bishops in Bavaria, Baden and Wurtemberg do the very things for which they prefer to be imprisoned in Prussia; and since, for instance, a bishop, whose diocese includes Oldenburg, does quite quietly the very things which he objects to in that part of it which lies in Prussia. The reason is to be looked for in another direction. The Pope commands the bishops not to follow these laws, because they were passed without his being first asked about the matter, and he wishes in this way to gain the upper hand in Prussia, and the bishops obey him as blindly as they subjected themselves to the declaration of infallibility. Hence the entire struggle.

THE SAFE CHANNEL.—The pilot of a United States revenue cutter was asked if he knew all the rocks along the coast where he sailed. He replied: "No; it is only necessary to know where there are no rocks." These words suggest a deep moral and spiritual truth. Sermons, lectures and books abound on the temptations which lie along the life-course of the young to eternity. Over the most dangerous ones are lifted the solemn notes of repeated warning. This is well. And yet how much more frequently does the word of God present and enforce, with all the urgency of motive love can suggest, the very truth contained in the pilot's answer—the "King's highway of holiness." Looking unto Jesus with simple faith, the soul is secure; whatever the perils that lurk on every hand, there are no rocks ahead. To a loyal spirit it is sufficient to know this.

NO MAN is so happy as a real Christian; none so rational, so virtuous, so amiable. How little vanity does he feel, though he believes himself united to God! How far is he from abjectedness when he ranks himself with the worms of the earth.—Pascal.

IN MEMORIAM.

DIED, at his residence in Franklin parish, Louisiana, March 18, 1874, of cancer of the eye, ROBERT ANDERSON, aged forty-eight years, eleven months and fifteen days.

Affected with the above disease for four years, his sufferings during the last eight months were agonizing, but he bore them with the fortitude of a martyr and the heroism of a sincere Christian. Mr. Anderson was born in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, and moved to Madison parish, Louisiana, in 1847. Seven years later he became a resident of Franklin. Universally respected for his sterling integrity and moral worth, his loss will be severely felt by the community, among which his name was a synonym for the qualities that adorn the truly good citizen. A fond husband and kind father has been taken by the unrelenting hand of death from the bosom of a once happy home. To the bereaved the blow is a severe one; yet the finger of Faith, the healer of wounded spirits, points to "the better land, where sorrows and sufferings never come;" and Hope whispers: "He is at rest and happy, and we shall meet again."

P.

ROBERT B. LIGON was born in the State of Mississippi in the year 1848, and died, at his residence near Baton Rouge, Louisiana, January 2, 1874.

My acquaintance with him was quite limited, as I had met him but a few times. On the first Sunday in November of last year, at the close of a protracted meeting at Pipkin's chapel, near his home, he gave me his name as an applicant for membership in the church. On the fourth Sunday of the same month I baptized him by immersion, administering to him the vows of the church, as we stood together near the edge of the water. I saw him but few times after this. On the third day of January, on my return to the neighborhood, I was startled by the announcement that he had passed away. In reviewing the occurrences of the few weeks just previous to his death it seems as if God was preparing him for the change that was so soon to come. May we not hope that he was found at his post and watching when the Master called? An honorable, upright man, he was highly esteemed where he was known. He leaves a wife and child, besides brothers and sisters, to mourn his early departure. May the hope of the resurrection comfort them.

W. H. LEITH.

IT hath pleased God, in his infinite wisdom, to sever from our midst one of the most affectionate wives, one of the most devoted mothers, one of the truest friends to the friend and friendless, and one of the brightest ornaments of Christian piety known to us. On the thirtieth of March, 1874, Mrs. O. F. W. GORTON, wife of Mr. Joseph Gorton, of Waterproof, Louisiana, after a protracted and painful illness, departed her mortal pilgrimage on earth. Mrs. Gorton was in her fifty-seventh year when she died. Having been in our midst for twenty-five or thirty years, we have been blessed with her example of kindness, of gentleness, of forbearance, of charity and purity. Her light has not been hid as under a bushel, but it has been so shining that we have seen her good works, and glorify her Father in heaven.

During the latter part of her illness she was a very great sufferer, but she bore her affliction with patience and submission. To a bosom friend, who visited her on one of the last days of her illness, she said: "The light of your countenance does me good. I have something to tell you, and a few words will suffice. You remember, some months or a year ago I told you twice, when very ill, that though I feared not death, yet I did not feel submissive enough. But now all is bright. Oh, what a state is this! It is truly unutterable. What more can I ask? I feel that all my sins are forgiven. But why have I suffered so much?" Her friend reminded her that whom God loveth most he chasteneth, to make them more faithful, and to show them that his is all the power. The sufferer added: "And all the glory." We regret that the last hours of her existence with us were spent in a state of unconsciousness, not being able to recognize the members of her family, and thus denying them the consolation of those parting words on earth, to meet again in heaven. They have the heartfelt sympathy of many friends.

ROBERT R. RICHARDSON was born on the twenty-fifth of January, 1812, in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, and died in Jackson, Louisiana, March 16, 1874. He resided in Wilkinson county all his life until the summer of 1873, when he moved to Jackson, Louisiana, to educate his children. He was married, December 15, 1841, to Mrs. Mary E. Hatfield, formerly Miss Mary E. Wells, and was the father of thirteen children. He joined the Methodist Church at a camp meeting held at old Bethel, in Wilkinson county, in the year 1843, and continued a faithful member to the time of his death, having filled for many years the positions of steward, trustee and class-leader with acceptability.

Bro. Richardson's history connects us with the generation gone before, bringing thoughts of the pioneers of this region and of the heroic days of Methodism. Like one born in those days, his frame was large and muscular, his temperament ardent, his habit of life vigorous.

In a secular point of view his life was a success. Taking hold of his father's estate when it was insolvent, he entirely freed it from liabilities; and, receiving his own portion, added to it, until he amassed a large fortune, being esteemed one of the wealthy men of his wealthy county.

He carried his energy of character into the church, and was an earnest worker in its interests. He was fond of the church, liked class meetings, loved to sing, and from the very first was in the habit of holding family prayer. He was frequently heard to remark that he rejoiced in having moved to Jackson, Louisiana, because he was near the church, and could enjoy preaching and the social meetings.

For many years his health has been feeble. On returning from New Orleans, about four weeks before his death, he went from his horse to his bed, remarking to his family that he felt his race was run, and that he never would get up again. The impression, alas! proved true. His sickness was a tedious and painful one. From the beginning of it he began to make his preparations for death, and gave special directions in regard to his burial, the management of his estate and the disposition of his family. He talked much about his religious prospects, frequently had religious service in his room, and partook of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. His unwavering testimony was an unfaltering trust in the atonement of the Savior.

His remains were carried to the Methodist church in Jackson, Louisiana, on the evening of the day of his death, and appropriate services were held by the writer, his pastor. Early next morning they were conveyed to the family burying ground in Wilkinson county, and deposited in their last resting-place, Rev. T. W. Brown, his old neighbor and friend, officiating. His body rests in the cemetery where sleep four generations of his family. For the survivers our prayer is:

When, soon or late, they reach that coast,
O'er life's rough ocean driven,
May they rejoice, no wanderer lost,
A family in heaven!

C. G. ANDREWS.

RACHEL ANN ENGLISH, whose maiden name was Bates, was born in Union district, South Carolina, November 15, 1826, but removed with her parents to Marengo county, Alabama, in childhood, in which State she resided to the day of her death, January 27, 1874. In 1841 she was united in marriage to Mr. D. J. English, who died several years ago, at Newbern, Alabama.

Although piously reared and always religiously inclined, she did not join the church, because of opposition on the part of her husband, until about twelve years after her marriage. During this protracted season she had many mental conflicts. Earthly and heavenly interests seemed to clash. She had promised obedience to her husband, yet felt constrained to vow fidelity to Christ. Many times she sought counsel from others in whom she could prudently confide, and often in company with an aged friend, now in heaven, or alone she poured out her soul in prayer for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, that the path of duty might be made plain, and strength given to walk in it. It was given, and she determined to obey God rather than man. For the first and only time in her life she disobeyed her husband's expressed wish. When she announced to him her final decision he was grieved to tears even, but yielded; and though he did not join with her, he ever after encouraged her to persevere, and exhorted her to be faithful to the vows she had taken. He became a liberal supporter of the church, loved the preachers, made his house their home, assisted his wife in all her benevolent plans, often planned for her, and after a lingering and painful illness, marked by deep penitence for sin and earnest pleadings for mercy, passed away, leaving her consolation in a well-grounded hope of meeting him in heaven.

Every one knows that results such as this, following upon a step taken in the face of determined, authoritative opposition, can only be predicated upon consistent sincerity and earnestness. Sister English was a sincere, earnest Christian. Consistency was the golden thread running through all her actions. Blessed with resources, she employed them for the good of others and the glory of God. Without children of her own, she became a mother of the motherless. Her own relations fail to remember how many orphan and indigent children she has, wholly or in part, raised and educated. And no wonder, for she always concealed such things when concealment was possible. Though she had ceased to reside at Newbern, she kept her membership there, because the church was weak and needed her assistance. Her assessments were always promptly paid, and her interest for the welfare of the church unabated. Whenever she heard of distress she could not rest until it was relieved. I well remember one bitter day, last year, when, just recovering from severe illness, she walked through the mud to the parsonage to consult me in reference to a minister she had never seen, who she had learned was afflicted and in want. In the last conversation had with her, shortly before her death, she deeply censured herself for not doing more for the glory of God, and expressed a determination to consecrate herself more fully to his service. Yet, so far as I know, the censure could never have come from other lips. Her last illness, involving the brain, induced such continuous mental aberration that there was no opportunity for connected Christian converse. Nor was it essential. We had no doubt of her acceptance, and if she did not feel quite ready to depart and be with Christ, it was only that she would fain have continued a little longer at work in the vineyard ere receiving the laborer's reward.

R. B. CRAWFORD.

PROF. CHRISTLIEB says of the preaching that should obtain in the present day: "That minister will be a 'pastoral bankrupt' who does not teach the word of God. The ministry is to be a ministry of the word. 'Preach the word' is the injunction no less to ministers to-day than it was in Paul's time, when he gave his stirring charge to Timothy. Bring to your preaching everything of human learning and poetry and charm of eloquence, if you will. But 'still preach the word.' Learning, poetry, eloquence—these cannot give comfort to the aching heart, nor shed light upon the great questions of destiny and duty. These are not the gospel, the glad tidings of salvation to the sinner. The preacher who has only these is a 'pastoral bankrupt.'"

SWEET MARJORAM.

God's garden—where tall lilies grow,
Silver and golden and sweet,
Where crimson roses only blow
To shed their bloom at his feet;
Purple pansies, with hearts of fire,
Violets bathed in their own perfume;
Amid the rainbow tangle of flowers
Can a little herb find room?

God's garden—where the thrushes sing
Ere spring has yet begun,
Where larks, with dew upon the wing,
Rise warbling to the sun;
Nightingales chant as day grows dim,
Gayly glistens the humming bird;
Through the choral notes of that great hymn
Can a little wren be heard?

Herbs will sweeten the bleak hill-side
Where flowers can never grow;
Through winter frosts the wren will bide,
And sing above the snow;
And God accepts with tender love
Their service true and sweet;
Can nightingales or roses give
An offering more complete?

Some of the Churches of Rome.

BY REV. DR. H. B. RIDGAWAY.

There is no object in Rome which is a more natural connection between the ancient and modern city than the Church of St. Clement. It stands not far from the Coliseum, between the great Amphitheater and the noted church and museum of St. John Lateran. On the outside it is of an old, barn-like appearance; but within it is a treasury of history. Good reasons were known for believing this church to be very ancient, but it was not until the late excavations of Father Maloney, a priest who with commendable zeal and energy has devoted himself to its thorough examination, that the real antiquity of the church has been clearly proved. The present church has all the points of the most ancient basilicas—basilica being the name quite early given to the larger Christian churches. The first entrance is into the atrium, a square inclosed with a colonnade, open to the sky, with a pluvium or fountain in the center, at which the worshipers washed their hands in token of purification. The nave is separated by two rows of columns, and near the center is an elevated choir with two reading-desks, the one for the gospels and the other for the epistles, and beyond it the tribune. Everything in this church, the marbles, the mosaics about the choir and the tribune, show it to be very old; and yet it could not in its present condition be traced back of the eleventh or thirteenth century. Father Maloney could not resist the suspicion that there was a greater antiquity to it, and that it was built upon the very spot of the house of Clement of Rome, mentioned by St. Paul, Philippians iv, 3, etc. He sunk a shaft near the north wall, and struck a column, continued it, and struck another; and as he carried forward the shaft around the second, column for column, corresponding with the columns above, all the parts of a perfect church which had been filled in for the present structure. An examination of the walls revealed frescoes of different designs in very good preservation, pictures of councils, etc., showing a period of comparative simplicity. At this point, I am informed, his explorations were stopped by order of the papal government, lest they should disclose something unfavorable to the traditions of the church. He subsequently, however, resumed his efforts, and, sinking deeper shafts, found the brick-work and columns of another house beneath the second church. These indicate a decline in art—a decline which belongs to the early Christian period. The vestibule of Clement's house resulted room with stucco cor... again. In this room it is credible the primitive church in Clement's house worshiped, and it is not unlikely that Paul was often present. But there are evidences that this room was also a temple of Mythros. The explanation is that when Clement was exiled in the persecution which arose in his old age his house was confiscated and given to the pagan priests for a temple. The rites of Mythros were not introduced till one hundred and fifty years before the birth of Christ. On the triumph of Christianity the house was probably promptly reappropriated to its Christian uses. Here, then, are three distinct churches, one upon the other, and it is thought the same process is obtained in many instances. The one was not taken to clear away rubbish, but, a good foundation secured, the work of rebuilding was begun.

ASSOCIATIONS OF CHURCHES.

Of the many churches in Rome there is hardly one that does not embody some feature of especial interest. Beneath St. Peter in Prison, on the side of Capitoline Hill, are the noted "Lamertine prisons," where, the tradition affirms, St. Peter and St. Paul were confined before their martyrdom. This prison was probably the only prison at one time of ancient Rome. The Church of Ara Coeli, at the top of Capitol Hill, is an object of great interest, as owning the celebrated Bambino image of Christ, which is brought out and paraded with great pomp on certain festivals. The immense monastery adjoining has been seized by the government, and now a soldier's barracks. On the opposite side of the hill, through a fine garden, you reach a precipice, which is pointed out to you as the Tarpeian Rock. It looks toward the valley, between the Palatine and Capitoline hills. The Church of St. Peter in Chains is noted for possessing the real chains with which St. Peter was bound, and also the statue of Moses by Michael Angelo. I did not see the chains. They are exposed to vulgar sight only on high festivals; but the Moses I did see. The great law-giver sits in silent, stern majesty. The quiet grandeur of the garments suited the lofty, bold genius of Angelo. The Church of St. Maggiore has been selected by Pius the Ninth for his burial place. His crypt, which he has had prepared in his povery regardless of expense, is one of the most magnificent specimens of art and taste ever devised. The most costly marbles of every kind, alabasters and precious stones of every hue, many of them gifts from different potentates and princes, are the materials of the tomb in which the poor prisoner is to rest. This church shows the bust of Paul (Borghese) the Fifth, in whose reign St. Peter's church was completed. It lies under a chapel full of gems. The little old Church of Sts. Pudentiana and Prassede boasts the possession of the real pillar at which Christ was bound and scourged. This pillar is kept in a side chapel, carefully concealed in a niche behind a curtain. Vulgar woman is not admitted into this chapel near to the sacred relic—while the men go in. She is allowed only to look at it through a grated window. Long pilgrimages are made to this precious bit of wood. St. Paul Without the Walls is perhaps next to St. Peter's for its extent and interest. Nearly consumed by fire, it has been rebuilt and internally decorated by the present Pope at great cost. The Church of Three Fountains, still farther beyond the walls, is on the site where St. Paul was beheaded. His head as it fell bounded thrice, and from the three spots springs of water burst up. You are given to drink of these waters.

At the Church of St. Agnes Without the Walls took place, while I was in Rome, the festival of St. Agnes blessing the lambs. I do not know the origin of this ceremony. It is of little moment to know, as for ages monks and nuns had nothing much to do but invent fables. The little lambs were brought in and paraded, amid music of the most delicious strains, with the most approved genuflexions, and the wool, henceforth sacred, was to be made into palliums for the Pope to distribute to the cardinals he may select.

LIFELESS SERVICES.

One walk in Rome is enough to weary a Protestant with churches. These are always open, but there are not many worshipers. The priests and monks move about leisurely. Here and there is a valuable specimen of art or a relic of romantic interest, but in the main the gross superstition disgusts you. Even St. Peter's is visited mainly by tourists. The worshipers are mostly priests or the lowest of the people. Many kiss the toe of St. Peter's statue with a ravishing affection, and put the head under it in token of subjection. I attended vespers on Sunday evening; but few persons were present except as I was there—a spectator. Such singing I never heard before—falsetto voices so unique and exquisitely sweet as to affect me almost to tears, and yet there was but a small group of spectators. A cardinal and a score of canons did not bring a crowd. There was splendid ritual, but no instruction, no word of life for the hungry multitudes. I have gone from the cellar (crypt) to the pinnacle of this greatest church of Romanism—the organ in the interior is six hundred and thirteen and one-half feet from the floor—which took one hundred and seventy-six years in building and cost over $50,000,000, exhausting the papal treasury, and I turned away sick of the heartless fraud which this material splendor covers. Near the great eastern altar is a tablet recording the dogma of the immaculate conception, proclaimed, as it affirms, at the desire of the whole Catholic world. On the north side all the arrangements of the Ecumenical Council yet remain. Pictures of the successive great councils adorn the walls. The Pope, the first to be declared infallible, is deprived of his temporal power, and, a voluntary prisoner in the adjoining palace, he sees the decadence of a superstition whose shadow has filled all lands. Caligula built a bridge from his great palace to the capitol, that thence he might go to hold secret communion with the image of Jupiter Capitolinus, under the delusion that he was Jupiter's living representative. He was called the mad Caligula. What shall we say of the nominal Christian man—human creature—who in this age assumes to be and allows himself to be decreed the infallible vicegerent of Christ? Shut in and worshiped, wherein does he differ from the Grand Llama of Thibet?—Methodist.

The Sun and the Earth.

If the recent estimates of the sun's distance are ultimately established by the transit observation of 1874, this will really indicate that the sun itself is a spheroid eight hundred and fifty thousand miles across, and that in mere matter of bulk it is so vast that a million and a quarter of earths would barely suffice to make up its volume. A much more satisfactory and philosophic conception of "the home rule" of the universe is secured if a start is made in idea from this grand center standpoint, rather than, in accordance with more usual practice, from the earth. The source of activity and power is an orb nearly one million of miles across; and the pigmy earth, which is dependent upon that source for light, warmth, life, and all change and movement of whatever kind, is suspended in space one hundred and eight diameters of that central orb away, and is of one million and a quarter times smaller dimension than the sphere from which it receives these endowments. There is certainly more for the human intellect to seize when the fact is stated in this way than there is when the sun is spoken of as a sphere ninety-two millions of miles from the earth, and as large again as the moon's orbit. It is a suggestive and noteworthy feature in the economy of nature that in the one instance which comes within the personal experience of man, the great central fountain and source of impulse, energy and power, is six hundred times larger than the entire cluster of subordinate worlds that are lit, warmed and organized from that source. Such in the marvelous scheme is the ratio of power to result of active, determining cause to passive accomplishment—six hundred-fold to one. Fire-eddies thousands of miles across, and flame-tongues one hundred thousand miles high, whirl and leap in the sun in order that soft winds may breathe, gentle rains fall, verdant plants grow; and endless generations of animals succeed each other, and run through the appointed round of sentient being, on the islet worlds that have been scattered through space, each at the appropriate span of remoteness that fits it to the end secured.—Edinburg Review.

A Story of the Curfew.

The first line of Gray's Elegy,

"The curfew tolls the knell of parting day," has made the word curfew familiar to every English-speaking boy and girl. The word is formed of two French words, couvre feu or couvrir feu (cover fire,) and came into use when William the Norman, the first monarch of England, made a law that all fires should be extinguished at the sound of the evening bell.

To many hearts in the old country, that cherish its traditions, the curfew recalls a story of love's devotion.

In the time of Cromwell a young soldier, for some offense, was condemned to die, and the time of his death was fixed "at the ringing of the curfew." Naturally such a doom would be fearful and bitter to one in the years of his hope and prime, but to this unhappy youth death was doubly terrible, since he was soon to have been married to a beautiful young lady whom he had long loved.

The lady, who loved him ardently in return, had used her utmost efforts to avert his fate, pleading with the judges, and even with Cromwell himself, but all in vain. In her despair she tried to bribe the old sexton not to ring the bell, but she found that impossible. The hour drew near for the execution. The preparations were completed. The officers of the law brought forth the prisoner, and waited, while the sun was setting, for the signal from the distant bell-tower.

To the wonder of everybody, it did not ring! Only one human being at that moment knew the reason. The poor girl, half wild with the thought of her lover's peril, had rushed unseen up the winding stairs, and climbed the ladders into the belfry loft and seized the tongue of the bell.

The old sexton was in his place, prompt to the fatal moment. He threw his weight upon the rope, and the bell, obedient to his practiced hand, reeled and swung to and fro in the tower. But the brave girl kept her hold, and no sound issued from its metallic lips.

Again and again the sexton drew the rope, but with desperate strength the young heroine held on. Every movement made her position more fearful; every sway of the bell's huge weight threatened to fling her through the high tower window; but she would not let go.

At last the sexton went away. Old and deaf, he had not noticed that the curfew gave no peal, the brave girl descended from the belfry, wounded and trembling. She hurried from the church to the place of execution. Cromwell himself was there, and was just sending to demand why the bell was silent. She saw him,

"And her brow,
Lately white with sickening horror, glows with hope and courage now;
At his feet she told her story, showed her hands all bruised and torn,
And her sweet young face, still haggard with the anguish it had worn,
Touched his heart with sudden pity, lit his eyes
with misty light:
'Go; your lover lives!' cried Cromwell; 'curfew shall not ring to-night.'"

Youth's Companion.

A Morganatic Wife.

The King of Italy is married morganatically to the Countess of Mirafiori, and would raise her to the throne did not reasons of State interfere. The lady has proved a good and faithful wife, and has borne to the King several children. Of the epithet "morganatic" a London paper says:

"The derivation of this epithet is a matter of controversy. However, the common theory is that it is derived from the Fata Morgana, the strange mirage which is witnessed at times on the Sicilian waters. Islands crowned with palaces are seen by mariners rising from the sea, and then fade away as rapidly as they appeared. The interpretation is ominous of the fleeting character of royal unions not ratified by law. But experience shows that, whatever the signification of their name may be, these morganatic marriages are of a very lasting character.

"The custom of these half-recognized, half-disavowed marriages between royal personages and ladies not of the kingly caste has, I believe, its origin in Germany. In the old days, when princes were regarded in the Fatherland as belonging to a caste set by Heaven itself above the rest of mankind, a mesalliance between a sovereign and a private citizen was an absolute impossibility, not so much by law as by an unwritten code. Love, everybody knows, can work miracles; but to make a lady, in whose veins no royal blood runs, a crowned sovereign, was a miracle utterly beyond the power of the maddest Teutonic passion. On the other hand, the German princes were of an uxorious and domestic disposition, and very often gave their hearts where the hand could not be given. So the practice sprang up of these left-handed marriages, where the lady was supposed to have all the privilege of marriage except that of sharing the rank and title of her royal husband. The tolerant Lutheran Church made no difficulty about conferring the sanction of some sort of religious ceremony upon these unions; and probably these irregular vows were not more often broken than those contracted with the sanction of the law."—New York Post.

A LANGUAGE is formed out of a multitude of things: the inward thoughts of a people, their beliefs, their religion, their history, their social and political life, the external circumstances in which they are placed, are reflected in it, as in a mirror. The whole external and internal life of a people is in their language. However profoundly their habits of thought may be modified, their language at once is sensibly affected by them.—Vinet.

Scientific.

MR. GARNER, in a paper read before the Linnean Society, abandons the idea that the secretion of mucreous matter, which forms pearls in oysters and mussels, is owing to the irritation caused by grains of sand. From observations made on common marine mussels he concludes that the exciting cause of the deposit is not sand, but a minute parasite; while in the fresh-water mussel or anadon it is a minute mite or true itch insect.

IT TAKES 65,000 cochineal insects to make one pound in weight, and the amount imported into the United States last year was 1,849,842 pounds. The annual slaughter of these harmless insects, therefore, to supply carmine for American ladies' toilets, and the various dyes and tints for their ribbons, feathers and dresses of red, crimson, scarlet, Magenta, Solferino and other similar colors, actually reaches 120,239,730,000 in number. These figures are perfectly awful, but some of the uses of carmine are worse.

IT IS a curious fact that if the same letters of the same size precisely are painted on two boards, the one white on a black ground, and the other black on a white ground, that the white letters will appear larger, and be read at greater distance than the black. This is owing to what is called the irradiation of light. It depends on this: that the impression made on the bottom of the eye by bright objects extends a little wider than the actual portion of the organ struck by the light, and, invading the space occupied by the darker objects, make the brighter appear larger than they really are.

IN AN ARTICLE on the electrical condition of gas-flames, in the last number of the American Journal of Science, Prof. J. Trowbridge, by a series of experiments, arrives at the following conclusions: First. The flame of a Bunsen burner is negative, while positive electricity accumulates in the burner itself, if it is a good conductor. With orifices made of non-conductors, no charge was found in the tip. Second. The stratum of air in contact with the outer cone of flame is slightly charged with positive electricity. The partly consumed gas of the interior cone is neutral. Third. The presence of flames tends to change the nature of the atmospheric electricity at the given place, reducing a positive tension to a feebly negative one. The latter result will be seen to have a bearing on the popular belief that great fires affect the atmosphere in such a way as to induce rain and storms, confirming this belief from an electrical point of view. By placing a spirit-lamp on the prime conductor of an electrical machine, Sir William Thomson, ten years ago, changed the tension of the air in the room of his experiment from a positive to a negative state, and the reverse. Now it is found that the electricity of the air during cloudy or rainy weather is generally negative, or at most feebly positive. Flames, being negative, would to greater or less extent change the strong positive electricity in clear weather to a negative character, and thus bring the air to the condition of cloudy or rainy weather. The almost innumerable instances in which rains have been said to follow conflagrations or the extensive firing of cannon, as in battles, are thus shown to be capable of explanation on scientific grounds, and therefore to be worthy of consideration.

IN ALL the actions that a man performs, some part of his life passeth. We die with doing that for which only our sliding life was granted. Nay, though we do nothing, time keeps its constant pace and flies as fast in idleness as in employment. Whether we play or labor, or sleep or dance or study, the sun posteth, and the sand runs. An hour of vice is as long as an hour of virtue. But the difference which follows upon good actions is infinite from that of ill ones. The good, though it diminishes our time here, yet it lays up a pleasure for eternity, and will recompense what it taketh away with a plentiful return at last. When we trade with virtue we do but buy pleasure with expense of time. So it is not so much a consuming of time as an exchange, or as a man sows his corn; he is content to want it awhile, that he may at the harvest receive it with advantage. But the bad deeds that we do here do not only rob us of so much time, but also bespeak a torment for hereafter; and that in such a life, as the greatest pleasure we could there be crowned withal, would be the very act of dying. The one treasures up a pleasure in a lasting life, the other provides us torture in a death eternal.—Owen Feltham.

CONQUEST OVER TEMPTATION.—We shall all be tempted, but the effects of the temptation depend upon ourselves. Fling into the same flame a lump of clay and a piece of gold—the clay will be hardened, the gold will melt; the heart of Pharaoh hardened into perfidious insolence, the soul of David melted into pathetic song. Bear temptation faithfully, and it will leave you not only unscathed, but nobler. With each temptation God will also provide not—as the English version has it—a way, but the way of escape; the one separate escape for each separate temptation. Because God loves us, because Christ died, because having risen again he shed forth the Spirit in our hearts, therefore under the fiercest assaults of satan the soul may be always safe. It may be like a beleaguered city: the powers of evil may marshal all their devilish engines, and make the air hiss with their fiery darts, but every sortie of the besieged shall be inevitably successful; never shall there be capitulation; and by true resistance the assaults of the tempter shall at last be driven back in irretrievable, disgraceful rout.

AN ADMIRABLE statue of Hercules was discovered a few days since at Esquiline, larger than life, and intact with the exception of the feet and left arm, which are broken.

Religious Intelligence.

ICELAND, with 50,000 inhabitants, has 300 ministers of the Lutheran Church. The government pays their salaries—from $20 to $300 a year.

A SOCIETY called the Catholic Union has organized a pilgrimage from America to the grotto of "Our Lady of Lourdes," and thence to Rome.

OMAHA proposes to build a big wooden tabernacle for Mrs. Van Cott, no church in the town being large enough to hold the people who desire to hear her.

THE revival spirit is spreading through the churches of Great Britain, and has even reached some of the High Church congregations of the English Church.

A DISPATCH from Rome says the Pope has written to the Austrian bishops, inciting them to use all their influence to prevent the passage of the proposed ecclesiastical laws.

IT IS said that since the revival began in Great Britain the great publishing house of the Bagsters, London, has not been able to keep up with the increased demands for Bibles.

AN exchange says that there is scarcely a daily paper now in Boston which does not give more space to the pulpit than the theater, taking one week with another. A fact worth thinking of.

THE representatives of the Friends of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware have adopted and published an address, vigorously condemning theatrical exhibitions and horse-racing.

THE Wesleyan Missionary Society gave £150 in aid of the widow and family of the late Emile F. Cook. A fund is being raised among the Wesleyans in England which bids fair to realize a considerable sum.

AMONG the many bequests of the late Gail Borden were $13,000 for the American Bible Society, $5,000 for the Tract Society and $2,000 each for the American Missionary Association and the Sunday School Union.

THE North India Bible Society has issued Mark's Gospel in the language of the Gonds. The Kols of Chota Nagpore will also soon be supplied with copies of the Scriptures, or portions of them, in their own language.

THE United Brethren in Christ this year celebrate the hundredth anniversary of their existence. Efforts are being made to secure centenary offerings to the amount of $500,000 for missions, church building and the Union Bible Seminary.

A NEW religious body, styling itself the New Catholic Church, has been organized in New York. Its purpose, says the New York Sun, is to bring about a religious reconciliation of all mankind, and to create a religious co-operative unity.

ASSISTANT BISHOP CHENEY, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, has been followed into the new movement by his congregation in Christ church, Chicago. The members met recently, and formally organized themselves into a Reformed Episcopal society.

THE London Methodist says: "The late Thomas Wilson, Esq., J. P., of Waterford, a devoted Methodist local preacher, it is reported, has bequeathed £20,000 to benevolent objects, including £10,000 to the British and Foreign Bible Society and £5,000 for Methodist purposes."

THE annual meeting of the North American Relief Society, for the indigent Jews in Jerusalem, Palestine, took place in New York on the twelfth ultimo. It was resolved that the sum of $700 be transmitted to Sir Moses Montefiore, to be forwarded for the benefit of poor Jews in four cities of Palestine, namely, Jerusalem, Hebron, Tiberias and Safat.

THE Theological School of the Reformed Church at Yokohama, Japan, progresses favorably, under the liberal assistance of missionaries of other churches. There are a number of native candidates for the ministry. The two native elders, whose missionary tour through the country during October of last year was recently recorded in the Independent, are now each keeping night meetings in Yeddo and Yokohama, which are well attended by deeply-interested hearers.

THE Austrian government has given the Pope another blow. It has by a decided vote resolved that the Theological College at Innsbruck, which is in the hands of the Jesuits, be broken up in July next. The college is looked upon as the nursery of Jesuitism for Austria, Germany and Switzerland. Of the 200 alumni matriculated only 60 are Austrian subjects, and on this ground the chamber has formally determined that the college, which trains chiefly foreigners, cannot in fairness be supported out of Austrian funds.

A REMARKABLE movement, headed by a native, says the Friend of India, has set in among the people of Eastern Bengal. The leader has a number of followers who read the Scriptures and endeavor to live after the example of the apostles and early Christians. They are vegetarians, and discard the use of medicine, seeking the cure of sickness by prayer to Christ. Such movements, outside of the church, and mingled, as they are, with error, show how the gospel influence is growing strong in India, and is awakening men's attention to its truths.

THE Jewish mission of the Free Church of Scotland entered upon their new premises at Constantinople, October 16, 1873. The building is large, comprising private apartments for teachers and missionaries, class-rooms for 300 scholars, and a chapel, erected at a cost of about $30,000. There are two schools in connection with the mission. The German numbers 120 and the Italian 60. The English embassador, Sir Henry Elliot, who presided on the occasion, gave an earnest testimony to the genuineness of the work of this mission, which differs from some others, in which bribes of various sorts have been held out to Jewish converts.

A YEAR SINCE two young men commenced a mission in Guadalajara, the second city in Mexico. They received a hearty welcome from the city authorities and the Governor of the State, and rare facilities were given them for the prosecution of their work. The attention of the people was awakened, and the opposition manifested by the priests only tended to give notoriety to the errand of the missionaries. The interest has spread to neighboring villages, and the demand for Bibles and tracts is greater than the supply. The Governor of the city has offered the use of one of the city churches, the room where the public services were held having been found too small. Several young men have become hopeful Christians and useful helpers; everything betokens a great working in Mexico.

THE religious awakening in Edinburg, Scotland, appears to be unparalleled. Dr. Arnot, in a late number of the Christian Weekly, attributes much of the success of the revivals to Mr. Moody's unquenchable zeal and indomitable perseverance. He thinks the explanation of Mr. Moody's great success lies in the fact that he is on fire himself, and kindles those with whom he comes in contact. Mr. Sankey's tender, powerful, articulate singing he also regards as a means of grace. Most of the British evangelical periodicals speak with hearty approval of this great work. The only noted exception is the Christian World. A great revival has also appeared in the east end of London, which was commenced by a monster prayer meeting.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE.—Three hundred and twenty-eight new members were received into this church at the communion service on the first of March. The pastor, Dr. Talmage, preached from the text: "This day shall be unto you for a memorial." At the conclusion of the sermon Dr. Talmage read the names of the new members. He said that some of them had not been baptized yet, but he would baptize them before the communion. One of them desired to be immersed, instead of sprinkled. Dr. Talmage said he would immerse that one at an early day, but could not do so that morning. He added: "The only difference between the Baptist Church and our church is that the Baptist Church believes that immersion is the only mode, and we believe in sprinkling and immersion both. So we have no quarrel with any one."

THE Universalist Register for 1874 gives statistics of the denomination for the past year. There are conventions in the States of Alabama, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia and Wisconsin. There are also churches, and in some instances associations, in Arkansas, California, Dakota, the District of Columbia, Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Nebraska, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia, and meeting-houses in Mississippi. The total of numbers, including the churches in Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, is: State conventions, 21; associations, 71; parishes, 954; families, 40,032; churches, 638; members, 27,709; Sunday school members, 54,532; ministers, 651; meeting-houses, 657, valued at $7,845,417. There are also four churches in Scotland. The number of colleges, academies and theological schools is 14, with an aggregate of 98 instructors and 1,195 students, and property worth $2,595,000. The Murray Centenary fund amounts to $120,930.44.

THE number of Congregational churches in the United States is 3,325, with pastors 893, with acting pastors for 1,608, supplied by licentiates, etc., 169; not supplied 655. With Canada, Nova Scotia and Jamaica, there is a grand total for North America of 3,431 churches. There are 3,238 Congregational ministers, of whom 898 are pastors, 1,396 acting pastors, not in pastoral work 944, besides 235 licentiates. In all North America the total number of ministers is 3,327, of licentiates 239. There are 323,679 Congregational church members in the United States—106,991 males and 208,575 females. Absentees, 42,660. There were added during the year 24,620—on confession of faith 13,216, by letter 11,312. There were removed 16,133—by death 5,294, by dismission 10,003, by excommunication 836. The number of baptisms for the year was 10,441, of which 5,871 were of adults, 4,570 of infants. The number in Sabbath schools is 372,554. There is a net gain of 4,763 in the membership—the smallest net gain reported since 1867, but larger than that of either of the previous seven years. The additions by profession are less than in any year since 1867, though little below the numbers of several years past, and above the average of the previous thirteen.

BEQUESTS TO RELIGIOUS USES.—The St. Louis Democrat of a recent date says: "An interesting case was decided by Judge Jones, of the Circuit Court. Before the adoption of the present Constitution of Missouri Madam LeMarque made a will, which contained a bequest of some twenty odd thousand dollars to Archbishop Kenrick, of the Catholic Church. The new Constitution now in force provides, article one, section twelve, that 'every devise of goods or chattles to, or for the support, use or benefit of, any minister, public teacher or preacher of the gospel, as such, or any religious sect, order or denomination, shall be void.' Madam LeMarque changed the phraseology of her will after the new Constitution came in force, and made the bequest to Kenrick without using his title, or saying anything that indicated his office or connection with the church. By the advice of counsel the executor of the will refused to pay the bequest, and Archbishop Kenrick instituted suit to recover it. It was proved that the testatrix intended the money to go to the Catholic Church, and that she made the bequest with that declared purpose; also that the outlines of the new will were drafted by Father Fox, a Catholic priest, who sent them to an attorney to have the will written out in due form. Judge Jones held the bequest to be in contravention of the Constitutional provision, and therefore void."

The New South.

The taxpayers of South Carolina are seeking relief from virtual confiscation and ruin by applying to Congress. Our condition in Louisiana is nearly as bad as that of South Carolina. The best properties in city and country are not worth one-half what they were even seven years ago. The other States most affected by the new condition of affairs are Florida, Mississippi, Arkansas and Alabama; but South Carolina and Louisiana are much more prostrated by negro and carpet-bag rule than these. Men divested of prejudice who visit these sections from the North admit the enormity of the evils under which we labor. Ex-Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania, after a visit to New Orleans, does not hesitate to express himself as to the lamentable state of affairs in Louisiana. Sectional bigots, and fanatical mouomaniacs like Bishop Haven, rejoice in the impoverishment which they witness, and glory in the results of negro domination. To them everything is sweet and rosy, and they take a fiendish delight in the subjection of intelligence, refinement and wealth to the coarse, ignorant and often brutal power of the new-made voters.

Such observers, however, as Abel Stevens, who can see things as they really are, and have the manliness and independence to say what they think, do not disguise the fact that these particular States are sadly and ruinously managed by the combined ignorance and knavery to which they have been consigned by the reconstruction policy of the national government. We here reproduce an extract from a communication of Dr. Stevens, the whole of which was published in the ADVOCATE of January 29:

A lamentable evil among the colored people is the facility with which they allow themselves to be led by political demagogues, especially by the so-called "carpet-baggers." The fact that these men represent, in a certain way, Northern political sentiment, should not blind us to the egregious vices of their character and policy. The fact that they stand out, among the colored masses, in contrast with the old "masters," whose excessive "conservatism" might endanger the rights and improvement of the freedmen, should not disguise to us the appalling corruptions and financial ruin with which they are devastating whole States, and thereby forestalling, annihilating, the best prospects of their colored population. South Carolina is absolutely ruined; no statesman on earth, no angel in heaven, can suggest a solution of her financial problem; none seems possible but the great crime of "repudiation." And this means simply moral ruin added to financial ruin. It is paltry logic to say that South Carolina, as the old leader of disloyalty, deserves this ruin. What of the hosts of her black population in that case? She is substantially a commonwealth of freedmen; they are her dominant majority. Her ruin is their ruin. By their needless concession to the "carpet-baggers" they and their children, for indefinite time, are submerged, with their far less numerous white neighbors, in a public wreck which is hardly paralleled in the history of civilized governments. We would not here touch upon political ground foreign to our sphere; our readers know well that our political sympathies are on the side of the colored race and of all men who legitimately labor for their welfare in the South. But we know what we affirm when we say that the "carpet-bag" politicians are unscrupulously ruining the cause which they pretend to uphold. Not a few of them are men who were furious secessionists till their cunning detected the coming fate of the Confederacy, when they changed their politics in time to secure the patronage of the government and the favor of the freedmen. The latter now have the control of several States at the ballot-box, and in every one of such States their leaders have been driving them to destruction. Official and political corruption are rampant. The freedmen are cajoled; the leaders are enriched, and the States wrecked. Northern politicians should understand these facts; the government at Washington should ponder them gravely. The dominant party of the North can never wield a permanent influence in the South till it gets rid of the shameful prestige of the men who have for some years pretended to represent it among the freedmen, while ruining whole States and enriching themselves by the spoils.

This testimony of an intelligent and fair-minded Northern man is true. Negro voters, controlled by unprincipled men, are surely bringing about a state of things disastrous to almost every vital interest of the country. The Legislature of Louisiana, recently in session in New Orleans, was a disgrace to the civilization of the age. Composed, in large measure, of ignorant negroes, and under the most corrupt and corrupting leadership, it was a melancholy burlesque and travesty on all that is decent and respectable. No man of ordinary intelligence and honesty could read its proceedings, especially of its closing meetings, without almost despairing of the State for which this rabble of stupidity and folly was making laws. It is estimated that the taxation here is fully ten per cent. on the present value of property, and that the average decline in the value of real estate since the war is not less than one-half. The intervention of Federal bayonets in foisting the present State government upon us has contributed greatly to the present burdens and oppressions; but, should negro votes preponderate in the future, prospective improvement is not very flattering. Any State that is Africanized is bound to go down. This is the trouble in the three or four States which are suffering most at the present time. Without intelligence, without property, and under unprincipled guidance, it is not likely that the colored voters and law-makers will act wisely and well.

Congress has placed these States where they are. Moved by what they regarded as a political necessity, they have given the franchise without qualification to a race incapable of exercising it, and the drift of subsequent legislation, and the power of the administration, have been directed to confirm and perpetuate negro rule. What relief Congress may grant to South Carolina we do not know, but we suppose that nothing will be done for the present. A new reconstruction by Congress in reference to suffrage would seem to be the only measure which can afford immediate relief. This may come with the change which is now strongly manifesting itself in the complexion of politics in the Northern States, but it will be only after the present policy is shown in the result to be utterly destructive. Relief by the education and general improvement of the negro is at best a long way off. To educate and Christianize is a duty, and may, in the course of a generation or two, do much to qualify the race for citizenship. Beyond Congressional action and the elevation of the negro there is the hope of white emigration. After awhile, when the West is pretty fully occupied, and when lands and homes in Texas are no longer cheap, and possibly at a much nearer day, the tide from Europe and from the white States of the Union may set this way.

We can hardly believe that, with a climate and soil surpassingly inviting, and contiguous to an enterprising and intelligent population, these fair territories will be given up to permanent waste and impoverishment. The negro has been secured in his liberty and civil rights, and every field of industry and enterprise has been opened to him; but the country may, after a full trial, conclude that he has no right to destroy the richest and most productive portions of the national domain. In this new South a costly experiment is being tried, which is bringing disaster and depression for the time, but we have hope that in the end the follies of prejudice and partisan legislation will yield to the great argument of history and Providence.

Horrible Assassination.

MR. EDITOR: I send you the following extract from the Two Republics in reference to the murder of Mr. Stephens, the missionary, on the fourth of March last:

A horrible murder was committed on the second instant, at Ahualulco, in the State of Jalisco, a small town about thirty miles from Guadalajara, on the person of Rev. Mr. Stephens, a Protestant Congregationalist minister, and missionary sent out by the American Board of Foreign Missions from Boston. From all accounts this horrible crime was a deed of fanaticism and prompted by religious persecution. The following telegram furnishes a portion of the particulars:

"GUADALAJARA, March 4.

"At two o'clock A. M. on the second instant the house of Rev. Mr. Stephens was assaulted by a mob composed of about two hundred persons, crying: 'Long live the curate, death to the Protestants.' They forced the doors and entered, destroying and stealing everything they found. Stephens took flight when he saw the yard invaded by murderers, but he was brutally assassinated; his head was severed into several parts, and his body was very much mutilated. The guard of the jail, far from giving aid to the victim, assisted the aggressors, causing a scandal by firing several volleys. According to reports the soldiers did most of the sacking of the house. The originator of this horrible misfortune, according to data, not without foundation, is the curate, whose exact words pronounced the previous day (Sunday) in the pulpit were: 'The tree that bears bad fruit should be cut down.' In order that the crime should not be wanting in barbarity the bells were rung immediately."

Another dispatch says that it is believed that the bells were rung to raise the alarm, and not as a token of triumph. By information received on the wires we are assured, from the best American sources and others, that the federal and State authorities are pursuing the murderers with the utmost rigor of the law; and although it was impossible for the authorities to give protection to individuals, especially when danger was not expected, they have not been slow or inactive in seeking to enforce the vengeance of the law, and to vindicate the rights of society. We hope, among the first arrests that were made, was the originator of the outrage, and doubtless an active instigator of the assassination. The true maxim in statesmanship is: "The higher the social standing of a culprit, the more certain and severe should be the punishment."

Since the foregoing went into type, we learn by telegrams to the government that several persons responsible for the assassination of Mr. Stephens have been arrested, and among them the curates of Ahualulco and Techitan.

Rev. Joel T. Daves writes (March 4) of this murder: "It is a sad affair. Minister Foster received this evening, by telegraph, full particulars. He says the government has taken extraordinary measures, occupied the town with three hundred soldiers, sent a judge with special prerogatives, and that all is being done that can be. Bishop Simpson has had an interview with President Lerdo in reference to the matter, which he reports as quite satisfactory."

The State of Jalisco is, as you know, on the Pacific, the next below Sonora. It has been a turbulent region, and was only brought fairly under the present Mexican government during the past year. It was a great risk that Mr. Stephens ventured upon the work of a mission so far from the protection of the capital, in a village at least thirty miles from Guadalajara. It is not to be supposed that the strong arm of the law can be invoked in time at such exposed points in a country which is just getting out of a state of long-continued war. At several distinct times during the past two years parties have been attacked by mobs while engaged in prayer meetings or while preaching: Mr. Puseo, twelve months ago, at Toluca; Gomez, at Capulhuac, some six months ago. In the latter instance the mob was incited by a priest, and so severely beat a lame man, one of the congregation of Mr. Gomez, that he died. In these cases the result was a greater inquiry after the word of God and a larger attendance at Protestant services.

The support of the government to all churches—equally to all—and to order is prompt and effective.

Yours truly, J. C. K.

Itinerancy and Learning.

The church of Moses was provisional and under legal ceremonies, and was therefore distinctively conservative. The church of Jesus is permanent and under gracious principles, and is therefore distinctively aggressive. To have spread Judaism over the world would have been to destroy it. To have limited Christianity to a single people would have been to destroy it. The aggressiveness of Judaism, what it had, was wrapped up in its conservatism; and the conservatism of Christianity is wrapped up in its aggressiveness. The command, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles," was given before the resurrection, and could not have been given after it. The command, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," was given after the resurrection, and could not have been given before it. The gospel, then, is essentially missionary, and demands a traveling ministry. This demand our church has endeavored to meet by its itinerant system. We are itinerants on the principle that this system, more perfectly than any other, adjusts the machinery of the church to the genius of the gospel, and on no other. Congregational Methodism can never have large success, because its polity, like the polity of Judaism, is too conservative for the gospel. Calvinistic Methodism cannot succeed, because its theology, like the misconceived theology of the Jews, is too conservative. Episcopal, itinerant Methodism must always succeed, because both its polity and theology are aggressive, and consequently harmonize with each other, and also with the spirit of the gospel. The living power of the gospel can pass right through the machinery of the church, and pour itself upon the world without hinderance or pause. Timid men may prophesy our dissolution and absorption into other ecclesiastical communions, but such an event can never be so long as we hold to our distinctive theology and polity. The sun will rise in the West sooner than such a thing come to pass.

But the ministry, like every other employment, has a reflex influence upon the workman himself—educating, developing and preparing him for performances more delicate and labors more difficult. A moment's attention will suffice to see that the itinerant system has in it a great number of conditions favorable to such professional education, and that if a man truly converted and called to preach will put himself into it with all his heart, he is bound to grow up to a lofty stature, if not to realize all the possibilities of his manhood. And all this, too, by the natural and legitimate reaction of his employment upon his mind and heart. By this system mechanics and mill-boys have been developed into doctors and bishops—grand ones too. Methodism has long ago demonstrated the fact that it does not require a college training to make great and successful preachers.

But because the itinerant, the gospel plan so naturally makes great and successful preachers, we must not conclude that it makes learned preachers; for eloquence is one thing and learning quite another thing. The two must not be identified nor confounded. We have many eloquent preachers, but we have but very few learned ones. But we must have learned preachers; because learning (I use the word in its highest sense, as embracing the knowledge of language, history, science, art, etc.) has always been and still is the great armory from which the enemies of the church have taken their weapons. While, therefore, it is not necessary to offensive movements—dogmatic statement being sufficient for that—it is necessary to defensive movements—dogmatic statement not being sufficient for that. It is not an indispensable element of aggressiveness, but it is an indispensable element of conservatism.

And now I repeat that as the conservatism of Christianity is wrapped up in its aggressive truth, so likewise is the conservative power of the church machinery lodged right where its aggressive power is lodged—that is, in her ministry; in our church, in her itinerant ministry. As the soldiers who conquer a country must hold that country, as the shepherd who leads the sheep must fight for the sheep, and as the farmer who sows the seed, must fence in and cultivate the crop, so must the men who preach the gospel defend the gospel. No other class has ever done it, no other ever will do it, no other can be trusted to do it. Every minister, therefore, while he faithfully preaches the word, is bound, as much as in him is, at the same time both to cultivate learning in himself and to foster it in others. Whoever does not is either a hard-shell ignoramus, too dull to know what are the functions of his high office, or a wretched miscreant, living in careless or willful disregard of most solemn duties. The church likewise is bound to do the same thing—bound as well by considerations of self-respect and self-preservation as by her sacred duty to her divine Master and the souls he redeemed; and if she refuse to do it, or fail from any cause to do it, she will justly receive both the contempt of man and the displeasure of Christ.

The problem to be solved, then, is this: How can we by legislation cultivate learning, not in the laity, but in the ministry, and at the same time preserve our itinerant system intact?

J. W. RUSH.

APRIL 1, 1874.

Letter from East Tennessee.

MR. EDITOR: Our city has recently been visited by a gracious revival of religion, such as has not been experienced here for twenty-five years. Three hundred persons perhaps were converted during the protracted services, which began in January and closed last Sabbath. Among the converts were the principal men in our city. But few women comparatively were subjects of the work, and very few young persons. This, you are aware, is an unusual feature in revivals. Heretofore women have largely outnumbered the men as members of the church. We have been disposed to attribute this to the more gentle and impressible nature of woman; but may it not be partly because God would use her faithful and conservative heart as the custodian of his truth—that she should act as the "ark" to preserve the truth during the time in which Israel was at rest, and that now, when he would prepare for war with his enemies—active, aggressive war—he is calling in the strong men? We may not read these "signs" aright, but they are attracting general attention. We live in times full of stirring events.

It has been observed, both by the religious and secular press, that great revivals of religion followed the financial troubles of 1837, and also of 1857; and that now in 1874, at the end of another money crash, a wonderful revival is spreading over the land. There is danger of connecting these events in wrong relations. Financial troubles do not produce revivals of religion—they do not promote them—but God, who rules over the secular world as well as over the religious, may suffer men to ruin themselves in worldly matters, that their souls may be saved. The passion for gain, when gratified, becomes so absorbing as to exclude everything else, and upon the ear of avarice the sound of the gospel falls in vain. These terrific financial crashes rouse men to reflection, and as they see their riches flying from them their thoughts turn to the true riches—to the treasures that never decay. "In the day of adversity they will consider." The vanity of earthly good never appears so great as under the pressure of temporal adversity.

We have also had in east Tennessee, though not at Knoxville as yet, the "women crusaders." At Greenville there has been a protracted siege. A woman by the name of Ward was engaged in the whisky trade at that place, and the "crusaders" attacked her; but it was "Greek meeting Greek," and up to the present neither party has conquered. All good people are in sympathy with the "crusaders" in their desire to put down the "diabolical traffic," but all do not approve the means employed by them. I presume that those most active in this war have suffered from the horrible thing they wish to destroy; and who does not feel sorry for these innocent victims of the vice?

News from all parts of our Conference brings "glad tidings" of revivals. At Bristol, Chattanooga, Maryville, Kingston, Clinton, Cleveland, Lenoir's and many other places gracious revivals are now in progress. Never, within the memory of men now living, has there been so widespread a religious interest. England and our own country have been visited, but never before was there in all Protestant Christendom such a general awakening.

Bishop Keener's letters are read with great interest. He is creating a strong sentiment in favor of the Mexican mission. May God prosper it! Yours truly,

W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., March 30, 1874.

IT IS refreshing, says the Independent, to see how vigorously the Boston Pilot has denounced the conduct of the Catholics concerned in the outrages on Protestant missionaries in Mexico. It says:

"Another report has come from Mexico to the effect that 'a Catholic mob,' on the night of March 7, attacked the Protestant chapel in Puebla, smashed the windows and furniture, destroyed the Bibles, and stoned the pastor, Rev. Antonio Corral. Neither these nor the wretches who murdered the Protestant minister in Mexico last week have any right to call themselves Catholics."

That they are Catholics, however, in good standing, we fear there can be no doubt. The Catholic Standard talks differently. To be sure it spares just one line to "condemn unqualifiedly the acts committed," and then proceeds for a column and a half to qualify its condemnation by saying in the very next line that "there will yet be found, on investigation, much to mitigate and excuse the conduct of those who perpetrated them. It then goes on to tell how the church in Mexico has been despoiled of its possessions (not by Protestants, however,) while "peripatetic colporteurs insinuate themselves and their wares into the very bosom of their families." Were the case reversed, Protestants would not submit. "Submission would cease to be a virtue, and our streets would run red with the blood of slaughtered Catholics!" Nonsense thrice distilled! Catholic "peripatetic colporteurs" are welcome to travel wherever they please; and, were a Protestant congress to secularize Protestant church property, Protestants would not set to murdering innocent Catholics for it. "So long," adds the Standard, "as Catholics are not all saints," "and so long as the conversion of Catholics is attempted by the use of such means and by such men as in Mexico, tumults, riots and bloodshed may be expected as very untural results." And this is its way of condemning such acts "unqualifiedly." The Tablet, of this city, also makes its apology for the ruffians, to the effect that, if the murdered Mr. Stephens was in the habit of using such language as is found in its Protestant exchanges, it is no wonder he was murdered. That is a pretty bold way of telling us what we might expect if Catholicism were in power. We think it will not be very soon.

THE produce of the sale of secularized convent property in Italy, since 1867, amounts to nearly £18,000,000.

PROGRESS OF THE MEETINGS.—Last Sabbath, the twenty-ninth of March, says the Galveston Christian Advocate of April 1, will be a day somewhat memorable in the history of the church in Galveston. The churches united in this work met in mass meeting at the Opera House, and that spacious building was crowded with an eager, anxious, prayerful throng. Deep solemnity rested on the vast congregation, and profound emotion stirred many hearts. At three o'clock on Sunday afternoon there was an open-air meeting, and reporters and experts in such matters think there were two thousand persons in the vast audience. Some four or five short addresses were made, prayers were offered and sweet songs were sung. At night there was at several points street preaching. There have been services at St. John's church morning and evening of each day up to date. The attendance has been large, the religious feeling deep and general, the zeal of many has been active and efficient, and many have been seeking and finding the "peace of God." Each evening a number of ministers, with active and zealous brothers and sisters, have gone in wagons to various populous centers in the city, and have labored with hundreds who have seldom in years past heard the sound of gospel grace. Many, by a show of hands, have said: "Pray for us;" and some have been brought to visit God's house who had not done so for months and years past.

M. E. CHURCH (NORTH) IN MEXICO.—Work of Rev. Thomas Carey, D. D., in Mexico, for one year: A Spanish congregation formed, and kept, with inerersing interest as to numbers, in No. 10 Calle de Lopez, May 18, 1873, to December 20, 1873, the Sunday preceding his entrance into the new church.

A good congregation in the new church, sustained and left for Dr. Cooper, when Dr. Carter preached his last sermon, February 1, 1874.

A Sunday school of fifty or sixty children. The social meetings on Sunday at four, and Tuesday and Thursday evenings, well attended by Mexican people.

Some conversions, and many ready to join the church as soon as the church chooses to receive them.

Two colporteurs (Moyeda and Monteil) raised up under the ministry of Bro. Carter, who are canvassing with Bibles, Testaments and gospels in the City of Mexico by system—going in and or visiting every house and every dwelling-place. Another colporteur raised up by Bro. Carter (Dubois Tousee,) who is constantly visiting towns and villages all around Mexico city.

Two large boxes of tracts or small books in paper covers from Mexico nearly all distributed (in Spanish).

One large box of tracts or small books and bound volumes nearly all distributed or sold (in Spanish).

Four young men raised up, who, when Dr. Cooper took charge of the church, were preparing for native preachers—Mouteil, Mota, Carmona, Cruz and Pinta.

One Roman Catholic priest converted, who preached for us often, attended our meetings, and finally died happy in the Lord.

General Conference Daily.

It is important that all persons having the names of subscribers to the Daily Christian Advocate, to be published during the General Conference, forward them to us immediately. We are preparing our mailing books, and wish to have them ready by the twenty-fifth of this month.

Brethren who procure lists, and cannot forward them before the twenty-fifth, will please inclose them to me at Louisville, Kentucky. All letters inclosing the names of subscribers, written before the twenty-fifth, will be addressed to me at Nashville, Tennessee.

Delegates and others who will pass through Nashville on their way to the General Conference will report the names to us here on their arrival, if not convenient to send them earlier.

The subscription list will be much larger than for any General Conference Daily previously published.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

Missionary Drafts.

Persons holding drafts on the treasurer of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will please not send them to the treasurer for acceptance before due. It was understood at our May meeting that drafts drawn on our treasurer were not to be transferred, especially before due, but, properly indorsed, they were to be sent to Nashville for payment. We did not to protest a draft for non-acceptance, but they cannot be accepted till the work is done. This is the rule which the board has prescribed. Brethren holding drafts will forward them in due time to the treasurer or secretary, and all will be right.

J. B. MCFERRIN, Sec.

THE TEMPERANCE BANNER, a handsome eight-page sheet, is published monthly at $1 per annum. It is published in Jackson, Mississippi, by H. Hines, and edited by our talented friend and brother, Rev. C. B. Galloway, of the Mississippi Conference. The Banner is well edited, devoted to a good cause, and we wish it may live long and prosper. We have received the first number.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE ... DISTRICT.—Be pleased to take the collection to defray expenses of the delegates to the General Conference, and forward to Dr. M. ... drews, at Selma, during the ... month.

SUGAR KETTLES, BOILERS, BAGASSE BURNERS AND CHIMNEYS CONSTRUCTED ON SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES.—M. J. B. Dunn, whose advertisement will be found elsewhere, calls the attention of planters, manufacturers and steam-boatmen to his scientific principles of economy in the use of fuel. We insert the following certificate from a late well-known sugar planter, one of the most experienced and successful in the State:

"OAK FOREST PLANTATION,
"Terrebonne, La., Feb. 25, 1871.

"I have long known Major Dunn, of this parish, as a skillful and educated mechanic of rare abilities, and, it affords me much pleasure to add, as a reliable and courteous gentleman. For more than a quarter of a century he has been zealously devoted to perfecting the art of setting sugar kettles, boilers, etc. His scientific researches for the known and unknown laws of heat, combustion, evaporation, etc., together with the practical experience of a lifetime, have enabled him to approach those great desiderata: 'The most rapid evaporation, the greatest economy of fuel, and the most enduring method of construction.' His indefatigable perseverance and ultimate success eminently entitle him to a share of the patronage of those engaged in the manufacture of sugar. TOBIAS GIBSON."

EXTRAORDINARY CURES.—Dr. Porter, in another column, gives the names and addresses of a few of the persons for whom extraordinary cures have been effected by his treatment. We have been exceedingly cautious in soliciting specialists in the healing art, and have refused the advertisements of three-fourths or more of those applying for admission into our columns, and we have declined until recently to express any opinion of Dr. Porter; and while we think we did right in declining any favorable notice until satisfied that he was worthy of confidence, we take pleasure now in stating that we have assurances from personal friends who have been under his treatment that satisfy us of his skill in those cases which he treats.

MOSS.—The New Orleans Moss Company advertise for consignments of moss. This is a branch of business rapidly developing, and affords profitable employment to many persons who have not capital to engage in other pursuits. Those who are engaged in the business will find it to their interest, we think, to acquaint themselves with the above company. See their advertisement.

CHEAP SHOE STORE.—Under the above legend Mr. J. Estoup advertises his boot and shoe store, located at the corner of Dryades and Thalia streets, where will be found a large and well-assorted stock of ladies' and misses' shoes, and gentlemen's boots and shoes, including a new style of shoe, direct from the manufacturer, for which many improvements are claimed.

MONOCHROMATIC PICTURES.—Mrs. A. J. Richmond, No. 191 Carondelet street, having secured the services of Mr. H. Busch, is prepared to execute monochromatic pictures, taken either from life or from other pictures. The scale of prices and other information will be found in her advertisement elsewhere.

THE attention of our readers is invited to the card of William Bohne, practical and scientific optician, who keeps a large assortment of spectacles, etc., at his well-known establishment, No. 1 Carondelet street, near corner of Canal

MR. EDWARD THOMPSON, agent of the Beckwith sewing machines, publishes a letter in another column, to which we direct attention.

DENTIST.—We direct the attention of our readers to the card of Dr. George J. Friedrichs, No. 155 St. Charles street.

MRS. D. J. LOEWENSTEIN, the lady Cheap John, No. 519 Magazine street.

MRS. M. G. BROWN'S preparations are advertised in this issue.

CROCKERY, CHINA AND GLASSWARE.—Samuel E. Moore, at 102 and 104 Gravier street, whose advertisement appears in our columns to-day, is one of the largest importers and dealers in crockery, China, glassware and house-furnishing goods in our city, and one of our most worthy and reliable merchants and citizens, and we take pleasure in commending his advertisement to the attention of our readers.

MORE EXTRAORDINARY CURES

BY

DR. PORTER.

Evidences of the great success of the modern system of cure, as practiced by DR. PORTER, at No. 167 St. Charles street, are so abundant that the most incredulous must admit that there is something remarkable in his cures if they will but call on the parties and investigate the facts for themselves.

Only a few of the great number of cases cured by DR. PORTER have been published. No case is published unless the patient, through gratitude, furnishes his testimonial for the benefit of the afflicted, as it was through advertisements that he learned of the great cures that are being daily affected by DR. PORTER.

A Remarkable Cure of Rheumatism.

J. B. WILDER, Esq., residence 132 Spain street. This gentleman had for several years suffered excruciatingly from Chronic Rheumatism, both night and day, and for months in succession could not leave his room; was instantly relieved of pain by Dr. Porter, and all symptoms of the disease commenced to rapidly disappear. May be referred to.

A Severe Case of Rheumatism Cured in Two Days by Dr. Porter.

MRS. ELIZABETH BAUM, daughter of Mrs. Thompson (midwife,) residence No. 81 Eugheln street, between Dauphine and Burgundy streets, was almost disabled from Rheumatism; in two days after being treated by him was perfectly cured. May be referred to.

Deafness of Seven Years' Standing Cured.

MR. LOUIS PAHEL, residence 226 Gravier street, corner of Dryades, had been afflicted with deafness for the past seven years. Hearing perfectly restored by three treatments by him. May be referred to.

Deafness Cured.

MISS MARY TRAIN, residence corner of Jena and Odlesman streets, Jefferson City. Deafness of eight years' standing cured by three magnetic treatments. May be referred to.

Chronic Ulcers and Skin Disease of Fourteen Years' Standing.

MRS. JULIA A. FITZGERALD, residence No. 320 Fulton street, had been a great sufferer from chronic ulcers (soros) for fourteen years; also from a skin disease; and when she applied to Dr. Porter, a few weeks ago, the lower part of one of her limbs, including a portion of the foot, was almost destroyed, and from year to year the disease was rapidly progressing. She had applied to and been treated by all the best physicians not only of this city, but of all other cities, and never obtained the slightest relief. The pain she suffered during the past fourteen years of her affliction she described as indescribable, not having any respite from pain, day or night, until she placed her case in the hands of Dr. Porter, who, by a few weeks' treatment, has effected almost a perfect cure, and her complete and permanent restoration to health is positively certain. Those similarly afflicted should not fail to call on this lady and learn the particulars of her case.

A Remarkable Cure of Paralysis and Loss of Speech.

MRS. CATHERINE PHILPOTT, residence on Front Levee street, corner of Erato, had been suffering from paralysis of the left side, also total loss of speech. Paralysis cured and speech restored by two treatments. Those similarly afflicted should call and see this lady.

Blindness Cured.

MRS. MARGARET EGAN, residence corner of Claiborne and Gravier streets. Almost totally blind for three years. After four treatments by Dr. Porter can see to thread a fine rambrie needle. Her age is sixty-five years. May be referred to.

DR. PORTER can refer to hundreds, in addition to the above, by calling at his parlors, No. 167 ST. CHARLES STREET, many of whom he is not at liberty to advertise publicly.

Those wishing treatment should not delay until the last few days of the doctor's stay in the city, as his parlors are then generally so crowded that it is almost impossible for him to treat all who come.

Patients Will Pay in Proportion to Property.

MONOCHROMATIC PICTURES.

These Pictures, for beauty, durability and cheapness, take the lead of all other photographic inventions. Chemists and Photographers have vainly tried to introduce them in perfected form, and it is not recently that they were presented in New Orleans by Mr. H. BUSCH, of California, in such perfection of finish as to defy the criticism of connoisseurs in the Fine Arts.

Having secured the services of the above-named gentleman, I beg to announce to the public that I am now prepared to produce by this new discovery counterfeit presentments which, for fidelity to the original, will rival the touch of the great masters of art.

My prices are, for life size, $10; for life-size bust, $5; cabinet, $4; enlarging from card or small-sized tin-type into, with solid frame complete, $3. Ecaniel cards and work in the latest styles also executed. Those wishing Pictures can send negatives.

SOLE PROPRIETOR OF

ABRAMS' CHILL TONIC,

a most effectual, reliable and entirely safe remedy for Chills and Fever, etc. Sold under full guarantee.

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.

THIS MEDICINE, FOR THE CURE OF

DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA

and all diseases of the Bowels, is without exception the most reliable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most fatal attacks. For infants its use is recommended in preference to the death-dealing "Soothing Syrups," etc. No household should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.

A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from

Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis,

and all Pulmonary affections. It is specially adapted to the relief of Hoarseness, and all diseases of the Throat caused by excessive use of the voice. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Hall & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION,

Scrofulous and Tuberculous affections, Rickets and all complaints characterized by deficient nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.

This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is

Unrivaled as a Rubefacient,

and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the extremities should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

All of Hall & Lyons' well-known Proprietary Medicines are owned and prepared solely by

THE GREATEST

MEDICAL

DISCOVERY

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunderlammer.) the has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind o Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease is an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is

Raw and Inflamed,

your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and piling away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

Six in a row on the door step there,
Nice litt e schoolma'am, prim and fair,
Funniest noses, dimpled chins,
Listen awhile! the school begins.

Classes in 'rithmetic, come this way.
Why were you absent, Mary Day?
Now, Miss Susan, what's twice four?
May be it's 'leven—may be more.

Johnny, don't blow in your brother's ear;
Stop it, or I must interfere!
Say your tables—now begin;
Trustees" might come dropping in!

What would they ever say to us,
Finding school in such a fuss?
Baby Jennie, how is that?
D O G, dear, don't spell cat!

Terrible boy! your face is red;
Why will you stand upon your head?
Class in spelling, that will do;
Here's certificates for you.

Faces as pure as the morning sun,
Voices that ring with harmless fun,
Sweet is the lesson you inhear!
Sweet! and I learn it all by heart.

Six in a row on the door-step there,
Nice little schoolma'am, prim and fair,
Free of this world and all its pain,
Would I could join your school again!

The Sun's Warning.

There was once a man that led a very unhealthy life. He would scarcely ever walk out or ride in the open air to see the fields and flowers, but stopped indoors, poring all day, and a great part of the night, over books and papers, so that at last his doctor said to him: "If you go on like this your eyesight will soon fail." But the man, instead of believing him, went on just as before.

In time he found he could not read his books so easily as before. But, instead of blaming himself, he blamed the books, and said: "I don't think people print so clearly as they used to print when I was a boy, and the printing of my old books seems to fade somehow." Presently he found that pictures seemed less distinct than before, almost as though they were all of one color. But, instead of blaming himself, he blamed the pictures, and said: "People do not paint pictures as they used to; and the old pictures fade and change color so that one would hardly know them again." Then, when his friends called to see him, he used to say to them: "How is it that you look so changed? You are not so fresh and bright-looking as you used to be, but dull and gray." Sometimes his friends answered: "It is not we that are changed; it is your eyesight that is growing weak." But he only laughed at them.

At last, one bright spring afternoon, he went out into the fields, which were all gay with cowslips and blue hyacinths and all the flowers of June. He looked at them and picked a few, and said to himself: "It is very strange; somehow the flowers do not seem so bright and clear as they seemed once. They smell as sweet as ever, but their colors seem faded."

While he said this he happened to glance up at the sun, and the thought suddenly came into his mind: "Why, even the glorious sun seems dull to me; but the sun cannot have changed, so it must be my eyes that are in fault, and I fear I am growing blind."

Poor man! How sadly he went home! But his sadness was good for him in the end, for he went at once to the doctor, and whatever the doctor told him to do that he did; and fortunately it was not too late, and his eyesight, instead of becoming worse, became much better. But if the sun had not told the poor man that he was growing blind, he might have gone on in his bad habits till it was too late, and then, perhaps, he would have been blind forever.

As we see the sun with our eyes, so we can see goodness with our soul or spirit. But as we destroy our eyesight by bad habits, so by unkindness, falsehood and dishonesty our souls are darkened and cannot see goodness so clearly. Then sometimes we find fault, not with ourselves, but our people and things around us, just as the man in the story found fault with the books and pictures. In the same way we say, "Our friends are unkind and selfish," when, all the while, it is often we that are unkind and selfish.

Then, just as the sun warned the foolish man, so God warns us. God shows us goodness, and makes us feel how blind and bad we are. This pains us; but it is good for us, and God pains us to make us better.

Remember that you cannot see goodness in others unless you are good yourself. Jesus said: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God;" and it is also true to say: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God's goodness in all men and women, who are made in the image of God."—Parables for Children.

The King's Son.

There was once a king's son who heard that the people in one of the king's countries a long way off used to be afraid of the king, and used to say that the king did not care for them. So he thought to himself: "I will go and teach them better." But he said: "If I go with my fine robes and crown they will say: 'What do you know about a poor man's life? You do not know what it is to be cold and half naked and hungry.' I will put off my royal dress, and I will wear clothes like the poor people, and live and eat as they do."

So he changed his clothes and left his palace, and went to that distant country, and there he lived among the poor, leading a harder life than any of them. And yet, though he was often hungry and cold, and sometimes did not know where to find a night's lodging, he never complained and never broke the laws.

After he had lived in that country for some time he went back to the king at home. It happened that soon afterward the people of the country sent messengers to the king to complain that the laws were too hard. The king's son then said to these messengers: "Believe me, the laws are all for the best, and the king loves you as though you were his own children." "Ah," said the messengers, "but you do not understand our way of life, how poor and miserable we are, and how hard it is to live." "You are wrong," said the prince; "I understand your life quite well, for I lived myself as a poor man among you for a long time. I know you have to suffer a good deal; every one of your troubles is known to me, for I have suffered the same things. Yet still I assure you that the king is very fond of you, and will make you perfectly happy in the end."

Then the people, when they heard that the king's son had lived among them, and knew all about their troubles, began to be more hopeful, for they said: "He knows what it is to suffer, and he will surely help us."

The king's son is Jesus, who is the Son of God the Father. Jesus was, as we are, tempted to do wrong. He knew what it was to be poor and hungry and homeless; he felt the bitterness of death. More than this, he knew what it was to be persecuted by enemies, and to be misunderstood and deserted by his dearest friends.

Do not fancy, then, when you have your little trials and troubles, that Jesus knows nothing about them and cannot understand them. Jesus was a child, as you are, and he has never forgotten that he was a child. You may tell him of all your troubles; he will understand and sympathize with them all.

HELPING THE MINISTER.—"One thing helped me very much while I was preaching to-day," said a clergyman.

"What was that?" inquired a friend.

"It was the attention of a little girl, who kept her eyes fixed on me, and seemed to try to understand every word I said. She was a great help to me."

Think of that, my little ones; and when you go to church or chapel fix your eyes on the minister, and try to understand what he says, for he is speaking to you as well as to the grown-up people. He is telling about the Lord Jesus, who loves the little ones.—Missionary Echo.

Farm, Garden and Household.

SOAP WASH FOR FRUIT-TREES.—The beneficial influence of a weak alkali wash upon the bark of fruit-trees is of long-standing acknowledgment. Its action is in expansion of the pores, while at the same time it is destructive of all animal life, sporadic or otherwise. Writers or theorists differ as to the best time to apply it; but we have always found that, if good common sense be used in preparing it, the time of application is always good. Now for the preparation: If you use purchased potash, reduce it so that you can bear your finger in it half a minute or more with a tingling or sore sensation. If you can obtain good soft soap from the refuse grease and lye of ashes saved up dry, then take it and reduce it (the soap) down, not to a suds, but so that it will not be ropy when used by a soft whitewash brush. Use it freely, and it matters not materially just when, but say now, and any time most convenient until July 1; but after that time it is perhaps better to wait till the next year.—American Farm Journal.

GUMMING IN FRUIT-TREES.—Recent investigations by M. Paul Sorauer confirm the theory that this phenomenon is due to the conversion into gum of the secondary layers in the cells and vessels. Not only are the cellular membranes transformed into gum, but new gum is formed from the sap, which is thus diverted from its proper use. The gummy exudation is produced in consequence of the transformation of the secondary layers of the vessels into gum, and from the formation in the woody tissue (as happens normally in the bark) of an abnormal cellular tissue, which speedily becomes converted into gum. The tree so affected forms (by compensation) new wood on the side opposite to the diseased spots. The bark cracks, and hence the justification of the practice of incising the bark. But the cause of the disease—that which disturbs the balance—is unknown.—Journal of Chemistry.

HOW TO KEEP HAMS.—Every season more or less hams are destroyed by insects, or rendered unpalatable to be eaten by decent people. By following this method the insect can be kept at a distance, and is very simple, and within reach of almost every farmer in the country: After the meat has been well cured by pickle and smoke, take some clean ashes free from bits of coal; moisten them with a little water so that they will form a paste, or else just wet the hams a little, and rub on the dry ashes. Rubbed in thoroughly, they serve as a capital insect protector, and the hams can be hung up in the smokehouse or wood-chamber without any danger of molestation.—Country Gentleman.

PERPETUAL COMPLAINTS, says an old writer, are like unto a new cart, which creaks and cries even while it has no burden but its own wheels; whereas that which is long used and well oiled goes silently away with a heavy load.

DEAFNESS CAUSED BY CATARRH.

Catarrh not unfrequently produces deafness. Mr. Levi Springer, of Nettle Lake (P. O.), Williams county, Ohio, formerly of Durham's Corners, Ohio, has been cured of deafness of fourteen years' standing by using Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. He was so deaf he could not hear a person talk when seated by his side, and can now hear the church-bells ring two miles distant—so he writes.

A MARKED CASE OF DEAFNESS CURED.

DICKERSONVILLE, NIAGARA Co., N. Y., February 22, 1871.

About one year ago I caught a severe cold in the head, which terminated in a severe form of Catarrh. During the time ulcerations occurred in the nasal passages, and I became wholly deaf in one ear, with partial deafness in the other. The inflammation had involved all the delicate structures of the ears, and I was in immediate danger of permanent deafness. The discharge became profuse and fetid, both into my throat and from my ears. In this condition I called on Dr. Pierce for aid, who prescribed his Golden Medical Discovery and Catarrh Remedy, and under their use have rapidly recovered. My hearing is restored and my Catarrh is entirely well. JOHN SMITH.

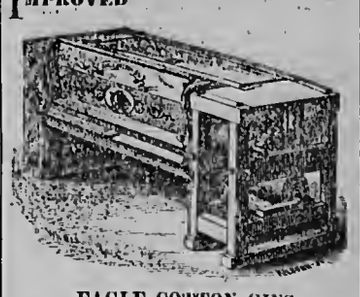
IMPROVED



EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a liner or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. It has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger sizes of gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins already kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

PRICES.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the tenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales...	5,006
Lake		31
Arkansas		147
Mobile		27
Texas		214
Total		5,425

On Saturday the market opened with a better feeling generally, and a stronger demand, under which nearly 3,000 bales changed hands during the morning at steadier prices, without any appreciable variation, after which, as the extent of the movement was developed, factors became still more stringent in their pretensions, and in several cases obtained ⅛c. more than they could have realized on Friday. Strict ordinary sold at 13c., good ordinary at 14⅛@14¼c., strict good ordinary at 14⅞@15c., low middling at 15⅝c., strict low middling at 16, 16⅛@16¼c., and middling at 16⅝c. The supply was moderate, particularly of desirable kinds. The sales embraced 5,350 bales. On Monday the movement commenced with a fair demand, but without much activity, factors adhering to their advanced pretensions of Saturday, which sometimes checked operations, and the sales during the morning were of moderate extent, at full prices, without showing any quotable advance, after which buyers came forward more freely, and, opening some competition, factors were enabled to realize an advance of ⅛@¼c. Prices were strengthened by a firmer and more active market at Liverpool, with sales of 15,000 bales, and an advance of 1-16@⅛c. On futures at New York, as well as by the gloomy accounts of the flood, which are well calculated to excite some misgivings with regard to the next crop. The sales summed up 7,900 bales. On Tuesday, under the advance reported at Liverpool, and an improvement in foreign exchange, the market opened with a good demand, and 7,500 bales changed hands at an irregular advance of ⅛@¼c. The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 20,750 bales, against 17,400 for the corresponding time last week and 16,340 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,121,331 bales, against 1,069,076 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 340,524 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 106,176 to Great Britain, of 98,536 to France and of 102,334 to other foreign ports. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR.

A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the Lives of the Bishops will be published in the DAILY; also a Pen-and-ink Sketch of the Members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the greatest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the masterminds of the church—questions in which every Methodist will feel the liveliest concern.

The DAILY will be a handsome sheet of four pages, of good size, printed on good paper, and in clear type; and neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it all that the church may desire.

The services of a competent reporter have been secured, and the subscribers may rely on receiving the earliest intelligence of the deliberations of the Conference through the Daily.

Many persons desire to preserve the Proceedings and Debates of the General Conference in a permanent form. To all such we take pleasure in saying that the members of the DAILY ADVOCATE when bound will make a handsome volume that may be read with interest in years to come.

Address A. H. REDFORD, Agent,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Subscriptions will be received by ROBERT J. HARP, Agent, New Orleans. 1e5 tf

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1874. NO. 17.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NASHVILLE, April 15.—A tornado passed over and through this city from west to east at half-past twelve o'clock this morning, doing an immense amount of damage. It struck the city at the fair grounds, passing diagonally through the city and out by the university and Mount Olive cemetery. Its width seems to have been about a quarter of a mile.

LITTLE ROCK, April 15.—The city was electrified to-day by a coup d'etat which makes one's hair stand. Brooks, who, as you know, has been periodically trying to remove Governor Baxter by order of court, concluded to take the matter in hand vi et armis. Accordingly, at the head of two hundred negroes, to-day he marched up to the capitol, seized the Governor in his office, took possession of the premises and proclaimed himself Governor.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., April 16.—There is but little change in the gubernatorial muddle. Brooks holds the State House, which is surrounded by armed men, about one hundred in all; they have two cannon. Baxter's headquarters are still at St. John's College, in the suburbs of the city. He is preparing to retake the State House. About fifteen hundred stand of arms belonging to the State are at the arsenal. Both Baxter and Brooks have made a demand for them, but demands are refused. Men are pouring in on every train. The city is rather quiet.

BOSTON, April 17.—Mr. Washburn has been elected United States senator, having received 152 votes.

The following is the thirty-third and final ballot for a senator to succeed Sumner: Whole number of votes 267, necessary for a choice 134; William B. Washburn 152, Curtis 64, Dawes 26, Adams 15, Loring 4, Banks, Wendell Phillips, Stephen N. Gifford and John G. Whittier 1 each.

NEW YORK, April 18.—Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr.'s, new and large church is to be dedicated on Monday next, the services to continue eight days. The church is highly ornamented, but has not a single ecclesiastical symbol. Mr. Tyng says his church is a working and preaching church, in which the ritual is subordinate. If Bishop Potter and the church authorities let him alone, and let him work in his own fashion, he shall remain as he is. If they meddle with him he will go out. On Monday night all denominations are to occupy the church.

MEMPHIS, April 18.—The Ouachita has flooded the valley through which it flows. The towns of Trenton, Monroe, Columbia, Harrisonburg and Trinity, and nearly every plantation on the river, is injured. The loss will reach $1,000,000.

BAYOU SARA, April 18.—To the Editor of the Picayune, New Orleans: Misinformed yesterday? From best information it is Morganza levee that has broken. No particulars. River still falling here slowly.

E. W. WHITEMAN.

PHILADELPHIA, April 19.—A Sunday paper to-day contains a long account of a cremation case in this city. A physician, whose son died on Tuesday, erected a furnace in the cellar of his house and reduced the body to ashes.

MOBILE, April 20.—Reliable information received to-day from Yazoo, Mississippi, says, in reference to planting interests, water is so high that no planting can be done in the valley of Yazoo. Weather to-day clear. River falling perceptibly. If the fall continues a moderate crop will be made. The crops in the hills have also been greatly retarded by continuous rains, but if present weather continues an average crop will be made.

WASHINGTON, April 21, 1874.—Governor William P. Kellogg: Relief bill passed the Senate. Rations and clothing now forthcoming for our distressed people.

J. R. WEST.

LATER FROM WASHINGTON.—At a late hour last night (April 21) Governor Kellogg received a dispatch from Congressman Morey, stating that General Grant had signed the relief bill, and that orders would be sent under it at once to this city, say to-day, and clothes, provisions, etc., would at once be issued. This bill, it will be remembered, gives the President discretion as to what amount shall be issued, and he will rely on the reports furnished him.

BOSTON, April 21.—At a meeting held at the City Hall, to-day, twenty prominent merchants were appointed a committee of citizens to raise subscriptions for the relief of the Louisiana sufferers. The New England cities are requested to co-operate.

A dispatch authorizing a draft for $10,000 was at once sent to New Orleans.

MEMPHIS, April 21.—The Memphis and Charleston trains now run through; also the Mississippi and Tennessee. The Memphis and Louisville road is still obstructed on the Clarksville division, but telegrams state the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers will doubtless begin to fall to-night; in the meantime trains will be run to Louisville via Nashville.

Reports from lower Arkansas and White rivers give gloomy reports of the inundation. Immense numbers of stock have been drowned, and actual destitution prevails in many places.

The Howard Association have sent $2,500 to the Howard Association of New Orleans for sufferers from overflow.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, April 15.—The trial of Archbishop Ledochowski, of Posen, for violation of ecclesiastical laws, resulted in contumaciam—to dismissal from his see. No appeal from the judgment will be allowed.

LONDON, April 16.—The General Trans-Atlantic Company's steamer L'Amerique sank ten miles off Brest. All saved except the second officer.

This was her third trip. She had seventy-five cabin passengers.

Additional dispatches just received state that the steamship L'Amerique sunk near the Island of Ushant, off the coast of Brittany, twenty-six miles west northwest of Brest.

The passengers and crew were rescued by English, Norwegian and Italian vessels, which were in the vicinity. An Italian vessel arrived at Brest this afternoon with the crew. Information of this disaster was not received at Lloyds, in London, until half-past three o'clock this afternoon.

LONDON, April 18.—The remains of Dr. Livingstone were buried today. Coaches of the Queen and Prince of Wales were present.

The grave is in the center of the west part of the nave in Westminster Abbey, near that of Stephenson, the celebrated engineer.

BAYONNE, April 20.—The Carlists in north Spain have organized a government, with a regular cabinet, in which General Elio is minister of war, Admiral Nineta of foreign affairs, and Senor Pinul of finance and the interior.

GRAND LEVEE GONE!—A Serious Break in Iberville.—The Picayune of April 18 says: Added to the disastrous intelligence received yesterday from half a dozen different quarters, and forming the climax of our ruin by overflow, comes the news of a crevasse in Grand levee, the great bulwark on whose steadfast strength depended the safety of the rich districts of Lafourche, Terrebonne and Attakapas, and by the breaking of which all hope of their vast and promising crops is utterly destroyed. A telegram to Bayou Sara, however, evoked, at a late hour in the afternoon, the following reply:

"Bayou Sara, April 17.—To Picayune Office, New Orleans: Grand levee broke last night. Small break at Morrison's. River declined fourteen inches here in consequence.

E. W. WHITEMAN."

There is nothing to be said. The best and richest region of Louisiana will be inundated, and with it the finest promise of harvest in Louisiana since the war.

SCHOLARS occasionally ask their teachers what they should do when they grow up, and it often happens that the ministry is recommended by the good elders. Many of our preachers doubtless associate their first thoughts in connection with their calling with the Sunday school; but there have been so many mistakes made in this important matter that teachers perhaps ought to discourage a choice until later in life. There might then be fewer preachers who find it hard to keep their congregations awake, but who would do well in other walks of life. The moderator of a certain presbytery in Scotland once said to a candidate for the ministry, who had left broom-making: "My young friend, the presbytery believes that all men should glorify God in some way—some by preaching, some by making brooms, and that you are one who should make the brooms."—Christian Union.

THE editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal has been searching for information in regard to the financial affairs of Mississippi, and he thus records the results of his labors: "We had the honor of a call yesterday from a prominent colored statesman—an ex-senator—of Mississippi 'How did it happen,' we inquired, during the very able conversation which ensued, 'that while the entire expenses of your State government in 1865 amounted to but $260,248.04, your public printing alone cost you in 1873 no less than $331,945.66?' 'Well, I don't know nizac'ly how it is, boss,' answered this Christian statesman, 'but the fac is, down at Jackson, sich things as public print'n has riz monsus here lately.'"

THE seventieth birthday of the Finnish poet Runeburg was celebrated on the twenty-eighth of February, when, it is said, he received the congratulations of a whole nation, and his home at Borgo was the center toward which flowed in copious streams the affectionate and laudatory homage of admiring friends from every part of Finland and Sweden, while the day was celebrated at Stockholm and Helsingfors by the performance at the principal theaters of the poet's most popular dramatic productions.

EPISCOPAL COUNCIL.—The thirty-third annual council of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the diocese of Louisiana met on Wednesday morning, the thirteenth instant, in Trinity church, on Jackson street.

The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. John Francis Girault, rector of St. Anna's chapel, New Orleans.

After the service the council was called to order, and twenty parishes were found represented.

EIGHTY THOUSAND VOLUMES have been added to the University Library of Strasburg during the past year. It now numbers over three hundred thousand volumes. Half the added books have been bought and the other half given.

The Inundation.

We gather the following items from the papers of Tuesday morning, April 21:

The river has slowly fallen in front of the city, and there is no danger to be apprehended here.

The Morganza, which is above the Grand levee, to which it joins, is surely gone, though the Levee Board this morning received the following letter from that place:

NEW TEXAS LANDING, LA., April 19, 1874.
Louisiana Levee Company, New Orleans:

I have to report a crevasse between Morganza and Grand levee, opposite Alfred Morgan's old house, which took place on the evening of the sixteenth instant. All the hands had quit the work, and the water running over the levee caused the break. The break is widening toward Grand levee. Altogether, not much water passing through, as the levee was surrounded by old levees and side levees on the river side. The crevasse caused the river to fall one foot by next day at Grand levee, which is still in order.

River fell eighteen inches since the crevasse, but took a fresh rise of four inches last night. We have had heavy rains since Wednesday.

EUGENE OUHRE
Commissioner.

There are no other crevasses reported, with the exception of one at Waterproof, in Louisiana, which is not thought to be of much moment, and will be closed. Elsewhere the fall in the river, caused by the crevasses at Morganza and Hickey's, has been so great as to preclude all danger.

BELOW THE CITY.

By the steamer Empire, which arrived on Sunday evening from below the city, we have intelligence of the river flood in Pluquemine. The crevasses which occurred during the storm at Etienne Doleze's and Pierre Collett's, about two miles above the courthouse, on the left bank, remain as yet unclosed, though work is being rapidly pushed. These, however, with other breaks, have submerged the coast for eight or ten miles above and below the courthouse.

In this section there are about forty of the best-producing rice farms on the coast.

Last year there was produced on these now submerged farms twelve thousand barrels of clean rice, which, averaging $10 per barrel, amounted to $120,000, which is now an utter and entire loss. Indeed, many of the residents have been obliged to flee for their lives.

It is estimated that two hundred and fifty thousand acres of cotton lands and thirty thousand acres of sugar lands are overflowed in Louisiana, and that fifty thousand people are in a homeless and starving condition.

Judge Ray, one of the committee who came here last week to appeal for aid in behalf of the suffering thousands in the Ouachita valley, telegraphs as follows, immediately on returning to Monroe:

MONROE, LA., April 20, 1874.—To William P. Kellogg, Governor of Louisiana, New Orleans: Just arrived; trip from city here gave me opportunity to see the extent of the flood. The country is under water from Monroe to the mouth of Red river. Ten thousand people will soon be on the point of starvation here. Immediate relief is needed. I telegraphed Morey to-day.

ROBERT RAY.

The Governor, whose office has been besieged from day to day by persons asking for aid, has issued the following proclamation:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPT.,
New Orleans, April 20, 1874.

To all State and Parish Officers in the Overflowed Districts of Louisiana, and to the Citizens Generally:

The calamity which has so unexpectedly overtaken our State, when all indications pointed to a speedy renewal of agricultural and commercial prosperity, calls for the highest exercise of your judgment, forbearance and humanity.

The State government has done and is doing all that its resources will allow to alleviate the sufferings of those who have been reduced to destitution by the disastrous crevasses in the levees of our great rivers, and by the floods consequent upon the recent heavy rain-storms.

Requisitions have been made by the State authorities, and by our representatives in Congress, upon the general government for immediate aid, and I have reason to believe that the requisition thus made will be promptly responded to.

The mayor of New Orleans, the president of the Chamber of Commerce and a well-chosen committee of distinguished citizens are doing all that can be done to send immediate assistance to those most in need of it, and the appeals that have been made to the great cities of the North, East and West will doubtless, in due time, bring a generous response.

In the meantime, let me enjoin upon you patience, forethought and confident reliance upon those who have undertaken to avert, as far as possible, the evils which now threaten you.

Supplies of money, food and clothing will be forwarded to you without one moment's unnecessary delay. To send your distressed population to this city, already overcrowded with unemployed people, will only embarrass the efforts that are being made for your relief.

I recommend that you organize in each parish a committee of trusted citizens who will undertake the proper distribution of the supplies sent. Forward the names of the committees so organized at once to the president of the Chamber of Commerce, to the mayor of New Orleans, to the chairman of the relief committee (I. N. Marks, Esq.) or to myself. As far as possible, enable the laborers of the inundated districts to make their way to those parishes which are not under water, where their labor is still needed and will meet a just repayment. Relax no efforts to diminish and control the overflow which now afflicts you, and it may be that even out of this dire calamity some good may come, through the attention of the nation at large being so painfully concentrated upon the question of making the building and maintenance of the levees of the Mississippi, as also the preservation of a proper outlet for the river, a national work.

Given under my hand, and the seal of the State hereto attached, this twentieth day of April, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and seventy-four, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-eighth.

WILLIAM P. KELLOGG.
By the Governor:
P. G. DESLONDE,
Secretary of State.

M'CULLOM'S CREVASSE.

A dispatch received on Tuesday morning states that the crevasse at McCullom's will shortly be closed. Funds are needed, and it is requested that they will be sent by the steamer W. S. Pike. The dispatch is signed D. C. Montan.

BOSTON RESPONDS.

The following was received by C. H. Lawrence, Esq., of the well-known house of C. H. Lawrence & Co.:

"Boston, April 20.—C. H. Lawrence, Esq.: Telegram received. The mayor has called a meeting for to-morrow. Boston and New England will not be backward. Keep up good courage. Is it desirable that contributions be sent out by steamer direct?

FRANKLIN SNOW,
One of the Committee."

It is supposed that Congress has by this time authorized the distribution of rations to the sufferers, and authorities of the State and city are doing what they can, in connection with the private efforts of our citizens, to relieve the destitute. It is supposed that liberal contributions will be sent from the North and West. The calamity which has come upon our afflicted State calls for the utmost liberality, and promptly.

IN AN editorial on the dangers of inflation and the duty of private citizens, the Nation remarks:

It must be remembered that the principle on which this inflation of the currency has been advocated is one which renders the limit of $400,000,000 indefensible. That is a mere arbitrary line drawn by our necessities during the war. There is no good reason why an inflationist theories it should be regarded. If one hundred millions of fresh paper will "stimulate industry" and give us "cheap money," as Kelley says, one hundred millions more will have similar effects, and so on ad infinitum. Inflation is a shoreless sea under a starless sky, so that, if the late action in Congress be adopted as a policy, it starts us on a voyage without end.

What is the remedy? The first and foremost is, of course, the old one, the rousing of public opinion into determined hostility to these wild and vicious measures and their authors, and the provision of a party organization in which this hostility can find expression and make itself felt. But this is the work of some time, and it may not be really to save us till it is too late. Should it appear likely to prove too late, or the situation, for any other reason, assume a hopeless aspect, we think the bulk of intelligent men would agree that the best thing to be done is to urge on the work of inflation as rapidly as possible, so as to burst the bubble at the earliest possible moment. Our only salvation lies in getting back to specie payments, and if the public will not take the recorded experience of other countries and generations as a guide in dealing with the matter, but must have experience of its own, the experiment will be rendered all the less costly and demoralizing by making it as quick as possible in its operation. Therefore, if we are to inflate, let us have out at once all the paper that the wildest inflationist thinks would be good for us. The alternative, in short, presented to us is somewhat like that which sometimes presents itself to an engine-driver when he sees a cow on the track; if he can stop before striking her, well and good; but if this be impossible, the next best thing is to put on more steam and cut through her. In the meantime, or pending this process, individuals can help the country out of the difficulty by conducting their own affairs, as far as possible, on a gold basis. Promissory notes and nearly all contracts can, under decisions of the Supreme Court, be lawfully made payable in coin, and it will hereafter be prudent as well as patriotic to do so. Steady adhesion to this policy by large numbers would gradually push the greenbacks aside for all purposes but the supply of small change, and would probably before very long open the eyes of the rogues and barbarians in Washington, who are now making us the laughing-stock of the civilized world, and discrediting our securities in foreign markets.

A Birthday Letter.

The venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce, entering upon his ninetieth year, writes as follows to the Southern Christian Advocate:

This is the morning of my birthday. Let me address this letter as a heartfelt greeting to my sympathizing friends everywhere, through the columns of our weekly, welcome visitor, the Southern Christian Advocate.

It is a bright and beautiful day. And for a man, just now entering upon his ninetieth year, I am, like the day, bright and calm. There is, however, one drawback upon the sweetest pleasure of an old man's life, at least it is so in my case—many of my friends think more of me and better of me than I can think of myself; and this is a sort of mortification against which there is no help so long as a man keeps modest. This experience arises, no doubt, from the fact that every one that knows his heart at all knows his own heart-troubles best. There is, however, in this dilemma left to me one comfort—it is this, no friend can ever think any better of me than I have tried seventy-one years of my life to deserve; and yet such is my sense of nothingness that the reward I sought on earth seems to me to be so far overpaid as to make me feel as if, in this respect, I have deceived my friends; but the testimony of my conscience is that I have never sought to win the good opinion of my friends, because of its own glory, but because of its own worth.

I have tried to realize, in my own life and experience, the truth of Solomon's eulogy upon old age, that the hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness, and really nowhere else. Who could look upon me now without emotions of shame and involuntary contempt if my hoary head were found in the way of unrighteousness? Not one. It is divinely true that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor than choice gold. Grace, divine grace, early in life, both inclined me and enabled me to make choice of these as my riches; and I am inclined to believe I have inherited by it great wealth in the way of loving favor. There is a promise that a good man shall leave an inheritance to his children's children; in my case they will have to take their dividends out of this wealth of loving favor. I can bequeath little else. But in so far as my children's children are concerned, if they will follow examples, there are many ways in which they will find that, even in its family sense, a good name is better than precious ointment. I not only refer to these pleasant memories in reference to my posterity, but also to my race, for now, in the morning of the ninetieth year of my responsible example, it is the joy of my heart that in my fifteenth year I resolved that I would never contribute a cent to the support of any institution or entertainment or pleasure party, if, upon a careful examination of its effects upon pure religion, it might demoralize what ought to be the girdle of principle and law of moral integrity. Although I feel, after all, as if I was going out of the world deeply indebted to it, by reason of having accomplished so little in arrest of its monstrous wickedness, I shall leave it with a consciousness that all that know me will say: "He never corrupted any one of his race by his example." To abstain from all appearance of evil is not to be regarded as a high-up grade of religion, from away below which there is saving godliness. No, my dear friends, this is the first and lowest step in practical religion. Without a fixed purpose to abstain from every appearance of evil, the first spring of practical religion is in paralysis. No one was ever converted below this point, and whoever, after conversion, falls below this point, falls from grace. Many of my friends in Georgia wonder why I am never seen at her fair grounds; the reason is because all her fair grounds are race grounds, and I could not go there without making myself as ridiculously inconsistent as I would be to preach against revelings, and then rent out the basement of my church for a restaurant, in order to enable the church up stairs to pay expenses and preach against revelings. This is my application: If fair grounds cannot be self-supporting, but have to affiliate with gambling alliances, I must abstain. There is not only the appearance of evil, but a fellowship with evil.

But of my birthday dinner. Solomon says: "Better is a dinner of herbs with love than a stalled ox, and hatred therewith." We had a dinner better than a stalled ox, and a full flow of love therewith. I had about thirty of my own family circle present, running out far into the fourth generation; and, to add to the pleasure of the occasion, the Rev. J. W. Burke came in on an unexpected but most welcome visit, and with his sunny face increased the social cheer. Nothing was wanting to make it the high-day of my life but the presence of all my progeny. We feasted freely on the finest dinner ever given to me as a birthday festival; drank nothing but water, enjoyed life, and closed the day by the baptism of my last-born great granddaughter. I cannot expect ever to see another birthday like it; but I give thanks that this last one was bright without and calm within. Nothing happened through the day, even to the crying of a child, to disturb our peace. Let us say: "Bless the Lord, from everlasting to everlasting, and let all the people say amen. Praise ye the Lord."

SUNSHINE, March 21, 1874.

Oregon Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: How vividly I realize that touching and inspired poetry in that song of songs:

"Lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone,
The flowers appear on the earth;
The time of the singing of birds is come;
And the voice of the turtle is heard in our land."

For two or three weeks past we have had some of the most charming weather imaginable—would suit the most fastidious. The gentle sunshine, so bright, not glaring, so regaling, not oppressive, reminding one of a Cuban's calm clime of Italy. Fires are decidedly comfortable mornings and evenings. Vegetation is quite advanced. Fields sown last fall are clothed in most luxuriant green, auguring a bountiful harvest; while flowers are blooming and shed forth the sweet breath of spring. We will likely have more rainy spells before the long, delightful summer and fall shall come. Our friends (we have friends here) tell us we will forget the long, dreary winter. The winter has been severe to me. Exposed, as I have been, to its inclemencies, I have not missed a quarterly meeting. Will commence my third round at this place next Saturday and Sabbath.

The winter has been long and dreary, but not so cold as in north Louisiana. Those who are here in time to prepare and house their winter's wood do not suffer. The thermometer during the whole winter was rarely below freezing. Plows are moving, and cultivators and machines for sowing grain are busy on every farm. A few weeks of earnest work now insures a great yield in August and September. A steam plow is in operation in Yamhill county—just below here. It does finely on these prairies. It goes about as fast as a man can run, and turns over about five feet of land at a time, I am told.

This valley is finely watered. Bold-running streams supply a power to drive machinery that is unsurpassed. This water power is abundant and found everywhere through the valley. It is pure, limpid and swift-rushing free-stone. Wells and springs afford fine drinking water.

District school-houses are located every few miles, and indicate a good and desirable state of things educationally. School is taught six or eight months in the year, showing the dissemination of knowledge. We have colleges and universities at various points. We are not behind most of the older States educationally. The Corvallis Agricultural College is a fine institution. Profs. Arnold, Emery and Hawthorne are a triad of educators unsurpassed—hard students themselves, and devoted to their profession. There is a farm in connection with the college. Instruction is given in the halls of the college to male and female. The college is endowed with over ninety thousand acres of land in the State, besides an annual appropriation from the State. We feel much gratified at having our children passing through its curriculum.

The face of the country is pleasing—mostly prairie, with skirts of timber on the water courses, and the mountains on every side. I have thought there was not a sufficiency of timber for all purposes, but those who have been here longer, and know more of the country than I do, say there is plenty. Lumber is cheap; transportation is convenient. Fire-wood in Corvallis ranges from $2 to $4 per cord. Sawed lumber from $8 to $13 per thousand.

The letters I have written have drawn out many letters of inquiry. Time forbids me to reply to each one. I hope those brethren will consider their letters answered through this medium. Those who desire further information, and who will send me twenty-five cents, I will send a pamphlet entitled "Oregon as It Is," which professes to be a fair and just statement of facts in connection with this country. I will make some other statements in my next, which I suppose will suffice for the present.

Would be so much pleased to spend a season with you, as in the days of yore. I feel the need of Christian sympathy and contact. Peace be with you! Affectionately,

T. B. WHITE.

CORVALLIS, March 30, 1874.

OUR co-laborer, Dr. Abel Steveus, in his travels for health in Florida, says the Methodist of April 11, found it necessary to send home his resignation of the editorial position which he has some time maintained in connection with the Methodist. The wear and tear of journalism, to which he has so long been subject, are, according to his best advices, incompatible with his complete restoration. He will, however, be hereafter an "editorial contributor" to our columns, as he was with Drs. McClintock, Nadal and other staunch friends in the early years of the paper. The doctor has sent us the warmest assurances of undiminished sympathy with all the special aims of the paper, and of pride in its achievements in Methodist journalism. Our readers will still hear often from him.

WESLEY once wrote to one of his preachers: "I am glad you have taken in hand that blessed work of setting up Sunday schools. It seems that these should be one great means of reviving religion throughout the nation. I wonder satan has not yet sent out some able champion against them."

THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1874.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

IT IS QUICK TIME.

BY REV. ALMERIN G. MILLER, A. M.

What's the time now? It is quick time,
Like an army in pursuit;
All the world together beat it;
Not a drum or heart is mute.

Ask the news-boy. It is quick time;
He is lightning from the sky;
Horse and rider speed the message,
As with lightning bound they fly.

Ask the tourist. This is quick time;
See the railroad's flying car!
Now behind and now before you,
Now from sight afar, afar.

Ask the world then. It is quick time;
All men, running, hurry, ho!
Faster flying, hither, thither,
Hurry, quick time—how they go!

Some to riches, some to ruin,
And the final goal is death.
See them! how they rush and struggle,
Falling, rising, out of breath.

Scorn or pity, love or hate them,
Still they heed not; on they press—
On to fame or wealth or pleasure,
Down to woe, want, wild distress.

Halt they will not. Heed thee? No.
This is a resistless tide.
What to do then? Do you ask it?
What to do? Why, on and ride.

On and ride, and give direction
To the mass of human mind;
Do not bolt and stand alone there,
Off and benefit mankind.

The Intellectual and Spiritual Endowments of the Pulpit.

MR. EDITOR: Give us an educated and attractive ministry, whose intellectual endowments are in keeping with "the spirit of the age." The advances of science and the arts have developed new theories of opposition to the Christian religion in the minds of its enemies, and we need men in our pulpits whose scientific, classical and theological lore will enable them to stand abreast with the advances of the age—to refute the arguments of the skeptic and demolish his false theories. Such is the clamorous cry of the epoch in which we live. That this mystery of iniquity is at work in the church, "chilling its ardor" and strengthening the unbelief of the world, and that, with sophistry and all the powers of genius, it is bribing intellect and prejudice to sustain and foster its errors, we do not question. Never, since the days of the Reformation, was there a louder or more urgent call for an efficient ministry than now. Yet may there not be some delusion, some "subtle snare of the great deceiver," in this clamor for "elevating the standard of preaching" to suit "the spirit of the age?" Does it proceed from a godly solicitude for the defense and promulgation of the "faith once delivered to the saints," or is there not lurking beneath it a pervasive spirit of pride, that tends to relax the tone of a spiritual religion, and convert our religious exercises into an intellectual entertainment? In our efforts to impart strength, and a nice and tasteful adjustment to the pulpit, we should study carefully the "pattern given in the mount," lest we unconsciously weaken and "depress it below the revealed standard." The well-directed application of a richly-endowed intellect, in harmony with and subserviency to the sovereign sway of the Holy Ghost, will contribute much to the strength and effectiveness of the pulpit in grappling with error and driving skepticism from its strongholds. But if we magnify human attainments at the expense of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, and a deep and personal experience of divine things, we will certainly rob it of its chief power and glory. "Our sufficiency is of God." The strength of the pulpit consists "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth," for "the foolishness of God is wiser than men." But this divine agency does not preclude the necessity of human acquirements and studious effort. Every preacher of the word is bound, by his sacred calling, to "study to show himself approved of God, a workman that need not be ashamed." A preacher cannot know too much, if his knowledge be properly applied; but human learning is valuable only as it becomes an auxiliary in the hands of the Spirit, in enforcing the truths of God's word. Without the Spirit's unction, even the "polished shaft of a Wilberforce," directed with "the precision of a Tell"—though it "cleave in twain the enemy's argument"—will leave his heart untouched. Learning, if made tributary to the cross, will become a tower of strength to the pulpit, but if made a fancied amulet of strength within itself, its vaunted glory will dishonor the Holy Spirit, and reduce the pulpit to a level with the rostrum.

Philosophy, rhetoric and all the sciences are valuable as adjuncts, but poor substitutes for the Spirit's unction.

Science, however valuable in its subserviency to divine inspiration, has no soul-awakening, soul-renewing or faith-begetting power. The pure gospel of Christ only is "the power of God unto salvation." But is there not a manifest tendency in "the spirit of the age" to ignore—practically, at least—the Spirit's agency in the preaching of the word? This subtle snare of the insidious foe, this cut-worm, this serpent seeking to coil itself in the very bosom of the church, and striking at the vital functions of the pulpit, is a deadlier enemy and more to be feared than all the Darwins, Huxleys and Tyndalls of the age. The preacher who fails to recognize his dependence on the Holy Spirit's anointing will soon fall an easy prey to satan, who, "transforming himself into an angel of light," manipulates the pulpit by wreathing it with chaplets of rarest beauty, and inflating the heart of his victim with the pride of intellect and the spirit of self-aggrandizement. His reward is the fulsome eulogy of formal worshipers, whose admiration of pulpit eclat and adoration of a "religion clad in silken sheen," have become their fashionable and patronized idolatry. In every age of the world the church has had to combat idolatry in some form. This is the great image whose brightness dazzles the eyes of the multitude. Robed in holy vestments, it essays to preside over God's heritage, and, being content with a merely ethical morality, it gathers many votaries around its throne. Such a religion cannot live without novelty, "the Athenian love" of which, we fear, has become the chronic disease of our modern civilization. The church has caught the infection so far that she has outlived our old-fashioned preachers, many of whom, though able expounders of the word, are considered behind the age, because they do not feel called to preach science, but believe that the gospel, as preached by Christ and his apostles eighteen hundred years ago, is still "the power of God unto salvation," and is adapted to all grades of society and intellectual culture. He who garlands his sermons with scientific illustrations—has glowing touches of the German artists, abounds in transcendentalism, in short, he who says the most beautiful and learned things, and festoons them in the most polished rhetoric—meets most successfully the demands of this class of hearers. Somehow there is a foreign odor, a fascination, about such preaching that pleases, and that makes it fall gently on the conscience, so different from the drastic theology of our plainer and more earnest preachers. These beautiful disquisitions—they are not worthy of being called sermons if devoid of the spirit of Christ—may shed a lustre over the character of the speaker, and give him a name that will secure to him the applause of the popular assembly; but there is something wanting. Sinners are not cut to the heart, nor Christians comforted, and the audience, in place of being subdued into a reverential awe by the conscious discovery of the divine Presence, feel, in their self-complacency, as if they were there only to be entertained by the eloquence of the preacher. The unction of the priesthood is not there, the costly incense of a heart richly imbued with the spirit of Christ is not there. His sermons glitter and shine, but not with the unction of the Holy Ghost. Under such preaching the church vibrates between the extremes of abnormal enthusiasm and spiritual depression. When the false stimulus has passed away they collapse, and in their extremes of depression awake to find their spiritual poverty as great as before, and their spiritual taste so perverted that they have no relish for "the sincere milk of the word," much less for "strong meats." This perverted taste, and aversion to plain, pointed preaching, that deals honestly with the human heart, exposing its real malady, and pointing to its only cure, has led many a young man to the incurable evil of plagiarism, that his sermons may be embellished with rounded sentences, and burnished with artistic touches that will satisfy the feverish demand. By the fulsome eulogies of those who thus bow at the shrine of intellectual imagery, a pretentious and unholy fastidiousness is fostered, while the cross—shall I pen the awful thought?—the cross, the hallowed, blood-stained cross of Christ! is made the background for the display of a polished rhetoric.

I hope no one will understand me as undervaluing an interest so vitally dear to our church as the education of her ministry. I most sincerely rejoice in the honors of genius and authorship that have been accorded to our ministry. We believe that every truly enlightened Christian exults in the prospect of increased facilities for a higher grade of ministerial culture in our Southern Church. We have no sympathy to offer those who, content with a few stereotyped, common-place sermons, abandon themselves to idleness. Grace, elegance, refinement and eloquence are the natural allies of the pulpit; but let them be subservient to it, so that the cross may stand in the foreground, rather than human attainments, and the Spirit of God be glorified, rather than the preacher.

No, we do not want less learning in the pulpit, but less men-pleasing, less self and time-serving, and more of the spirit of entire consecration, more holy living and holy anointing, more love, more faith, more humility, more zeal, more deadness to the world, and more of an indwelling Savior.

Let these graces permeate the mystical body of Christ, and let our ministry, with a deep and personal experience of the Spirit's holy anointing, preach Christ crucified, and we will be far superior to the scoffs and foul contumely of all the skeptical scientists, so called, of the age.

Terms of Membership.—No. III.

REPLY TO DR. PIERCE.

MR. EDITOR: My former articles were written before the appearance of Dr. Pierce's last two. Hence I ask indulgence for another short one, mainly to notice a distinction that the venerable doctor makes in his latest deliverances upon the subject under discussion. From the outset it has been my purpose to examine this subject from a Methodistic rather than from a scriptural standpoint. It will be time enough to examine which of the theories—the doctor's or mine—is most in accordance with the Scriptures when a proposition to change the General Rules is submitted in a constitutional form.

The distinction alluded to is this: In some of Dr. Pierce's late articles he considers the clause setting forth the terms of admission into the United Societies as only introductory to the General Rules, and forming no essential part of them, and hence subject to be repealed or changed by General Conference action alone—that it is not covered by the Restrictive Rules. Now let the candid reader turn to the General Rules, on page 26 of the last edition of our Discipline, and, unbiased by the exigencies of any theory, read the clause in its logical connection. Examining it thus, if he does not decide that the distinction will not bear criticism, I greatly err in judgment. Our last General Conference evidently considered it an integral part of the General Rules. Furthermore, church membership involves covenant stipulations, binding upon both the church and the individual member. The church can stipulate only with reference to character; and her stipulations would be incomplete did they not set forth the character entitled to admission into her communion. Doubtless the fathers of American Methodism so understood the matter. Hence their adoption of Mr. Wesley's General Rules, including the condition of admission to membership. But if Dr. Pierce's distinction be well drawn, there was a period of fifty-six years, from the Christmas Conference of 1784, when Methodism in America threw off its society form and took on its church type, to 1840, in which there was no stipulation setting forth the terms of admission. The clause in question was not such a stipulation, but was only introductory to the following stipulations, standing where a stipulation ought to have been put! The door into the church was left wholly unguarded by legal sanction—an oversight that we can hardly credit to the fathers of our church. On the contrary, if they recognized the clause under discussion as setting forth the terms of admission, it necessarily follows that it passed, in 1808, into the constitution of the church, and beyond the control of even General Conference action. Hence it is to-day the law of the church regarding the reception of applicants to its membership.

To sum up, Dr. Pierce's theory presents to us this dilemma: that the General Conference of 1840 went right over the fourth Restrictive Rule in "changing" the General Rules, or that the doctor is gravely misinterpreting their action. I confess it is hard to believe either alternative; but as we are compelled to admit one or the other, the latter is to my mind the more probable. The Conference must have put a different construction upon the meaning and force of the resolution offered by Dr. Pierce from that intended by its mover. With a Soule, a Bascom, a Smith and others present, who, during that memorable decade, did immortal battle in defense of the constitution of the church, it is asking too much of us to believe that the General Conference of 1840 permitted a resolution to pass its body so "glibly," changing so palpably an important clause in the organic law of the church. The only question to settle is: Did two-thirds of the General Conference of 1840 recommend that the terms of admission to church membership be "changed," and was the recommendation concurred in by three-fourths of all the members of the several Annual Conferences, present and voting on the question? If so, the proof is historical and can be easily made. If not, Dr. Pierce's interpretation of church law, defining the qualifications which entitle applicants to the privileges of church membership, goes inevitably by the board.

Rev. Joseph B. Cottrell, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: Bishop Marvin has removed the above-named brother from Selma, Alabama, to Owensboro, Kentucky. The East Selma church gives him up with the deepest regret. He had won the hearts of all his people, and the citizens of Selma universally held him in the highest esteem. His return to his old Conference, last winter, was hailed with gratification by his old friends throughout the Conference, who for the past twenty years have shared with him the toils and hardships of itinerant life. Twice had they sent him as their representative to the General Conference, knowing full well every sentiment he entertained touching church affairs. He never hesitated to express his views freely and with candor on all subjects pertaining to the church. As a debater he ranks among the ablest of the land, and no brother of the Conference ever was in trouble that could not find a bold advocate and unflinching friend in Bro. Cottrell, though never at the expense of truth and right. The churches he has served have universally been strengthened, though others may have followed and done the reaping. An itinerant indeed, having always received his appointment, whether great or small, without a murmur, serving the church faithfully and cheerfully in every field of labor, from an humble mission to that of a large district, looking closely after every interest and advancing the cause of our beloved church. I love the brethren of my Conference, and specially those of my district with whom I have shared defeats and rejoiced in victories, and would deeply regret to part with any one of them; but none more so than the whole-souled and generous Cottrell. These lines I have written not in fulsome praise, but in justice to a beloved brother who leaves us for a distant field. We give him up reluctantly to our brethren of Kentucky, yet congratulate them on receiving one of Alabama's ablest preachers, with a heart as warm and true as ever beat in the breast of any of her sons.

On Dress.

MR. EDITOR: If anything should attract the notice of young ladies and gentlemen at college, as well as of society in general, it is the spirit of the "Resolutions on Dress" adopted by the young ladies of Whitworth Female College. In these resolutions there is implied all the woes and toils and sorrows of a down-trodden people. They touch a chord of sympathy which should vibrate from the center to the circumference of our own sunny South. They are the whisperings of a true love, and a noble gratitude of worthy daughters to parents, who possess fortunes more valuable than gold or silver in the affections of these true young women. They are the offerings of a heartfelt sympathy for burdens and cares that make a sore journey for kind fathers and mothers who are striving to fit their sons and daughters to fill honored and useful stations in life.

Such women will make anything they are connected with good and great and glorious, whether it be college or home or society or nation. Happy parents! happy teachers! happy alma mater! happy lover! and, after awhile, happy husband! for such ornaments of grace as these fair daughters of Whitworth College. Now, Mr. Editor, if men were compelled to resort to such measures as Romulus and his men, or the Benjaminites were, in order to get their wives, and if we were in that number, and were blindfolded, we should not fear for our future bliss if we could only catch any one of these daughters of the South who voted, with all her heart, for those admirable resolutions. "Three cheers for the homespun dress the Southern ladies wear." "Favor is deceitful, beauty is vain, but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised." Mr. Editor, in unspeakable admiration of true women, we are yours, PRAIRIE.

The Good Dean.

Henry Alford was a prodigy in his childhood. Born in October, 1810, in London, he early astonished his family by his precocity. At six years of age he wrote a tiny book called "The Travels of St. Paul;" at eight he prepared a chronology of the Old Testament, entitled a "History of the Jews," in fifty pages; and in his tenth year he composed the beginning of a devotional tract under the title of "Looking Unto Jesus." The four chapters of this extraordinary product of precocity were under the following heads: 1. What looking unto Jesus means. 2. When we ought to look to Jesus. 3. Looking unto Jesus is the believer's comfort. 4. Texts of Scripture which order looking unto Jesus. Such was the plan of the little author's book, and we will venture to say that many a sermon preached last Sunday did not hide within it so well-jointed a "skeleton."

From such a precocious childhood one might predict a morbid and sickly career. Just the opposite was true. Dean Alford was one of the healthiest, heartiest men who ever climbed a mountain, or joined in a rollicking game of croquet or a bit of fun with his children, or got up "charades" for his guests, or handled a carpenter's tools so deftly that he could construct almost any article of furniture. A more robust man of universal talent and genial human sympathies has not lived in our day. He was a poet who published several volumes, a musician who could handle the harp and organ, an artist who kept water-color sketches and oil paintings on his easel constantly, a tourist who wrote charming books of travel, an editor who founded the Contemporary Review, a preacher who delighted the Queen with his simple, devout sermons, a mighty scholar who filled the church universal with his fame, and yet he had time for an hundred recreations, and a genial hand-shake for every guest. Of his genius as a hymn-writer Dr. Adams quoted a happy specimen at the close of his address before the Evangelical Alliance. Taking him for all in all, we are inclined to think that Dean Alford, of Canterbury, was the most remarkable man whom the Church of England has produced in this century. If we were called on to name the next two, they would be Frederick W. Robertson and Dean Stanley.

But the crowning glory of Dean Alford's character was his devoted piety and his staunch adherence to evangelical truth. He preached Jesus. He loved all who loved Jesus. He was never ashamed of the gospel of Christ. Frankly, fearlessly, he bore the blessed insign of the cross full high uplifted, whether he was preaching in a royal palace or to rustics in the mountains of Wales. All who knew him revered his manly piety, and loved his child-like spirit. In Canterbury he is still spoken of as "the good dean." There his outworn brain and slender frame now rest in the church yard of St. Martin's. Pilgrims from all lands will come to visit his tomb. It bears upon it the inscription prepared by his own hand: "The Inn of a traveler on his way to Jerusalem." Was a more beautiful epitaph ever written for one of Christ's disciples?—Cuyler, in Evangelist.

Jesus In Our Anguish.

Herein lies the great mercy and love of God, that we may go to him in our agony, even if we have never gone before. Oh, if prayer were possible only for the always good and always true, possible only for those who have never forsaken or forgotten God—if it were not possible for sinners and penitents and those who have gone astray—then of how infinitely less significance would it be for sinful and fallen man! But our God is a God of love, a God of mercy. He is very good to us. The soul may come bitter and disappointed, with nothing left to offer him but the dregs of a misspent life; the soul may come, like that sad prodigal, weary and broken and shivering, and in rags; but if it only come, the merciful door is open still, and while yet we are a great way off our Father will meet and forgive and comfort us. And then what a change is there in our lives! They are weak no longer; they are the slaves of sin no longer. You have seen the heavens gray with dull and leaden-colored clouds, you have seen the earth chill and comfortless under its drifts of unmelting snow; but let the sun shine, and then how rapidly does the sky resume its radiant blue, and the field laugh with green grass and vernal flower! So will it be with even a withered and a wasted life when we return to God and suffer him to send his bright beams of light upon our heart. I do not mean that the pain or misery under which we are suffering will necessarily be removed—even for Christ it was not so; but peace will come, and strength will come, and resignation will come, and hope will come, and we shall feel able to bear anything which God shall send; and though he slay us we still shall seek him, and even if the blackest cloud of anguish seems to shroud his face from us, even on that cloud shall the rainbow shine.

Obituaries.

DIED, of typhoid fever, at the residence of his father, in Leake county, Mississippi, January 21, 1874, JOHN THOMAS BOYD, son of C. L. and H. C. Boyd, aged twenty-four years, three months and twenty-seven days. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and died in the faith. I visited Bro. Boyd several times during his sickness, and was with him when he breathed his last. When at first I spoke to him about his spiritual condition he said he was converted and joined the church about two years since; that he had been led off and became backslidden. At his request we had prayer whenever I came, he appearing also earnestly to engage therein. As death approached his faith became strong and unwavering, and continued so while he lived. When he could no longer speak, he gave signs that his faith was still abiding.

He exhorted father, mother, brothers, sisters and all present to meet him in heaven. Thus has another passed the Jordan of death into that home where the "wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

NEILL M'MILLAN.

The following is a part of the report of the pastor, James O. Andrew, at a church conference held on the Milton station, Mobile district, Alabama Conference, April 5, 1874:

"We have been called, during this month, to mourn the loss of our venerable and beloved brother, Neill McMillan, who has for many years been a prominent and useful member of this church. His labors are ended. His last battle is fought, and he has gone to his reward. But he has left to the church a rich legacy in his pious example, and we cherish his memory as a sweet odor. We shall miss him much, but while with saddened hearts we say, "Thy will be done," we thank God that such a man has lived among us. His life and his death encourage us to trust in that Jesus by whose aid Bro. McMillan was enabled in his last conflicts to shout 'victory' over his vanquished foe."

Which was unanimously adopted by the conference.

I certify the foregoing is a true transcript from the recorded proceedings of said conference, and is now of record in my office.

JOHN CHAIN, Sec.

SCOTT DUTY, son of John W. Duty, of Union parish, Louisiana, departed this life in Collin county, Texas, on the morning of the twenty-fifth of January last, with buoyant hopes of a blissful immortality. He was in the twenty-fourth year of his age. His sojourn in our community had been short, but long enough to make his mark for industry, frugality and sobriety. Amiable in his deportment, dignified in his manners, he made a very favorable impression upon the minds of those with whom he became acquainted, and his death is much lamented in the community. Though dying amid strangers, he commanded every attention during his entire illness, both upon the part of the kind family at whose house he died and visiting friends. He endured his affliction with Christian patience, without a murmur ever escaping his lips. The day previous to death he requested his physician to write to his father and mother, and say to them that he was happy, and hoped to meet them and all his dear friends in heaven. He expressed his regrets that he had not lived according to his training by kind parents, but said he felt that God had forgiven him and all was well. For several hours before he died he requested his attendants to sing some of the sweet songs of Zion, which he enjoyed with heavenly aspirations. His death was a glorious triumph of Christian faith over the sting of death. God grant to a kind father and an affectionate mother the sweet consolations of his grace in this sad hour of bereavement, and bring them all at last to the better land, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are forever at rest.

IN MEMORIAM.

NATHANIEL JEFFERIES, late of Claiborne county, Mississippi, was born in 1802, and died March 7, 1874. We believe it will tend to magnify the grace of God to give a brief sketch of the Jefferies family, and especially of the Christian experience of the subject of this memoir. At an early date of the colonial settlements in North America the Jefferies family came from Wales and settled in Pennsylvania, but subsequently removed to Virginia and settled on James river, at a place long known as Jefferies' Ford. The family was here at the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, and the grandfather of the subject of this obituary, Captain Nathaniel Jefferies, was a Revolutionary soldier, and served through the war of Independence with credit both to himself and his country. After the close of the war the family emigrated to Tennessee and settled near Clarksville, where the subject of this notice was born. The Jefferies family originally belonged to the Established Church of England, but at an early day fell in with the great Wesleyan reformation and became Methodists. The mother of Mr. Nathaniel Jefferies was a Shelby, and belonged to an honorable Kentucky family of that name. In early life she became a thorough Methodist in doctrine, experience and practice, and during a long life of consistent piety, by her faith and good works, impressed her Christian character indelibly upon her children and grandchildren.

In 1818 Mrs. Jefferies, with her two sons and three daughters, removed to Jefferson county, Mississippi, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. Here Mr. Nathaniel Jefferies grew to manhood, and on February 3, 1825, he was happily married to Miss Catherine Flinn Watson, late of Camden, South Carolina. Up to this date, though they were moral and respectful to religion, neither of them had ever "put on Christ." By uniting their patrimonial estates, under their characteristic industry and good management, they soon began to enjoy a flattering degree of worldly prosperity. But in the midst of their little earthly paradise there was a painful sense of unsupplied want. They were not Christians. They were not accomplishing the great object of their probationary existence, which was to glorify God on earth and acquire a preparation for heaven. Thoughtfully they came to the determination to be religious, and in 1829 the writer had the pleasure of receiving them into the church as seekers of salvation; soon after which, in a camp meeting altar at Cane Ridge, he witnessed the well-marked and powerful conversion of Mr. Jefferies. This to him was a life-long source of comfort and joy. During the forty-five years of his Christian pilgrimage he often had his faith strengthened and reassured by adverting to his original conversion. It was too plain and powerful, he said, to admit of an unbelieving doubt. We need only say that his life corresponded with his profession, and that his end was peace. But for the benefit of the living we wish to call attention to a few suggestive facts developed in his Christian experience and life.

Notwithstanding his satisfactory conversion, and the peace and happiness he enjoyed in the service of God, he at times had some painful reflections on the subject of death. How could even a Christian feel triumphant in death when leaving his wife and little children behind to meet the selfishness and treachery of this wicked world without his protection and aid? And then there was an unexplained mystery hanging over the separation of soul and body, and the passage of the soul "through the valley of the shadow of death." His class-leader was John Osborne, a man of little worldly substance and a limited education, but full of faith and good works. Mr. Jefferies had full confidence in the piety and godly sincerity of his class-leader, who was also his near neighbor. Sabbath after Sabbath, as they rode to and from their class meetings at Lebanon, they conversed sweetly on experimental religion and enjoyed the communion of saints. In the middle of life, and in the midst of his usefulness, John Osborne became sick unto death. Now, said Mr. Jefferies, let me see how a Christian can die. He was often at his bedside; watched every phase of his countenance; treasured up every word of hope and joy that fell from his lips; sat close by him in the final struggle, and saw him breathe his last, and, as far as possible, followed him into the dark valley. Mr. Jefferies had already learned to live the life of a Christian, but now he learned how a Christian could die. After witnessing the perfect resignation, the full assurance of hope, and the triumphant joy of John Osborne, while buffeting the cold waters of the last river, death was disrobed of his terrors, and from that day forth he felt that if he lived right he need not fear any death by which he might be called to glorify God.

Mr. Jefferies was a good economist, and gradually extended his possessions until he became by far the wealthiest church member in his community. He was often called on to aid in the various church, educational and humanizing institutions within his reach. What he did in this way was with him a matter of conscience. It was seldom worth while to undertake to persuade or dictate to him as to what direction he should give his charitable donations. As a steward of the Lord he claimed the right of exercising his own best judgment in such matters. Some years before the war Mr. Jefferies was called on to make an additional contribution toward the completion of what he considered a rather too costly Methodist church in Port Gibson, where the family now held their membership. He declined making the duplicate subscription to the church; said that no church of any denomination had been built or repaired in Port Gibson for the last twenty-five years that he had not been called on to aid; but now he felt that no was done with that department of his work so far as Port Gibson was concerned; but he would do something for the support of the pastor himself while living, and of his descendants after his death. He had been a member of the church then about thirty years, and had paid an average of $100 a year, as quarterage, toward the support of his various pastors. He wished to make an arrangement by which he could pay at least that much toward the salary of the pastors of his family in all coming time, not only for the next thirty years, but, if properly managed, until the millennium. He thought it would add to his joy, even in heaven, to know that his quarterage was annually paid for the support of the gospel. He accordingly invested $1,060, bearing ten per cent. interest, the interest to be paid annually, forever, as his part of the pastor's salary. The vested fund is now in good paying condition. After the late war had swept his fine plantations as with the besom of destruction, he said, in substance, to the writer, "that, as his heavenly Father had permitted such a calamity to befall him, he had nothing to say against it. It would all be for the best in the end." Mr. Jefferies was the subject of much personal and family affliction in the last decade of his life. In saving the lives of others from a falling beam of timber, he was crippled himself for life. This was succeeded by a paralysis of one side, which rendered him quite helpless; he had lately buried the wife of his youth; he had brought up and educated his large family of children; he had nominally divided his property among his heirs, and settled up all his secular business as far as possible, and he often said that, as far as he could see, all the leading duties of his life had been brought to a close, and he was calmly waiting for his change to come. It came suddenly, but it found him ready. We would like to relate some touching incidents connected with his last hours, but our space at present forbids it. It may be done hereafter in another place and form.

SONGS OF THE MYSTIC.

BY R. H. STODDARD.

LOVE ALONE.

Old Bishop Ivo met one day,
As he went up and down the lands,
A stern, sad woman on her way,
With fire and water in her hands—
In this hand water, that hand fire—
And she was filled with holy ire!

"What mean those symbols, mother, tell?
And whither go you?" She replies:
"To quench with this the flames of hell,
With this to burn up paradise.
Fear, hope, must nevermore be known,
But man serve God through love alone!"

THE CARVER.

The carver thought, the carver wrought,
There was a rapture in his mood;
He saw Our Lady in his thought;
And wrought upon the sandal wood.
His hand would not obey his will,
It faltered and forgot its skill.
No one will say, who sees that face:
Hail! Mary Mother, full of grace!"

He dropped his tools, he bowed his head,
He heard a voice that somewhere spoke:
"Go burn the sandal wood," it said,
"And work upon that block of oak.
What one holds not the other may,
The image may be there to-day."
It was, and all who saw her face
Said: "Mary Mother, full of grace!"

CONFUCIUS AND KE LOO.

"Shall we, O Master!" Ke Loo said,
"Still serve the spirits of the dead?"
"To serve the dead why should we strive,
Who could not serve them when alive?"

"Tell me what death is," said Ke Loo.
"To whom again Confucius saith:
"While life we do not, cannot know,
What can we hope to know of death?"
And further, since he still would seek:
Ke Loo, I do not care to speak."

"If you, the Master, speak not, then
What shall your scholars say to men?"
Does Heaven speak?" the sage replied,
And as he spoke his spirit sighed:
"The seasons run their endless ways,
The days go by with tireless wing,
And all things come in all the days,
But Heaven, does Heaven say anything?"

Drinking Habits in Europe.

BY PROF. S. C. HARTLETT, D. D.

To an American passing through Europe for the first time, one of the most palpable aspects of European life is the apparently universal use of intoxicating drinks. In Great Britain there are, indeed, certain lines of travel where hotel-keepers have learned to recognize temperance men. And there must be social circles from which both wines and stronger liquors are excluded. But I speak of what strikes the eye and commonly meets the traveler, both in public and in private life. It is expected that something stronger than water, tea or coffee will be called for at the table d'hote. And the dinner-table of a kindly entertainment is regarded as lacking hospitality unless garnished with wine. But stronger drinks are common enough. My brief experience of Ireland made a long impression. The lakes of Killarney seem to me redolent of whisky; and through the Gap of Dunloe," one of the most vivid recollections, next after the swarms of beggars, is of the sturdy fellows who assailed me with bottles, and of the pertinacious women, one of whom followed me nearly two miles with "mountain dew." I grieve to say, however, that the most open and revolting exhibitions of intemperance which I have anywhere witnessed were in dear old Scotland. It happened to be Saturday afternoon when my friend and myself were on our way to Glasgow on the direction of Carlisle—a time when laborers were returning to their homes for the Sabbath. We took a third-class car "to see the people." And we saw them. One red-headed man, who had been himself a traveler, kept his whisky-bottle to his mouth until he became rude, dirty and insolent, and finally sunk off into a stupor which relieved us of his tongue. At one place three men got into our compartment, all heavily steeped in whisky, one of them so that he leaned helplessly against the side of the car, and his companions had to aid him out; another so stupid that he spit on the dress of a young woman near him, and growled at her as she drew it away. In Glasgow, on Sunday afternoon, I saw several men reeling through one of the main streets; and in one case the wife was with difficulty guiding her staggering husband. It is fair to say that I saw nothing equal to this elsewhere in Scotland, although the excessive use of ardent spirits was too generally apparent.

In England the temperance reform still remains apparently somewhat stationary. At the restaurants London ladies as well as gentlemen habitually called for wines. In one of the kindest and most hospitable family circles it was matter of open amazement to the host how a guest could enjoy the sumptuous dinner and yet taste none of the several wines, especially that which was mellowed by fifty years. He evidently felt to the end that the dinner was somehow a failure. Another kind host deemed it indispensable to produce ale when the wine was declined. And I was distinctly informed by one of the most eminent and laborious dissenting ministers that his own dinner-table was not complete without wine. In these circles, however, it should be said there was no such use of these beverages as to produce objectionable effects.

On the continent of Europe, through the whole breadth, so far as I have seen, it is incomprehensible to themselves that any man can live without a stroug drink. At a thoroughly French, Belgian, Swiss or Italian table d'hote one finds it difficult to make a waiter understand that he does not take wine. In very many places the practice of furnishing it as part of the dinner still prevails, although the desire to fix an extra charge upon the traveler is beginning to make it a separate item. The wine-card is always brought first. Sometimes the waiter brings wine without waiting. When I have declined, I once had the bottle sent round to me by the head waiter, thinking there must be some mistake. Up the Rhine it was one long-continued drink. At Antwerp, Brussels, Basle, Geneva, in short, everywhere, one is astonished at the amount of wine consumed by individuals—by gentlemen, and even by ladies—at a single meal. It is wine at luncheon, and wine at dinner, and wine between, and wine in the evening, perhaps; and sometimes, though not often, wine at breakfast. If a man sits down to talk with his friend he calls for wine. The bottle and the glass are a common accompaniment of the concerts in the open air, and frequently the sole refreshment in a cafe. And wine seems often to be the needful means of whiling away the time in one's apartment. At Interlachen, I remember, it seemed as though the waiters were all the time rushing round with bottles.

At the same time it is just to say that in these wine-producing regions I have seen but little absolute intoxication. At the dinner-table the gentlemen's tongues sometimes become more voluble and noisy than is quite natural; and I have seen ladies' faces redden with a deeper and more pervading glow than seemed to me the flush of beauty. In the streets of a city I have occasionally seen a man walking with unsteady gait. But I remember what Hillard said, twenty years ago: that the temperance of wine-growing countries is overrated, because the stranger does not penetrate the places and times where the intoxication is to be found. Coincident with this suggestion was the remark made to me the other day by a gentleman who has resided in Rome for twenty years. Though inclined to deny the prevalence of intemperance, he supposed that perhaps one in a hundred drank to intoxication. But he immediately added that an intoxicated man here makes no outward disturbances while others are around, but pushes his way out of sight. He also remarked that the Roman youth are now becoming addicted to the use of distilled liquors; a fact which he attributed to the inadequacy of the wine crop for the last few years. The remark showed, at least, that he was not inclined to overestimate the ill effects of habitual wine-drinking, while it gave very unequivocal testimony as to the tastes it engenders.

Not having the time or inclination to push my way into those walks of life where the worst effects of the wine-cup are seen, I content myself with these admissions of others. Still some very obvious indications have fallen under my observation: the disorderly noises at all hours of the night which have greeted my ears in all the chief cities of wine-drinking countries—Basle, Geneva, Milan, Venice, Florence, Rome. In Milan there was a drinking saloon nearly opposite my room at the hotel, which remained open almost all night; and more than once at two in the morning I was awakened by the boisterous sounds of the revelers. And in all these cities I have customarily heard far into the night uproarious singings and shoutings, which, if they were not the offspring of intoxication, it would be difficult to define where intoxication begins.

In this same connection an inquiry forced itself upon me as to the nature of these wines. Passing thus through the whole breadth of Europe, on one of its chief vine-growing belts, it seemed to me that this might be taken as a fair sample of the drinks which the people of any grape region will extract from the vine. I raised the question: Do those communities use or know any drink bearing the name of wine which is not a fermented, intoxicating drink? It was perfectly manifest, even to the eye, that all the wines consumed by high and low were diffusible stimulants, stirring the blood, exciting the nerves and flushing the cheeks. But it occurred to me, before leaving the Rhine, to test the question still more effectually, as my own practical reply to statements which I have heard and read about the use of "unfermented wines" in wine-growing countries. Accordingly, from that time I have made it a point at every principal stopping-place to taste the people's wine—"vin ordinaire"—and occasionally other kinds at random. I have found that, while differing in astringency, sourness and flavor, the people's wine is invariably an alcoholic drink, apparently a little stronger than the strongest old cider which was formerly made in New England, from which in some instances the taste could scarcely be distinguished. And I have concluded that, if there be any practice of preserving the unfermented juice of the grape, or of preserving the grapes to make it, such as the excellent Mr. Delavan found in one solitary instance in Italy, it is a practice kept profoundly secret. And, if there be any unfermented liquors sold and drank as "wines" in the region I have now traveled, they are liquors unknown to the hotels, the cafes, the restaurants and the people who frequent them; and they are liquors not comprised in the vin ordinaire of the great vintage zone. Their existence is to me a secret undiscovered. I remember, too, that it was a thing which Dr. Eli Smith was unable, after long and careful inquiry, to discover in Palestine and Syria.

I think, therefore, that we shall have to gird ourselves with other arguments to the great temperance reform. And when one looks at Europe he feels, as when he looks at New York or Chicago, that only some diviner impulse than man alone can originate must aid in breaking the mighty chain.—Independent.

ROME, Italy.

WORKS OF GOD.—We should live as though doing day's works for God. There is no contract for long service. It is day by day, and day by day. Our Master may have need for us further on; he may not. It is not ours to question. Good and faithful service now is the thing asked. And to strengthen us for the day's work we should be given our daily bread. The prayer so simple covers every human need. It means bread for the body, and for the soul—physical and spiritual nourishment. Is our prayer an earnest and honest one? Do we really crave of God our daily food? Or are we seeking to satisfy human cravings from some other source? "Give us this day our daily bread." How many pray thus in the truest sense, as Christ taught?

Down on the Choir.

TYRANNY IN THE CHURCH.

The Presbyterian Banner opens in regular forte style upon modern church choirs. After speaking of sundry tyrannies to which mankind is subjected, the writer proceeds:

"But, after all, it is doubtful whether there is any tyranny among us more dreaded or more severe than that exercised by many of the choirs which sing and rule in our churches. Pastor, sexton and congregation stand in awe of them. The minister may be criticised, and complaints may be made of the elders with comparative impunity; but woe unto the unlucky one who will venture, even with hat in hand, and with pallid countenance and trembling lips, to intimate that the choir might at times so far condescend as to sing tunes in which the congregation can take part, that some of its members ought to behave themselves somewhat more seemly during prayer, the reading of the Scriptures and the sermon. So sensitive is the average choir as to its own undisputed sovereignty, and the undoubted supremacy of each one of its members, that every now and then the principle of cohesion gives way and the entire concern goes to pieces, putting the whole church into a fever of excitement and often giving irremediable offense to some, until a new organization is effected. The immense capacity of such choirs to cause dissatisfaction, give trouble, and interfere generally with the progress and happiness of the churches over which they exercise sway, is beyond the power of human computation.

"The success of choirs, such as we have described, in interfering with the labors of the pastor, destroying the effects of the sermon and in utterly smothering the devotional spirits of religious meetings, is beyond dispute; like some kinds of 'patent medicines'—'they never fail.' Not many moons ago we were present at the meeting of an ecclesiastical body which was opened with an elaborate and able sermon. At the close of the discourse the hymn beginning,

"'Savior, visit thy plantation,' was announced. The pastor very properly invited the congregation to stand during the singing, and one thousand persons arose, expecting to join in singing the hymn to the well-known tune of 'Greenfield,' with which it is inseparably entwined. But the choir would have no such intrusion and impertinence as this; it would have things its own way, and it had; for it started off on a tune which no one in the large audience outside of the choir could sing, in which the choir itself made but an indifferent success, and which at best was unsuitable to the hymn. Great was the consternation in that church. The people looked at one another; some of the devout fathers and mothers were sad; others were startled as if some calamity was about to burst upon them; some of the young folks were disposed to giggle; while some people of more combative disposition felt as if it would afford them the highest degree of satisfaction to go into the organ-loft at that moment and pitch leader, choir and instrument through the windows into the street.

"In view of such things it cannot be thought strange that the rule of the choir is awakening a feeling that will soon manifest itself in some decisive way. Those who have borne the yoke of bondage most severely do at last, when oppression can no longer be endured, turn upon their tyrants and hurl them from their thrones."

More Abundantly.

In a recent address on "Life in Christ," with special reference to the words "that they might have it more abundantly," Mr. Spurgeon said:

"In a great many Christians the life of Christ is not supreme. A Christian in the old times was, first of all, a Christian, and then a long way down, perhaps, he was a shoemaker. He was a Christian, and perhaps he might belong to Cæsar's household, but that you might hardly know. Nowadays what are we? We are bankers or merchants; everybody knows that. Then, after a little inquiry, perhaps it may be found out that we are Christians. The thing ought to be reversed. Our religion should be the first thing. Too much the Lord Jesus gets the scraps and the spare victuals, and the world gets the banquets. Men give to the Lord Jesus their odd minutes, and to money-getting the main strength of their lives. I do believe that will have to be altered before we shall see any great work done in the land and multitudes of conversions. How it is going to be altered I cannot tell, except by this, that life has a wonderful faculty for accomplishing great things. A little seed has been sown in a mass of rock, and you could hardly suppose it could live. But yet it has thrust itself up and has become a tree, and has lifted up the mass of rock, and by-and-by it will move the rock away to make space for itself. And life in God's people at this time is very like that seed in the rock. Our modes of living and our habits are altogether prejudicial, I believe, to any very wonderful display of life, but life will do it somehow, it will achieve its purpose by some means. I pray God to give us that life. Here is the whole world lying in wickedness.

"Do you believe the world is to be converted by the missionary societies? God be blessed for them, but do you think that they are to accomplish it all? Oh, never! The whole church must be of one heart; the entire mass must be consecrated for Christ. Christian women must give themselves to church work. Some of them are doing it, but they are only few. Oh, for a real setting on fire of the whole church! As yet I see the bush in the wilderness, and here and there upon some twigs of its boughs I can see the glow of fire, for God has not left the church. But I see yet more bush than fire. But the day shall come when through the entire bush a divine fire shall glow and the bush shall be full of the glory of God. Oh, poor church of God! how low is thy state, how cruel are thy foes against thee; but the Lord on high is mightier than them all, and he shall set thee ablaze with his glory and power. It must and shall come."

Religion in Spain.

As to religion, again, it is at a fearfully low ebb in the interior, and one naturally asks the question: Why so? Is the fault to be found in the especial phase of Christianity grafted upon this people? Certainly no religious faith has ever been nursed more, and brought up, as it were, by hand, than that branch of the Catholic Church established in Spain. Up to a few short years ago the clergy, as self-ordained teachers of this vast nation, had it (to use a trite saying) "all their own way." They were protected during the sovereignty of Queen Isabella more strictly than any of her subjects; their rights, revenues, doctrines, were guarded with a jealousy that knew not where to stop. An Englishman who, ignorantly, merely took off his hat, and did not dismount also from his horse as the "host" passed him in the street, was in this town dragged from his horse by order of the priests, and fined or imprisoned for the offense. And what work have the clergy done—what revolution have they brought about, fighting, as it were, under cover? What blessing have they brought about for their country? Simply nothing. True, the material they have had to work upon has been of the rudest kind, but something might have been done, if but little. Had the clergy merely exerted themselves to get a law passed making education compulsory, the good springing from such an act would have been boundless. But it was not so. Feeling all in their own hands, they were well content to rest on their oars, and think, fondly enough, that "to-morrow would be as this day, and still more abundant." The clergy of the State church in England certainly in their zeal for education present a marked contrast to their brethren here, for they did buckle to work and educate their flocks by means of national and Sunday schools. The clergy of the State church in England, again, especially in our large towns, are now, in this their day, endeavoring to meet and satisfy, and not stifle, the inquiring spirit of the age in which their lot is cast. The clergy of the interior of Spain, though kind and good to their poor, have been content to stifle or not acknowledge the existence of such a spirit in their land. They, in the zenith of their power, simply sat still. And what has been the result? Simple irreligion or black superstition. The "civil funeral" and the "civil christening," the empty churches, the covered heads of the men as the religious processions pass by, the cynical profession of many of the educated men, "I am a Protestant," which means, "I belong to no church at all; I am a doubter or a Materialista"—all these little things are evidences that the clergy knew not the days of their visitation, or that the faith they had to preach had not within it salt enough. Now the position of the clergy in the interior is cruel indeed; their influence is on the wane, their incomes are cut down to nominal sums; many have been driven to lay aside their robes and seek their bread by other means; the poor, whom once they were glad generously to feed, are suffering from hunger, cold and wretchedness. A few nights since I stood with raised hat as the "host" passed by, heralded by its many lamps of many colors; the viaticum was being carried to some Christian dying. Suddenly a drove of pigs came squeaking down a street close by; women in mute adoration were on their knees on the pavement, slightly and devoutly enough; men were divided into hats-on and hats-off, but the majority were of the latter class. The pigs charged the procession, and, to my horror, a loud and audible titter ran through the lantern-bearers, which became a hoarse laugh in the mouths of the pig-drivers. The picture, slight as it is, here drawn of religion is depressing indeed, you will say. But, with the virtuous and the educated, the oft-repeated dictum of Senor Castelar has increasing force: "I turn from the uncertainty, the vanity of what is of human invention in religion, to the example of him who suffered to set me an example; that, I know, is true; it is abnegation of self. I strive, I pray, and, looking at him, feel that grace will be given to follow his example."—Macmillan's Magazine.

ANECDOTE OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.—Before he went abroad as a missionary he placed himself for a time under the tuition of the Rev. R. Cecil, of Ongar, Essex. The Congregational minister of Sanford Rivers being taken suddenly ill, he could not take the evening service, and applied for help to Mr. Cecil, who at once sent Livingstone. The young Scotchman soon surprised the congregation beyond measure, for, having taken his text, he became bewildered and could not utter a word. Then, without any apology or remark of any kind, he snatched up his hat and made his way to Ongar, leaving the congregation to think or say what they pleased. This was the man who afterward was not afraid of men or of lions. Let timid preachers take encouragement. Let not missionary committees or members of churches say too hastily: "That man is too bashful ever to make his way in the world."

GOD'S CHURCH.—God has a church. It has lived through all changes, outlived all enemies. It is here today, palpable, a presence, a power, seen, felt, acknowledged of men. Zion is a city, not a vision, with solid foundations, or men would not dig about them; towers, bulwarks, palaces, strongholds, or men could not walk about them and study how to assault them. The "CITY of our God," beautiful for situation on the sides of the north, and the south, and the east, and the west. God is known in the places, and in the hearts of her citizens, and in the works of her people.

Religious Intelligence.

REV. ALLEN FISKE, rector of St. Paul's church, Fourth street, Cincinnati, has sent in his resignation to the vestry, to take effect the first of May.

REV. WILLIAM STEWART, M. A., late editor of the Canadian Baptist, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Park Street Baptist church, Hamilton.

THE Anglican Bishop of Ontario, Canada, has formally excommunicated Rev. J. B. Stacey, of Ottawa, for participating in the Reform Church movement.

SINCE the establishment of the American Congregational Union, 827 houses of worship have been undertaken and completed. The total number of congregations out of New England now exceeds the number in it by 314.

THE English Presbyterian Church is making up a sustentation fund, and the minimum stipend given now is $450. It is hoped to attain to $1,000. The Irish Presbyterian Church have raised their lowest stipend to $500, and are also laboring hard to increase the amount.

THE Madura mission continues to prosper. At Littlar Kottal, during the month of October, thirty persons from the congregations throughout the station, besides the catechist and the teachers, went out among their people to preach Christ. The heathen received them gladly.

A RECENT incident at Calcutta shows how strong the hold of Hindooism still is, even upon the more intelligent natives. The distinguished pleader, Baboo Kali Mohun Doss, paid a penance of 10,000 rupees to be readmitted to his caste. The ceremony cost one-half of the sum.

IN A newly-issued charge Bishop Wordsworth has delivered a scathing denunciation of simony, which he affirms to be increasing in the church. From the Ecclesiastical Gazette he cites specimens of its advertisements to show how systematically the unholy "traffic in spiritual things" is conducted.

IT IS stated that the Waldensian missionary churches of Italy are to be reorganized on a Presbyterian basis. There are thirty-eight of them, mainly supported from England, at an annual cost of $40,000. The Free Church of Italy is nearly as large, while the Wesleyan Missionary Society has fourteen under its charge.

DR. PORTEOUS' church in Brooklyn has been organized under the title of "All Souls Church." As the doctor proposes to be loyal to the Church of England, and "my lords" the bishops refuse to recognize him, we suppose his church must either be considered the American branch of the English Church, or else an Episcopal church without a bishop.

THE Presbyterian mission at Canton, China, has received 35 converts during the past ten months, and 10 more were to unite with the church in the month of January, and there were besides a number of inquirers. A daily prayer meeting is held at quarter-past six in the morning, in various places simultaneously, so that all the members of the church may meet together at that hour.

IN THE defeat of the Liberal party in England the Nonconformists see no probability of the disestablishment of the national church. The Conservative vote will be solid against it. Although in any event the nation would at present stand by the establishment, the Opposition found more hope of final success in the reign of the Liberals than they can possibly find under Disraeli's administration.

THE education of native girls in India is progressing satisfactorily, in spite of the social prejudices against it. In a recent examination of the Free Church Orphanage six girls out of ten obtained sufficient marks to have put them in the first division of the university list, and some of the examiners were Hindoos. Similar results have been obtained in Madras, where the girls pass the government examination for certificated schoolmistresses.

THE Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States comprises 41 dioceses and 9 missionary jurisdictions, 52 bishops, 3,095 priests and deacons, 2,700 parishes and 200,000 communicants. The most populous diocese is that of New York, which has 26,282 communicants; next Pennsylvania, with 19,109; next Maryland, with 17,055; and the fourth in number is Connecticut, with 15,416. The contributions of all kinds are reported at $7,316,149.

A MISSIONARY of the London Society at the Society Islands writes that the French government has at last permitted the incorporation of the Protestant churches, under the title of "Association of the Protestant Churches of Tahiti and Moorea." The number of church members (1873) is 2,526, being an increase of 41 over the preceding year. The natives have spent about $20,000 during the year in church edifices. For one church, built of American wood, 1,000,000 of oranges were paid.

THE census shows that the total Christian population of Lower Bengal is 93,098. Of these, more than 70,000 are Asiatics, 50,000 being natives of Bengal, and a little over 20,000 persons of mixed blood, born in the country, while 22,000 are Europeans or non-Asiatics. "A native or semi-native church of 70,000 members," says a correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, from whom we have these figures, "does not seem a very inadequate result of seventy years of missionary enterprise in a single governorship."

THE members of the Liberal Baptist Union of Brooklyn have issued their declaration of principles in a neat pamphlet form; and their Central Council of fifty invite Baptists in all parts of the country to subscribe to it. The object of this organization, as has already appeared, is the promotion within the bounds of this denomination of the doctrine of Christian liberty in relation to the Lord's Supper. The open-communion element in Brooklyn is known to be considerable, and it has now crystallized into the form of this Union.

A NATIVE of Eastern Bengal has started a new religious movement among this people, and what is stated to be its remarkable feature is the circumstance that he and his followers read the Scriptures, and endeavor to live after the example of the apostles and early Christians. They are vegetarians, discard the use of medicine, and seek the cure of sickness by prayer. Perhaps a return to primitive Christianity would, after all, be just the "new religious movement" which modern Christianity needs to be infused with, in part, almost everywhere.

A SCOTCH paper thinks the effort of the American Presbyterians to occupy Teheran, Persia, as a mission station will be an important movement toward the evangelization of Central Asia. It says there is no station in Persia, west of Teheran, nearer than Tabreez, and none to the eastward nearer than India, and Teheran "is the only tenable ground for missionary labor designed to reach either Eastern Persia or the Tartars of Toorkestan." The city has a population of 130,000, of whom 100 are Europeans, 2,000 Jews and 1,000 Armenians.

IN SWEDEN it has been hitherto almost impossible to get out of the Established Church (Lutheran) into any of the Dissenting churches, and the members of these churches have been subjected to certain legal disabilities of a very tormenting character. A law has recently been passed by which, upon the expression of a desire to join another communion on the part of any person over eighteen years of age, the pastor of his parish is obliged to register the transfer. This reform will, it is said, lead speedily to the removal of the other legal embarrassments in marriage and baptism under which the Dissenters are now laboring.

THE MISSIONARY'S RETURN TO NAZARETH.—The Rev. J. Zeller, the veteran missionary at Nazareth, has returned to his post, after a period of rest in Germany. He writes: "In the Plain of Jezreel I was met by my wife and children and a number of men of our congregation, and before I reached Nazareth the number of friends who wished to greet me had swollen to such a stream that I made my entry into the town surrounded by several hundred people on horseback and on foot. During the following days the mission house was literally crammed from morning to night with those eager to welcome me, of our own people as well as Moslems, Greeks and Latins."

AN ANTI-CHRISTIAN MANIFESTATION IN BOMBAY.—Religious controversy has of late given rise to trouble at Bombay. Mr. Tudor Trevor charged a Hindoo clerk in the postoffice with insulting the feelings of Christians in the esplanade. The man was loudly maligning our blessed Lord as immoral and dishonest, and pretending to quote the gospels in support of his assertions. The magistrate characterized the man's language as infamous and blasphemous, but he was discharged on making an apology. Disturbances have also broken out among the Mohammedans and the Parsees, in consequence of a Parsee publication reflecting upon the character of Mohammed. Several Parsees have been injured.

VERY REASONABLY, the Presbyterian is not satisfied with the report of the joint committees on union between the Cumberland Presbyterians and the Presbyterians North, which provides that the Confessions of Faith of both churches be retained, and that the candidates for the ministry and ministers be allowed the privilege of selecting according to their own desires; both Confessions of Faith to be on equal footing, and have the equal authority in the united church. It says that alternative confessions are novelties in the theological world, and it hopes will continue to be so. "The inhabitants of a commonwealth might as well attempt to live under two constitutions, with liberty to swear to one or the other, as individuals might see fit." This will possibly be accepted as true by many orthodox Christians who are unable to subscribe to some single confession of faith.

IT SEEMS that the bishops of the Church of England consider the situation in it serious enough to apply for greater power to compel clerical obedience to the order and the ceremony of worship contained in the Book of Common Prayer. The occasion of this proposal is not concealed. The Times is very frank upon the subject, and says that "it has become impossible any longer to overlook the license which now prevails in the church in regard to the mode of celebrating divine worship;" that, although "the days of absolute uniformity have long passed," and few would wish to recall them, there is now "an absolute disregard of the clearest decisions of the Courts of Law." The tendency of the Ritualists toward the Church of Rome is, doubtless, the real cause of the bishops' proposed action, and they hope to check this party in the church by stricter laws, since they are unable to do so in any other way.

THE Year-Book of Trinity Parish, New York, makes the following statements concerning the property of that corporation: "Leaving out of account the unproductive part of the estate, and estimating that portion only which yields an income, the value of the property is comparatively small—small in comparison with the inflated and erroneous opinions about it. 'Sixty millions of dollars' is the stereotyped phrase at present in vogue. The property, in all probability, is not worth more than from seven to eight millions. The entire income, from all sources of revenue, during the last financial year, was in round numbers only about $500,000. Of this income a large part is consumed by the expenses of the estate. About one-tenth is given away to poor churches outside the parish. Not one dollar is hoarded; the entire income is spent for the purposes of the sacred trust, and it frequently happens, and was almost invariably the case until within a few years, that the annual expenditures exceeded the income."

The Lord Upon the Floods.

The Mississippi valley is at present witnessing a flood such as has not been seen for the last fifty years. A world of waters is pouring down upon us, and, with irresistible might, sweeping away the artificial barriers which have been constructed to oppose it. Millions of property and many lives have been destroyed. Houses, crops, stock, have been overwhelmed, and the homes of thousands have been devastated. It is a grand and awful sight to stand upon our levee and look out on the turbid and agitated stream as it sweeps past in sublime and stately independence, defiant, and madly bent upon having its own way. The huge monster seems, indeed, to laugh at our calamity and to mock when our fear cometh. It frets and chafes under the restraint which men have attempted to put upon its freedom, and resents it as an affront and insult to its dignity. The river pours through the crevasses with a roar and bound expressive of joyous triumph, and spreads over the rich fields, and fills up the swamps and bayous, as if conscious of reconquering its lost domain. Very imposing and truly magnificent, and also sad beyond measure, is the scene which presents itself to the eye on the lower Mississippi. Now, at least, it is "a great inland sea," and the proud waves have gone over some of the fairest and most productive lands in the country.

It comes also upon the back of other calamities, as an appendix to misrule, and to the blight on the harvests of past years. Much of the present disaster might have been averted here in Louisiana, and probably elsewhere, by a proper system of levees. Throughout the country generally such is the impoverishment of the people, and so difficult is it to control and concentrate labor, that the levees could not be adequately strengthened and guarded, and when broken the breaks could not be closed with the facility which marked this sort of enterprise in former times. But whatever may have been the case elsewhere, in Louisiana the State has turned the whole business of levees over to a company, who contract to keep them in repair and to build new ones wherever needed. The commissioners have received, within the past two years, as the proceeds of a direct tax, something over $1,000,000. The money has gone into the hands of the company, and not much of it has been expended in protecting the country from overflow. As late as a month and six weeks ago repairs and new levees were being made, which every one knows should have been completed last fall. Much of the suffering and ruin of the present hour are thus traceable to the unwise and corrupt legislation of which the State has so long been the victim. The people are taxed to the verge of confiscation, and receive almost nothing in return. In such a season as this no system, however well administered, would have entirely averted disaster, but the larger part is due to the miserable government under which we live.

We may hope, where everything looks so dark and discouraging, and where the evil appears unmixed with good, that there will be some compensation in the end. Precisely what the providential mission of this deluge is may not now be altogether clear; nor can we fully trace the lessons which the misfortunes and adversities of the last few years are designed to teach. With reverence and with comfort, however, we may adopt the words of David: "The Lord sitteth upon the flood; yea, the Lord sitteth king forever." He moves upon this wild and spreading torrent, and his hand has set it free from the far-off mountains, and sent it forth on its race to the sea. The season has been so ordered in the different latitudes, conditions of temperature and the courses of the winds have been so adjusted, that this avalanche of waters has come. God rides upon a cherub, but he also flies upon the wings of the wind, and "maketh the clouds his chariot." It is a bad case that much of the country is in sorrow upon sorrow and wave upon wave. Vile men are exalted, the wicked flourish on every side, and "all the foundations of the earth are out of course." It is as king that the Lord sitteth upon the flood—"the Lord sitteth king forever." The Lord's hand is in our troubles; the raging waters and the floods of the ungodly shall alike contribute in some way to his glory.

God does not condone the sin which he may overrule for good, nor does he commend the sinner whom he may use for the accomplishment of his purposes. The floods of nature and the floods of the ungodly, the calamities of the seasons and the elements, and social and political wrongs, are within the limits of a benign Providence, and shall work out good to them that love God. With venality and crime rampant, with bad government, with flooded fields, with devastation unparalleled, still the Lord sitteth upon the flood. The bright side of things is the Godward. Here we may find the personal application, and look most confidently for the day-spring to break after awhile. Men will be in good heart, in spite of the tribulations which surround them, if they see God and hear his voice amidst the tempests which beat upon them. Pitiable and frightful and staggering to our faith is this scene of desolation, this wail of drowning people, and the despair of those whose fortunes are gone, and the cry of women and children for bread. But the Lord sitteth upon the flood, and many shall have this experience to tell: "He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of many waters."

The Presiding Eldership.

The conclusions reached in the various discussions of the office of presiding elder cannot be said to show a prevailing leaning toward the abolition of the office. A desire for change is apparent, and in other cases the acknowledgment of a necessity of some modification is made. But to what extent the office can be changed and retain its identity has not been satisfactorily shown. It may be that the grounds of objection to the present administration of the office would show the direction in which modification would be possible and safe.

The complaints converge toward two main points—the expense and the irresponsible power of the office. If the expense could be lessened, the complaint fullest of menace and growth would disappear; for as soon as those who pay the salary of the presiding elder combine for a change, a change will become imperatively necessary. This event is infallibly certain, and should be anticipated. But retrenchment in the presiding elder's salary is not possible. Take an instance from the Mississippi Conference. The eight presiding elders cost the church $6,300—less than $800 each. Obviously insufficient as that amount is toward a decent support of the office, it is nevertheless felt to be a pecuniary burden to the church and a loss to the pastorate. The reason of this is that the charges composing the districts are small and weak. The work has been divided almost to the vanishing point, and, as a rule, not more than twelve of these are embraced in a district. Every hardship sets the wits to work to find relief; and as the salary of the presiding elder cannot be reduced further, the alternative is to dispense with part or all of his service. The office of presiding elder was indispensable when ordained ministers were few, and the work was largely confided to licentiates; but the great increase of ministers in orders, and the increased facilities for obtaining orders, renders the presence of the presiding elder at the quarterly meetings less necessary now than formerly.

But the supervisory function of the office is, on account of the growth of the church, more essential to the maintenance of the itinerant system now, if possible, than formerly. The service rendered by the presiding elder cannot be dispensed with without a costly increase of the episcopate, nor can the service be obtained at a lessened cost except by modifying the disciplinary requirements as regards attendance upon quarterly meetings, and a reduction of the number of districts. A presiding elder can, within a district of twenty to twenty-five appointments, perform the work required for the efficient working of our church system. The only relief for the church, and safely for the system, is in an enlargement of the districts.

The other ground of objection to the office is its irresponsible power. We take side with those who see in the presiding eldership only the usual imperfection inhering in agencies. The cases are rare in which a man can do a thing as satisfactorily, by an agent, as he could do it himself; but there are circumstances in life that make agencies absolutely necessary. Stationing preachers under the itinerant system is impossible without agents of some kind. We doubt whether the preachers in a single district could distribute the work among themselves satisfactorily. It would prove the sheerest folly to attempt it in a Conference. And we doubt not that a careful comparison will award to the presiding eldership a superior efficiency to every other agency that has been tried. Besides, the power complained of would appear in any plan for dividing out the appointments of a Conference to the body of preachers. The power must exist, or the thing cannot be done. But the presiding elder is not an irresponsible agent, even at the point complained of; for, although he does not receive his appointment from the body of the preachers, he is none the less one of them, and subject to every influence the body exerts to maintain a proper status. If the public sentiment in a Conference is too feeble to secure order and fraternity, it is possible, for lack of the proper guide, the presiding elder may consult his own will only. This is not sufficiently considered by those who allow themselves to complain of the presiding eldership. That office will express the character and spirit of the body out of which it grows. A conference of preachers is more than a machine; it is self-regulating, and perhaps, more than others, the presiding elder is sensitive to the charges of public opinion in the body.

The measure which came next to the present custom of being the rule, was for the Conference to select a number of its members from which the Bishop should choose the presiding elders; but it was believed the gain would be too small to make it a constitutional reform.

Thus far no one has seen any nearer approach to a just distribution of the needful powers of management than our present system contains. We cannot work the system without the power complained of. To destroy the power is to destroy the system. We cannot abolish the presiding eldership without a corresponding increase of the episcopacy, and one Bishop costs the church in money as much as four presiding elders; and then he is only one against four for service. There is at present, then, but one measure of reform that looks both possible and safe, and that is the enlargement of the districts and a reduction in the corps of presiding elders.

ELDER.

Church Dedication in Lake Charles.

MR. EDITOR: Calcasieu parish is an excellent country and Lake Charles is a beautiful place in Louisiana. This beautiful town is situated on the romantic shore of the lake of the same name. It has only two Protestant churches—one English and one German—and both Southern Methodist. On Sunday, April 12, I dedicated the German church. Preached in the morning in my native tongue, administered the Lord's Supper and took in nine new members. Preached the dedicatory sermon in the evening in English. The house, fifty by twenty-five feet, was filled with hearers. Baptized three children, raised $300 to pay off the remaining debt, and then dedicated the sacred abode to the worship of our Master. At early candlelight I preached again in German. On Monday night I preached for Bro. Foust at the Masonic Hall, and collected, in conclusion, $300—the amount necessary to finish the American church; for the Germans, for once, got ahead of their more favored brethren. Now the American church will also soon be ready for dedication. Bro. Foust is doing a good work, and so is our Bro. Lieser, German missionary.

There are a great many Germans at the various saw-mills near Lake Charles, and they are glad to have a missionary among them. I sold, while there, nine German hymn-books, morocco binding, at $3 apiece. Bro. Lieser has also built and is living in a two-story parsonage, with five rooms, large galleries, etc. The lot, on which both church and parsonage stand, contains an acre of ground and is inclosed by a picket fence. The whole property is worth from $1,600 to $2,000, all paid for—all the result of one year's labor.

Had a terrible time in reaching Lake Charles. Stage broke down in Mermentau bottom, fifty-one miles this side. Had to make that distance, in a cold night, on a mule and horseback, part of the way without saddle, having several mail-sacks to carry at the same time.

The devil too, though, has found the way to Lake Charles. A German (a staunch Lutheran,) opposed to our work, had ordered lager-beer from Galveston, and arranged a ball for his countrymen on the night previous to the dedication of our church. The design appeared to be to make everybody drunk, and thus frustrate our services. But in this he failed, there being yet a goodly number who did not cast off the fear of the Lord.

Affectionately,

J. B. A. AHRENS.

NEW ORLEANS, April 20, 1874.

DR. BENISCH, a man of great influence among the London Jews, has been delivering a series of lectures in St. George's Hall, London, on the "Development of Modern Judaism." In a report of the first lecture the Times says that, repudiating the title of "conversionist" for the spirit of Judaism, he adopted that of "missionary," and pointed to Philo, Josephus and the Septuagiut. The proselytes of Judaism at Antioch, Damascus, Rome, were the nucleus of Christianity. With the exception of the writings of St. Paul the New Testament might be considered as an exposition of Judaism for the Gentiles, and the work of Paul himself, though alien in matter, read in manner like a translation from the Talmud. The lecturer divided the history of Judaism into four periods, from Moses to Ezra, from Ezra to the destruction of the second temple, from that time to the death of Moses Mendelssohn—the grandfather of the composer—in 1786, and hence to our day. The first period was that of inception, the next of consolidation; in the third new schools arose, and the Pharisees, Sadducees and Essenes divided the land. The Sadducees disappeared; unchangeable, they would now bow to the time, but they re-emerged centuries later as the Paraites or literal adherents of Scripture. The Essenes were absorbed into Christianity. Judaism was a sober school, little suited to the dreamers of dreams, to the prototypes of monasticism. The Pharisees prevailed. In the fourth period the philosophic spirit breathed upon the Jews in their turn. Returning to the first period for a fuller analysis, Dr. Benisch said that we must study it in the Pentateuch, that repertory of history, doctrine, institutions. The Eastern mind is without the instinct of method. It goes by leaps and bounds. An institution will be laid down in the first book of the Pentateuch, and the doctrine which justifies it will appear, without connecting link, in the fourth; still there is a connection to be traced between doctrines and institutions. All Judaism is contained in four groups of doctrine: attributes of the Deity, the theory of creation, the relation between God and his creatures, and an individuality. Judaism is not Pantheism. Nor in it is the Deity absorbed in the contemplation of his own perfection. He has affections. He is eternal and self-existent, attributes implied by the etymological meaning of his incommunicable name, Jehovah, which was pronounced on one day in the year only, and then by the high priest as he entered the holy of holies. It contains the past, the present and the future tenses of the verb "to be." The unity of God was the next attribute, and its importance was impressed on Jews by the sufferings which they underwent for it at the hands of Polytheism and of Trinitarianism. "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one," is the first sentence which babes are taught to lisp; it is the last which strikes upon the ear of the dying Jew. Spirituality was the next attribute, and his honor was enjoined in the commandment which forbade the children of Israel to worship the image of anything that is in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, in the waters under the earth. The importance attached to this command explained the fact that no Jewish sculptor was known to fame. When the portrait of an Emperor of Austria, much loved by his Hebrew subjects, was brought into the synagogue, the appearance of it was the signal for dismay. Holiness, goodness and justice were the remaining attributes. Goodness was concerned with kindness to animals, in which the rabbis had anticipated modern philanthropists. Justice was exalted by Judaism as mercy was by Christianity. With the Sermon on the Mount might be contrasted the Hebrew idiom which called an act of charity by calling it an act of justice (zedaka.) Such were the attributes of God; but Maimonides said no attributes should be ascribed to the Deity, lest Polytheism should arise, the weakness of man making of every attribute a separate god. In the second group came creation, commemorated by the Sabbath. The Lord's day of the Christian world was solemnized on another day and commemorated a different event. As for the third group, the relation of his creatures to God, their duty was to acknowledge their dependence, as first they did by sacrifice and afterward by prayer. Their duty was to learn his word. Hence, though their sacred books were destroyed a hundred times, the Hebrews could write them out again by heart; hence, in these days of printing, the acquisition of a new scroll of the law was still a time of joy to the synagogue; hence the Jews were a literary people, and their writings had outlived the literature of their wealthier and more civilized neighbors, the Phœnicians.

THE New York Christian Advocate says: "A friend, who has carefully counted up the results of the women's temperance movement thus far, gives us the following figures: Thirty-seven cities and towns entirely freed from the liquor traffic; one thousand seven hundred and sixty-one liquor saloons in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois closed; and eight hundred liquor-sellers not only reformed, but hopefully converted to Christ!"

THE ANGEL AT THE TOMB.

BY MRS. ADAMS.

The mourners came at break of day
Unto the garden sepulcher,
With darkened hearts, to weep and pray
For him, the loved One buried there;
What radiant light dispels the gloom?
An angel sits beside the tomb!

The earth doth mourn her treasures lost,
All sepulchred beneath the snow,
When wintry winds and chilling frost
Have into her summer glories low;
The spring returns, the flowerets bloom—
An angel sits beside the tomb!

Then mourn we not beloved dead,
E'en while we come to weep and pray;
The happy spirit far hath fled
To brighter realms of endless day;
Immortal hope dispels the gloom—
An angel sits beside the tomb!

John Wesley.

It is estimated that twelve million of the human race are taught weekly the lesson of religious experience wrought out in the active intellect of John Wesley; that no part of the known world has been unvisited by his disciples; that the tide of reform set in motion by his pure and lofty energy is still in the ascendant, is moving onward with ceaseless vigor, and shows no traces of decay. Wherever the Anglo-Saxon race penetrates, it is pursued and softened by the influence of its unassuming saint. In Australia and South Africa, in America and in the islands of the Pacific, the genius of Wesley is ever active. His schools and churches have belted the world with an illustrious chain. His writings have been translated into nearly all the languages of Europe, and are made familiar to the worshipers of Burmah and of Buddha. Since Luther no other man has exercised so wide, so benign an influence upon his race. Nor is it unjust to assert that but for his English successor the reformation of the German teacher would have lost much of its effectiveness, and might have sunk into an empty formalism, at least in England, amidst the corrupting alliance of Church and State. It was the aim of Wesley to withdraw religion from the control of the great and the powerful, of statesmen or of bishops, to make it the light and the solace of the workshop and the cottage, almshouse and jail; to diffuse its sacred teachings among the people, and preach, with saintly earnestness, the gospel of the poor.

As contrasted with all other successful teachers of a faith, whether true or false, it is a striking trait of Wesley's triumph that he was never aided by the civil power; that his disciples have never wielded the sword of persecution or gained any victories but those of peace. History, indeed, has no record of any other great religious movement, except the founding of Christianity, that was not perfected in violence and sealed with the blood of its opponents. The Greek Church was planted in Russia by the civil power; the Romish Church won its supremacy by bitter wars and endless cruelties; Bernard and Dominic enforced their teachings by the sword; Luther and Calvin were often sustained by the arms of their adherents; the dark and widespread brotherhood of Loyola obtained its ascendency by arousing in every land the fiercest flames of religious persecution. But of the millions of devout believers who have lived and died in the simple faith of Wesley, not one has yielded to any sterner influence than the power of divine love. As the vast wave of reform has swelled from the poor cottage at Epworth over England and America, over the Pacific and the Indian seas, it has never needed a Constantine or a royal protector—has been governed in its holy victories by no human hand.

The Good Work.

The Galveston Christian Advocate of April 15 says:

The good work in this city still continues to move on. On last Sunday there was service at the different churches in the morning, and a mass meeting at night at St. John's church. Over one hundred and fifty up to that time had united with the three branches of the church engaged in the work. This, however, does not indicate the actual good accomplished. No special effort has been made to induce parties to unite with any of the churches, and a large number of those who have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth are examining for themselves ere they decide so important a step. The grand aim of all engaged in this revival has been to arouse the people to a sense of their spiritual necessities, and lead them to a saving knowledge of Christ.

Were the benefits of the meeting confined to the membership of the different churches alone, each one would have cause to rejoice. There has been added a freshness to the zeal of the membership, a depth to their devotions, a warmth to the Christian affection between the churches, and between the members of each church, which will leave an impress on the activities of all denominations here for many years to come.

On Sunday night St. John's church was crowded, and the feeling was deep and general. On Monday night there was a manifest increase of feeling, and from every token a still greater work will yet be accomplished. The morning meeting at St. James, on Tuesday, was a season all present will long remember.

DR. TISCHENDORF has brought out another "editio minor" of his Greek Testament. It contains brief Latin Prolegomena, expounding his canons of criticisms, his views on the New Testament dialect, and the history of the printed text, followed by a short account of the manuscripts and other critical helps. The text is that of his "editio octava major." At the foot of each page there is a collation of the "received text," and of the two codices.

LEARN the value of man's words and expressions, and you know him. Each man has a measure of his own for everything; this he offers you inadvertently in his words. He who has a superlative for everything wants a measure for the great or small.—Lavater.

Books and Periodicals.

A CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF EXODUS. With a New Translation. By James G. Murphy, LL. D., T. C. D. Boston: Estes & Lauriat, 1874. We have read Murphy's Commentary on Genesis with much interest. In many respects we regard it as the best. The author's Commentary on Exodus exhibits the same clear and discriminating judgment, good sense and scholarship which are found in the former work. It is well adapted to all classes of readers, and should be in the hands of all Bible readers and students.

OUR Nashville Sunday school publications for May are to hand in good time. The editor has a timely and strong article in the Magazine on the subject of union Sunday schools. Here is a paragraph:

"We do not hesitate to say we are very much opposed to union Sunday schools. This is not bigotry. We say to our Baptist brethren, whom we truly love in the Lord, and with whom we will eat joyfully at the Lord's table whenever they will let us: Have your Baptist Sunday schools, and teach what you believe to be the truth of God. So to our Presbyterian and other brethren: With all earnestness teach what you believe to be the truth. Watered milk is not good; it is not nourishing, and it tends to acidification. And watered doctrine is not good. Above all, do not give it to 'babes'—watered milk is particularly bad for them. And for our part we will not do it. We belong to the Methodist Church because we believe her doctrines and love her discipline. We intend to teach both, and never will go into any arrangements which will close our mouth."

THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW, April, 1874, has been received. Contents: New York State Schools; Tischendorf's New Testament; Fine Art—its Nature, Necessity and Offices; The New York Riot of 1863; The Old Faith and the New; Theories of Life. In the editorial department we have, as usual, the most valuable part of the Review, as follows: Synopsis of the Quarterlies; Foreign Religious Intelligence; Foreign Literary Intelligence; Quarterly Book Table.

WE ARE indebted to Mr. William G. Brown, State superintendent of public education, for a copy of his report to the General Assembly of Louisiana for the year 1873.

BRAINARD'S MUSICAL WORLD for April has been received.

WE ARE pleased to learn that our young friend, Rev. H. Walter Featherstun, of Brookhaven station, Mississippi Conference, was married on March 25 to Miss Emmie E. White, of Vicksburg. The nuptials were solemnized at the Crawford Street church, Vicksburg, by Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D. The happy couple have our best wishes for their prosperity and wedded bliss.

THE SANTA ROSA COLLEGIAN is a small but very comely and sprightly sheet, issued at the Pacific Methodist College, Santa Rosa, California. Three young ladies and three young gentlemen, students of the college, constitute the staff editorial. We wish long life and great prosperity to the Collegian.

REV. DR. E. N. KIRK died suddenly of apoplexy, at his residence in Boston, March 27, in the seventy-second year of his age. He was born in New York in 1802, graduated at Princeton in 1820, studied law for a year and a half, and then entered the Princeton Theological Seminary. His labors as a pastor were commenced at Albany, where he remained until 1837. Going abroad for his health, he was appointed secretary of the Foreign Evangelical Society. He was called subsequently to the pulpit of the Park Street church, Boston, which he declined; but in 1842 he accepted the pastorate of the newly-organized Mount Vernon Congregational church in that city. There he remained until his health compelled him to retire from active duty, his ministry in Boston covering a period of nearly twenty-five years. In 1856-7 Dr. Kirk again visited Paris for the American and Foreign Christian Union, for the purpose of establishing American Protestant worship in the French metropolis, where he was highly successful.

DEAN STANLEY read the burial service and pronounced the benediction at the obsequies of the late Rev. Thomas Binney, after a dissenting minister had preached the sermon. "And so it came to pass," says the London Standard, "that the last rite was performed over the large-hearted Dissenter by a Churchman as large-hearted as himself." What will High Churchmen in America say when the dignitaries of the Church of England do such things in the high places of the church?

A LATE British review, speaking of a sermon from a young curate, says: "The sermon was one of those lithographed compositions supplied to the clergy at ten shillings and six pence per dozen. In country parishes these form the chief part of the teaching the clergy give their hearers, and the use of them is rapidly destroying what little life and reality there is in the pulpits of the establishment."

THE press threatens to become a power in Constantinople. The first part of a comic journal, Le Polichinelle, appeared on the twenty-first of February. It is to be published twice a week in French, Greek, Turkish, Armenian and Bulgarian.

IT APPEARS that the late riots at Bombay were owing to the publication by a Parsee of a Guzerate version of Washington Irving's "Life of Mohammed," in which there is a reference to the prophet's domestic relations.

Manufactured Dwarfs.

The business of manufacturing dwarfs by mutilating children, unhappily, was at one time followed as a profession by a body of villains who had reduced it to a system. In the preliminary chapters of "L'Homme Qui Rit" Victor Hugo gives an account of the operations of these persons, which is full of painful interest. They called themselves "Comprachicos," and they labored to supply the demand which existed a couple of centuries ago in almost every European country for dwarfs and distorted human beings for the royal palaces and for the homes of the wealthy nobility. The king must have his misshapen jester, the fine lady her fantastic page or footman, the nobleman his hunchback lackey, and even the sultan his grotesque buffoon for the seraglio. The demand was far greater than the supply afforded by the freaks of nature, and the Comprachicos undertook to make good the deficiency. They fabricated monsters upon a large scale. The headquarters of this infamous fraternity were in England, but its ranks were recruited from all countries and its operations were extended to other countries. The organization had its origin, we believe, in Spain.

The Comprachicos procured children for their purpose in various ways. Sometimes there was an heir to an estate who was in the way of somebody, and he would be sold into the hands of the order to be mutilated beyond recognition. Sometimes pauper and orphan children would be disposed of by relatives who did not wish to take care of them; and often, again, when the raw material was not offered in sufficient quantities, the Comprachicos would kidnap children for their purposes. Once in their hands, there was no possibility that a child could be rescued without mutilation. Taken when very young, they were, as Victor Hugo expressed it, "touched up so that their parents would not recognize them." Sometimes the Comprachicos would operate on the spine in such a way that the child would have a humped back; or they would leave the dorsal column straight and alter the countenance. They would cut the muscles so that the little one would wear a perpetual and diabolical grin, or would have its face set permanently in some fantastic shape. By a peculiar process the growth of another would be stunted so that the child would be a dwarf, while in other cases the joints and muscles of the limbs would be so treated that they would acquire unnatural suppleness. These patients would be sold to showmen, who trained them as gymnasts. Sometimes also the throat would be manipulated for the purpose of giving the child peculiar vocal powers. Charles the Second had a being thus mutilated, whose office it was to move around the palace at night, signaling the hours by crowing like a cock. A certain Dr. Conquest, of London, wrote a volume upon this kind of surgery, in which he describes the processes, as if they had a rightful place among the practices of science.

The Comprachicos were suppressed by statute under William and Mary. Their counterparts are said, however, to exist at this day in China. The Chinese operators take a child of two or three years old and put it in a porcelain vase of some odd shape, but without lid or bottom, so that the head and feet are exposed. In the day-time the vase is kept upright; at night it is laid upon its side, so that the child may sleep. Thus the child grows, filling up the spaces in the vase with its compressed flesh and twisted bones. This growth in the bottle lasts for several years. At a given period it is without remedy. When the mold has taken and the monster is made, they break the vase, and the child comes out of it.—To-Day.

WHITE COAL.—Notwithstanding the antiquity of many proverbs dating back to prehistoric times and their reception as figurative axioms, day by day they become exploded through deeper investigations or fuller knowledge. "As black as a coal" is not so venerable as some of the current coin of the intellect, but that, too, must go the way of many others. Our antipodes, that fragment of the most ancient of existent continents, that land of paradoxes, which would not allow the poor school boy his pet phrase of Rara avis in terris, nigroque simillima cygno, but must fain turn out a black swan, make animals with birds' beaks (Ornithorkyacchus paradoxes,) and put stones of cherries outside of fruit, has just revealed a new mineral—a white coal—which is fibrous, easily combustible, and burns with a light flame and no smoke. Nor is the mineral rare; large districts are covered with it, and it lies on or very near the surface. The coal is a species of lignite, and the color is most likely due to the absence of bitumen. What a boon this coal would be near London, not only on the score of making our fogs less dense, but for the sake of our public buildings.—London Iron Magazine.

A NEW IDEA, just announced, is that of districting, territorially, the entire American continent as a parish for the American branch of the World's Evangelical Alliance, and prepare and send from all the evangelical churches of our land appropriate agencies for evangelizing all its people, and to follow up these efforts by the establishment of apostolic churches. We are too closely located, it is said, now beside Mexico and the States of the Isthmus to be permitted to live careless whether they are inhabited by savages or Christians. And we are too infallibly predestinated to govern the whole of this continent, from Cape Horn to Alaska, to become indifferent to the progress of civilization (which is only another name for material Christianity) among the people of South America.

HE WHO thinks too much of himself will be in danger of being forgotten by the rest of the world.

Old-New Things.

A tract society! and that in Vicksburg, so far away from Nashville. Is there another society of the kind in the Southern Conferences? Why not? And is this not a period in the progress of religious inquiries, revivals and needful endeavors to reconstruct the old system, and spread tracts, like leaves from the tree of life, over all our territories? Eternity alone can tell the sum of good that has been done by the distribution of these simple, touching and instructive messengers of truth.

Our own Publishing House cannot supply the variety and numbers that may be needed; but a careful hand can select from the lists of the American Tract Society any number of the most excellent and unobjectionable sheets and pamphlets.

The following shows the organization of the Vicksburg society:

The Methodist Episcopal Church South has organized a tract society, with the following directors: R. D. Howe, H. H. Shawver, James R. Shobe, N. Y. Lane, Joseph Genella, Dr. H. Shannon, Dr. C. K. Marshall, S. P. DuShane, W. H. Nelson, J. E. Gibbs, J. A. Peale and G. W. Rogers.

The board of directors then elected the following officers to serve for one year, to wit:

President—Dr. C. K. Marshall.
Vice president—S. P. DuShane.
Secretary—W. H. Nelson.
Corresponding secretary—J. E. Gibbs.
Treasurer—J. A. Peale.

The object of the society is to distribute tracts setting forth the doctrines of Christianity as held by Protestant denominations.

Franklin as a Book-Seller.

The following story, told of Franklin's mode of treating the "lounger," is worth putting into practice occasionally, even in this age and generation:

One fine morning, when Franklin was busy preparing his newspaper for the press, a lounger stepped into the store, and spent an hour or more looking at the books, etc., and, finally taking one in his hand, asked the shop-boy the price.

"One dollar," was the answer.

"One dollar," said the lounger; "can't you take less than that?"

"No, indeed; one dollar is the price."

Another hour had nearly passed when the lounger asked:

"Is Mr. Franklin at home?"

"Yes; he is in the printing office."

"I want to see him," said the lounger.

The shop-boy immediately informed Mr. Franklin that a gentleman was in the store waiting to see him. Franklin was soon behind the counter, when the lounger, with book in hand, addressed him thus:

"Mr. Franklin, what is the lowest you can take for this book?"

"One dollar and a quarter," was the ready answer.

"One dollar and a quarter! Why your young man asked only a dollar."

"True," said Franklin, "and I could have better afforded to take a dollar then than to have been taken out of the office."

The lounger seemed surprised, and, wishing to end the parley of his own making, said:

"Come, Mr. Franklin, tell me what is the lowest you can take for it."

"One dollar and a half."

"One dollar and a half! Why you offered it yourself for a dollar and a quarter."

"Yes," said Franklin, "and I had better have taken that price then than a dollar and a half now."

The lounger paid down the price and went about his business—if he had any—and Franklin returned into the printing office.—Children's Prize.

THE Pall Mall Budget, in commenting on the liquor crusade in Scotland, says:

The Scottish League, described as the "oldest temperance organization in Scotland," and therefore no doubt the wisest, has commenced a crusade against the sale of intoxicating liquors at railway stations. A deputation waited on the directors of the Caledonian railway, at the central offices in Glasgow, on Tuesday, and presented a memorial praying for the prohibition of the sale of strong drink in refreshment-rooms at the stations on the Caledonian system. It was urged that, although the measure proposed might be an immediate pecuniary loss, it would ultimately be a gain by lessening the amount paid as compensation for accidents. At first sight it is not easy to understand how "railway casualties" can be caused by the sale of a few glasses of sherry, or even brandy and water, to passengers in the brief interval allowed them at the stations where the trains stop for what is termed "refreshment;" but it was explained by the deputation that many of the delays and accidents on railways, which excited so much attention before we became accustomed to them, are occasioned by the railway servants getting drunk at the wayside stations. This is very horrible, if true, and no regulations can be too strict to prevent the hitherto unknown cause of danger revealed by the deputation, but it seems rather hard on the passengers, many of whom suffer severely from cold at some seasons of the year, owing to the absence of any proper means for warming the railway carriages, that they should be denied all stimulants, however harmless or necessary, because the employes of the line cannot resist the temptation of getting drunk at the stations. The deputation was, however, informed that the arguments it submitted were "admirable," and therefore it seems not improbable that the last moments of railway passengers will at no distant day be, at all events, cheered by total abstinence.

MEDITATION is the life of the soul; action is the soul of meditation; honor is the reward of action. So meditate that thou mayest do; so do that thou mayest purchase honor; for which purchase give God the glory.—Quarles.

THE DARLING SIN.—I have read of a monarch that, being pursued by an enemy, threw away the crown of gold on his head, that he might run the faster; so that sin, which thou didst wear as a crown of gold, throw it away, that thou mayst run the faster to the kingdom of heaven. O, if you would not lose glory, mortify the beloved sin, set it, as Uriah, in the forefront of the battle to be slain; by plucking out this right eye you shall see the better to go to heaven.

HEAVEN alone means crowned, not vanquished, when it says forgiven.—Proctor.

MARRIED.

ELLIS—LOWRY.—At the Methodist church in Brandon, Mississippi, April 8, 1874, by Rev. W. H. Leith, Dr. J. W. Ellis, of Issaquena county, to Miss Ada Mayers Lowry, fourth daughter of General Robert Lowry, of Brandon.

BUSH—LONGSTREET.—April 15, 1874, by Rev. E. E. Hamilton, at the residence of the bride's father, W. D. Longstreet, Esq., Mr. E. T. Bush and Miss Mollie D. Longstreet, all of Noxubee county, Mississippi.

FEATHERSTON—DISMUKES.—At the residence of the bride's father, E. Dismukes, Esq., in Macon, Mississippi, April 8, 1874, by Rev. E. E. Hamilton, Dr. J. S. Featherston and Miss Emma Dismukes.

SMITH—LAMAR.—By Rev. W. A. Montgomery, at the residence of Mr. James Nunn, in Antangaville, Alabama, April 15, 1874, Mr. James B. Smith and Miss Mary E. Lamar.

JACKSON—JORDAN.—On the second of April, 1874, at Pleasant Hill, Louisiana, by Rev. Jannes E. Bradley, Mr. Thomas J. Jackson and Miss Jennie Jordan.

BAUER—THEAUSTER.—By the same, at the same place, March 31, 1874, Mr. B. S. Bauer and Miss Mary Theauster.

MOBILE LINE.—We are pleased to learn that the New Orleans and Mobile railroad, with its connections East and North, has suffered no interruption on account of the recent high water. This is one of the finest roads we have ever seen, and by referring to their schedule it will be seen that Pullman palace sleepers run through by this route with but one change to Eastern cities. By a recent change in the schedule the through palace cars for St. Louis go by the eight A. M. train, and those for Louisville and Charlotte go by the four P. M. train.

TO THE CONSUMERS OF GAS.—Messrs. Pratt & Co., 169 Common street, invite the consumers of gas to call and examine the merits of the American Carburetter Gas Machine, which they will furnish to parties in the city or country for lighting dwellings, sugar-houses or churches. State and county rights for sale. See advertisement elsewhere. They assure a saving of forty per cent. of the cost of using ordinary gas.

CISTERNS.—We commend the advertisement of our neighbor, Matthew Henrick, corner of Franklin and Erato streets, to all who want to obtain good cisterns. Mr. Henrick keeps cisterns on hand and makes them to order. Good timber, good workmanship and reasonable prices are the inducements held out to customers.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—We call the special attention of our readers residing in the vicinity of No. 429 Dryades street, between Melpomene and Terpsichore, or anywhere in reach of it, to call and see the stock of beautiful shoes and boots, for ladies, gentlemen and children, in the establishment of Mr. James Simpson.

WE CALL attention to the card of Dr. H. Neeson, whose office is at No. 182 St. Charles street. The doctor claims to make a permanent cure of hernia, and will furnish references to sufferers engaging his professional services.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunderhumor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most eminent druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I don't with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your baba from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of it extends in the stomach, causing

Canker

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and as indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is

Raw and Inflamed,

your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly, mh14 1y DONALD KENNEDY.

Price, $1.00 per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE BEST ADVICE THAT CAN BE given to persons suffering from

DYSPEPSIA, BILIOUS COMPLAINTS,

CONSTIPATION, COLIC, SICK HEADACHE,

Fever and Ague, Nervous Debility,

or of any disorder of the Stomach, Liver or Kidneys, is to tone, cleanse and regulate them by the use of

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills.

They act very mildly, yet thoroughly restore the functional action of the Digestive Organs and the Intestines, and renovate the whole system, imparting a good appetite and healthy assimilation of food. They produce neither Nausea, Griping nor Debility, and may be taken at any time, without change of diet or occupation.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye

possesses qualities that no other dye does. Its effect is instantaneous, and is so natural that it cannot be detected by the closest observer. Being harmless and easily applied, it is in general use among the fashionable Hair-Dressers in every large city in the United States. Price, $1 a box Sold everywhere.

SWEEPING THE FLOOR.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

Sweep and sweep and sweep the floor;
Sweep the dust, pick up the pin;
Make it clean from fire to door,
Clean for father to come in.

Mother said that God goes sweeping—
Looking, sweeping, with a broom,
All the time that we are sleeping,
For a shilling in a room.

Did he drop it out of glory,
Walking far above the birds?
Or did mother make the story
To set me thinking afterwards?

If I was the swept for shilling
I would hearken through the gloom,
Roll out fast, and fall down willing,
Right before the sweeping broom.

Good Things.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

May-Day.

It was a calm, beautiful night in the sweet month of April. Spring had not loitered this season in its coming, for birds, bees and flowers were all happy in the warm sunlight, and children, too, had breathed the sweet fragrance of rose and jessamine. To-night a Sabbath-school band had assembled to hear the plan for their May-day entertainment. Yes, their kind superintendent and teachers had promised that they should be as gay as the birds on the advent of lovely May. Many little hearts were beating while their listening ears heard of the wonderful things to be done.

There were to be great white banners with letters of gold. Flowers should adorn everything. Then the little folks should be dressed in snowy robes, with an abundance of gay ribbons floating out from their tiny waists. They were to march behind the gay music of cornet and cymbals, hear nice speeches, sing their pretty songs, and when they were all over they should partake of the sumptuous meal spread for them beneath the shady oaks. Oh, what a merry time they would have! How they would all rejoice!

While so many bright little girls and happy boys were looking upon the pictured scenes of their May-day festival with so much pride and pleasure, there sat one among them who seemed so quiet. It was little Ellen Davis. She loved to go to Sabbath school, and none in the school was more punctual and persevering; but she knew that none of the gay adornings of which they spoke should be gathered around her little body that day; so, notwithstanding her best efforts to the contrary, she felt sad. Her mother was poor, and she was the eldest of five children; so she had learned to be very thankful if she could have the plainest clothing.

"Ellen," said Mrs. Davis, a few days before the festival occurred, "do you wish to go?"

"Mamma, I would like to go, but I do not know whether to think of doing so or not."

Her mother would not ask her why. She knew that her noble little girl would not tell her that it was because she knew that she had nothing suitable to wear, and she really had no inclination to encourage her to think of going, although she knew she would enjoy it.

"Suppose you get out your white dress, and let me see if I can fix it any way," said her mother.

The dress was brought out and Ellen put it on, but her mother turned it about in vain, trying to find some hidden seam that her ingenious fingers could let out. But no; that hero after must be the treasure of some smaller member of the family, for Ellen had certainly grown too large for it. When she saw that there was no hope she said:

"Well, mamma, how do you think it would do for me to go and wear my new calico. I reckon all the children will be dressed in white, but I can slip along among them, hear the music and singing, and see how pretty and happy they all look."

"Yes," said her mother, "you may go and wear it, if you choose. Try not to feel bad, if you are the only one there who is not in white. Act so nicely that you will appear well, if not dressed so well as others."

She went. Her dress, though simple in material, fitted her neatly, and was made up tastefully. Then her mother had pulled, brushed and pressed her old hat until it looked much better, and she felt quite satisfied with her appearance when she left home. But when she reached the place where the procession was to form, and saw so many beautiful dresses, and soft white hats, with whiter, brighter faces beneath them, it must be acknowledged that she felt some misgivings that she could not cast aside. While she was thinking of the difference in apparel she heard some remarks, which perchance were not intended for her ears.

"Wouldn't you have stayed at home, if you were Ellen Davis, unless you had something better to wear than what she has on?"

"Yes, indeed, I would. She spoils the looks of the whole procession. She is the only one here who has not a white dress."

"Oh! girls, don't," chimed in the sweet voice of little Bessie Lee, "I reckon she did not have a white dress. I love to see colored flowers. I get tired of all white ones. Ellen will just look like a pretty red rose in a white bouquet."

"How nicely you can fix anything up. Of course you will think that she or any one else looks well. You are not very particular about how everything looks."

Ellen heard it all. She tried to think only of Bessie's sweet words of kindness, and let the bitter sting of the others pass; but it was in vain. Mingling with them she would hear: "She will spoil the looks of the whole procession."

She felt her lip quiver and the hot tears on her burning cheek. Poor little girl! she could not bear to mar another's pleasure, and she crept slowly away to seek a word of comfort from her mother, who, she knew, would not frown upon her. "Yes," thought she, "I will leave them to enjoy this happy day. I reckon it was wrong in me to wish so much to come."

When she reached home the tears were falling fast, and she threw herself in her mother's arms and told her all. The loving mother strove to comfort her, but she could not drive back her own tears.

When Ellen's cry was over she felt so much relieved that she was soon cheerful in making her little brothers and sisters happy, and in helping her mother.

Late in the evening there was a little hand knocking at Mrs. Davis' door, and on going to answer the call Ellen met her friend Bessie Lee.

"Here, Ellen," she said, "I am so sorry you did not stay; but you shall not lose your dinner," and she handed her a basket which a servant carried. "I will send for the basket," and with a "good-by" her sweet face vanished. The basket was covered with beautiful flowers, but when Ellen's mother took them off, and the snowy napkin beneath them, her heart was too full to speak as she saw the sparkling pairs of eyes that peeped in upon the many delicacies within. They were all happy in feeling that they were not forgotten; but the happiest one was little Ellen, for she felt that, though such sorrow had been hers in the morning, joy had come now, for, had she seen everything, the birdies in the home-nest would not have enjoyed it with her.

Little children, when your bright May-day garlands are woven, and you are happy in the joyous light and warmth of spring-time, should there come one among you in poverty's garb, do not cast words of reproach upon them. Such things have blighted many a pure aspiration, and covered many a warm heart with an icy vail, that in time grew too stubborn to be penetrated even by kindness.

Farm, Garden and Household.

PRESERVING MILK.—The American Artisan gives the process of Mr. Lewis F. Kirchofer for preserving milk without alteration, except the rising of cream, whether it be kept at rest or in motion, as at sea. The unadulterated milk, fresh drawn from the cow, is placed in perfectly clean cans or bottles, which are filled as nearly full as possible and hermetically sealed. These cans are then placed in water, of the same temperature as the milk, in such a manner as to allow a free circulation of water beneath and around, but not over them. The temperature of this water is then slowly raised to between one hundred and sixty and one hundred and seventy degrees Fahrenheit, and kept there for varying lengths of time—one hour preserving the milk four or five weeks, and five hours eight or twelve months. The heat is then withdrawn, and the water allowed to cool slowly. If the temperature exceeds one hundred and seventy degrees the milk acquires a cooked taste. We hope this process may be a success, for, if the milk undergoes no change, in many cases it would be preferable to the condensed milk.

THE KERRY COW.—They have been imported in small numbers, particularly in Massachusetts. They are mostly black, some brown or brindled; they are small and very hardy, but neat and trim-looking; almost wild, living in the roughest country on the slimmest sort of pasture, which it crops with the goat. They are emphatically the poor man's cow, yielding for her size an abundance of milk of a good quality, and fattening rapidly when required. Good yielders, as they are, we think their size and price will prevent them from making much progress in this country.

QUINCE ON THE THORN.—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says the quince does admirably upon the white thorn, either by budding or grafting. So propagated, the grub, which works upon the root of the quince, is avoided. The tree is somewhat dwarfed thus worked, comes into bearing sooner than upon its own roots, and a crop almost a sure thing annually.

CLOVER has the singular property of being able to extract from the atmosphere, without the aid of manure or stimulants, nitrogen sufficient for its own proper growth and nourishment. The straw and roots of clover contain a large amount of nitrogen, and these, when plowed down, are therefore as valuable to the next crop sown as a copious supply of guano.

THERE are 61,000 Catholics in the city of Buffalo.

A WRONG CUSTOM CORRECTED.

It is quite generally the custom to take strong liver stimulants for the cure of liver complaint, and both the mineral and vegetable kingdoms have been diligently searched to procure the most drastic and poisonous purgatives, in order to produce a powerful effect upon the liver, and arouse the lagging and enfeebled organ. This system of treatment is on the same principle as that of giving a weak and debilitated man large potions of brandy to enable him to do a certain amount of work. When the stimulant is withheld the organ, like the system, gradually relapses into a more torpid or sluggish and weakened condition than before. What, then, is wanted? Medicines that, while they cause the bile to flow freely from the liver, as that organ is toned into action, will not overwork and thus debilitate it, but will, when their use is discontinued, leave the liver strengthened and healthy.

WORKS WONDERS.

BERGEN, GENESEE CO., N. Y., March 24, 1871.

DR. R. V. PIERCE—Dear Sir: Your treatment in my case has been quite successful and satisfactory, and for which I desire to express my gratitude. I have been troubled with a disordered Liver and Catarrh and general weakness for a good many years, and was failing slowly all the time, and last August I called on you and got some of your Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and one of your Nasal Injectors, and since that time I have been improving, and am now better than I have been in years, not having had the sick headache in months, which I used to have to average once a week, the Golden Medical Discovery being the principal medicine used. It has worked wonders in my case, and I recommend it to those similarly afflicted. Let me express gratitude to you for such invaluable services.

Truly and gratefully yours,
WM. F. CRITTENDEN.

MONOCHROMATIC PICTURES.

These Pictures, for beauty, durability and cheapness, take the lead of all other photographic inventions. Chemists and Photographers have vainly tried to introduce them in perfected form, and it is but recently that they were presented in New Orleans by Mr. H. BUSCH, of California, in such perfection of finish as to defy the criticism of connoisseurs in the Fine Arts.

Having secured the services of the above-named gentleman, I beg to announce to the public that I am now prepared to produce by this new discovery counterfeit presentments which, for fidelity to the original, will rival the touch of the great masters of art.

My prices are, for life size, $10; for life-size bust, $5; cabinet, $4; enlarging from card or small-sized tin-type into, with 8x10 frame complete, $3. Enameled cards and work in the latest styles also executed. Those wishing Pictures can send negatives.

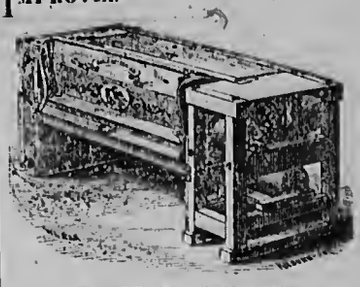
IMPROVED



EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse-power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.
